BOOKS.

A Journal of Two Years' Travel in Persia, Ceylon, &c. By ROBERT B. M. BINNING, Esq., Madras C. S. Two Vols. 8vo. W. H. Allen and Co., 7, Leadenhall Street. 1857.

THIS is a work at once instructive and entertaining. To an agreeable and unaffected style the author adds much sound sense, and a deep store of varied and valuable information. Recent events, moreover, invest the book with an additional interest, and the reader who is desirous of obtaining an insight into the institutions of Persia and the character of its population, will derive from the perusal of these volumes no inconsiderable degree of familiarity with the objects of his inquiry. Mr. Binning having obtained two years' leave of absence from duty, proceeded in the first instance to Ceylon, of which he gives a brief sketch, comprising an account of the physical characteristics of the island, together with its political circumstances and the social condition of the people. Speaking of the latter, he says:—

"Regarding the character of the natives of Ceylon, I am unable to give any distinct account, as my residence on the island has been too short to admit of my observing much about them: and being, besides, ignorant of the language, I was unable to hold intercourse with the generality of the people. As far as I can judge from what I have seen myself, and heard from others better acquainted with them, I should say they were a good-humoured, trifling, childish set; indifferent to improvement; and detesting all labour, mental as well as bodily. In some respects, they seem to be superior, and in others inferior, to the natives of India. They are gifted with a happy temper, and a flow of good-humour and cheerfulness, which the Hindoo certainly does not possess: but they have not the powers of application, and steady industry, which the latter has, and which enable the Indian emigrant to beat the Cingalese on his own ground. In point of a sad want of moral principal, a proneness to trickery and intrigue, and a habit of false-speaking, whether with or without any object in view, the Cingalese and Hindoos appear to be pretty much on a par."

From Ceylon our author sailed for Bombay, where he availed himself of the opportunity of witnessing the remains of ancient grandeur on the western side of India by visiting the caves of Elephanta and Kanery. His sojourn here, however, was brief. An intimate acquaintance with the language and literature of Persia had inspired him with a long-cherished desire of travelling through the land of nightingales and poets, and speedily led to his undertaking the tour of which his book gives so interesting an account. Mr. Binning is no copyist. His impressions are obviously drawn from real life, and as his notes were all written on the spot while these were fresh in his mind, each place he visited, and the various scenes he witnessed, are described with graphic effect. The following account of the ancient capital of Persia can scarcely excite a regret in the breast of the young soldier that its contents have not been made the prize of the Anglo-Indian army now assembled at Bushire:—

"Isfahan is a very extensive, straggling place, presenting a scene of a heterogeneous jumble of thickly-peopled bazaars—whole streets of ruins—gardens and plantations—barren and desolate spots—few notable buildings in a perfect state, but many in ruins—domed mosques, tall minarets, and vaulted market-places—extending over a great part of a sandy plain bounded by bare, arid mountains."

This description of the ancient capital is a type of everything connected with the country. Persian rulers, Persian officials, Persian society; all are corrupt and degenerate. "The spectacle of Persia," Mr. Binning says, "is certainly not a pleasing one—a poor and weak nation, sinking into apparently hopeless wretchedness—a people who, properly guided and governed, would be a fine and noble race, demoralized and vicious to the very core—corruption and insecurity in every department—dissolution and rottenness everywhere prevailing. The Persian seems to be destitute of a conscience. Truth and honesty are qualities, in his estimation, only fit to be held and exercised by fools and madmen. He has no feeling of the force of moral obligations or sense of shame and disgrace, and is callous to every generous impulse." "At present," he adds, "there is no hope for Persia, save a total change, subverting every existing institution of the country and people. Nothing short of an alteration so complete and radical can be attended with any substantial benefit; for in the present state of the nation real improvement is utterly hopeless." How such a change is to be wrought, it will be for future generations to witness.

Besides furnishing the results of his own personal observation, Mr. Binning gives a sketch of Persian history, which renders his work more complete.

BROKER—J. S. Walker, Esq., 25, Austinfriars.
SECRETARY—John Mathewson.
Office—9, Billiter Street, London.

This Company rests its claims to public support on two plain considerations—1st, that the steam companies already navigating the rivers of India are realizing large profits; and 2nd, that the vessels of this Company will, by the aid of improvements to which it has the exclusive right, be able to carry three or four times the quantity of cargo that can be carried by the vessels at present employed. Cheap conveyance is necessary to India to enable the produce of the interior to reach the coast. Of all known means of conveyance, the cheapest is conveyance by water; and railways, even when made, cannot supersede the necessity of navigating the great rivers which will still remain the great arteries of commerce, as has been found to be the case in America, and where experience has shown that railways and river conveyance assist instead of opposing one another. The rivers of India are of vast extent—they flow through the richest parts of the country—and they only require that vessels should be established upon them which shall be capable of carrying a large cargo on a light draught of water to insure results more remunerative than is usual in commercial undertakings.

The calls will not exceed £2 per share every three months, and interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum will be allowed on all calls during construction, and also on shares paid in advance.

Prospectuses and forms of application for shares may be obtained from J. S. Walker, Esq., 25, Austinfriars, or from the Secretary at the offices of the Company, 9, Billiter Street, London; but no application will be considered unless accompanied by the receipt of Messrs. Williams, Deacon, and Co. for 10s. per share on the number of shares applied for. This deposit will be returned in the event of the application not being accepted to.

By order of the Board,

THACKER'S OVERLAND NEWS,
FOR INDIA AND THE COLONIES.

THE First Number of the Overland Newspaper, which is to supersede the CIRCULAR hitherto forwarded to India by Messrs. W. THACKER and CO., was published and will be continued upon the day of the departure of each succeeding Overland Mail.

ON THE 10TH OF JANUARY, 1857,

In entering upon the field of competition with established Journals having the same object in view, it will be required of Messrs. W. THACKER and Co. that they should explain on what peculiar ground they lay claim to public support.

Their long and intimate connection with the Anglo-Indian community entitles them to believe that every confidence will be placed in their assurance, that they will endeavour to deserve the preference they seek to obtain; but they are aware, that even amongst their oldest and warmest friends, some practical demonstration of an intention to achieve superiority is expected.

Messrs. W. THACKER and Co. beg, therefore, to state that in their OVERLAND NEWS they propose to aim at a more perfect CONDENSATION of General News than has hitherto been attempted, that they may be enabled to devote a greater portion of their space to COMMERCIAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

The peculiar constitution of British Society in India, and the immense impulse that has been given of late years to Railway Speculation, Agricultural Improvement, and Commercial Enterprise in that vast Empire, suggest the importance of a close attention to all these matters, which bear particularly on the interests of the great classes concerned.

From several channels of information, hitherto closed or neglected, the fullest details will therefore be sought.

LITERATURE in all its branches, as bearing essentially on the experience of Messrs. W. THACKER and Co., will receive, as hitherto, the minutest care; and as they have been able to secure the services of a gentleman who moves much in literary circles, occasional items of pleasant gossip, which do not find their way into the public journals, will embellish the pages of the OVERLAND NEWS.

Upon all subjects connected with Indian politics, the interests of the Services, contemplated Local Changes, the arrival in and departure from this country of Passengers, by Ship or Steamer, the retirement of Officers of all classes, &c., the greatest attention will be bestowed; while the intelligence from Europe, of a general nature, will be presented in a striking form, accompanied by such Commentaries as may be expected from the pen of an experienced Journalist.

In a word, Messrs. W. THACKER and Co. hope that their Paper will be all that the best papers have hitherto been—AND SOMETHING MORE.

The Publication will be of the same size as the ordinary English Overland Papers, viz., a folio of Twenty-four pages, with Supplements when necessary, and it will be issued in time for transmission to India by each Fortnightly Mail, via Marseilles. The Price, inclusive of postage, will be Rs. 8 per annum, payable in advance. Orders to be addressed to Messrs. W. THACKER and Co., 87, Newgate Street, London; Messrs. THACKER, SPINK, and Co., St. Andrew's Library, Calcutta; Messrs. THACKER and Co., St. Andrew's Library, Bombay; and Mr. JAMES HILL, Lucknow.

TO LATE RESIDENTS IN INDIA.—TRUE MADRAS CURRY, and MULLIGATAWNEY PASTE and CHUTNIES.—Messrs. BARRIE and Co., Vepery, Madras, to enable their old correspondents returning from India to continue the use of the celebrated Condiments, have made arrangements to forward regular supplies of the above, packed in glass jars for family use, at 1s. 9d. and upwards, which may be had of CROSSE and BLACKWELL, Purveyors to Her Majesty, 21, Soho Square; FORTNUM, MASON, and Co., Piccadilly; and of the principal Sauce and Vendors throughout the kingdom. Each bottle is labelled, and BARRIE and Co., Madras, stamped on the glass.

THE successful results of the last half century have proved beyond question that ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL possesses peculiarly nourishing powers in the growth, restoration, and improvement of the human hair, and when every other specific has failed. This celebrated Oil is now universally acknowledged to be superior to all other pre-weak hair, produces a thick and luxuriant growth, cleanses it from scurf and dandruff, and makes it beautifully soft, curly, and glossy. Its operation in cases of baldness is peculiarly active; and in the growth of whiskers, eye-children it is especially recommended, as forming the basis of a beautiful head of hair. In dressing the hair nothing can equal its effect, rendering the pendant lustre.—Price 3s. 6d. and 7s.; family bottles (equal to four small), 10s. 6d.; and double that size, 21s.

NEW LABEL.—To prevent the substitution of spurious imitations for the genuine article by unprincipled shopkeepers, a new label from steel, by Messrs. Perkins, Bacon, and Co., is now used, upon which are engraved in white letters, the words "ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL," and the signature of the Proprietors in red ink, "A. ROWLAND & SONS." The whole, with the exception of the profile of her Majesty "the Queen," being covered with a lacework pattern in transparent colourless ink. Sold at 20, Hatton Garden, London, and by Chemists and Perfumers.

WATCH, CLOCK, and CHRONOMETER MANUFACTORY, 33 AND 34, LUDGATE HILL, LONDON. ESTABLISHED 1749.

J. W. BENSON, MANUFACTURER of GOLD and SILVER WATCHES of every description, construction, and pattern, invites attention to his magnificent and unprecedented display of Watches, which is admitted to be the largest and best selected Stock in London. It consists of Chronometer, Duplex, Patent Detached Lever, Horizontal, and Vertical Movements, Jewelled, &c., with all the latest improvements, mounted in superbly-finished engine-turned and engraved Gold and Silver Cases. The designs engraved upon many of the cases are by eminent artists, and can only be obtained at this manufactory. If the important requisites, superiority of finish, combined with accuracy of performance, elegance, durability, and reasonableness of price, are wished for, the intending purchaser should visit this Manufactory, or send for the ILLUSTRATED PAMPHLET, published by J. W. BENSON (and sent post-free on application), which contains sketches, prices, and directions as to what Watch to buy, where to buy it, and how to use it. Several hundred letters have been received from persons who have bought Watches at this Manufactory, bearing testimony to the correct performance of the same. The following extracts from the opinions of the Press will, it is hoped, be a sufficient guarantee to the public that they may secure at this House a good Watch at a reasonable price:—

EXTRACT from REPORT of J. STRACHEY, Esq., Officiating Collector at Moradabad, to R. ALEXANDER, Esq., Commissioner of the Rohilcund Division, dated 14th April, 1855, in the Appendix to the REPORT of CAPT. YULE, Deputy Consulting Engineer to the Government of India, on "Railways for Rohilcund."

Cheap railroads seem peculiarly adapted to this part of India. Through the greater part of Rohilcund there is little kunkur to be found, and there is no other material available for metalling roads; consequently, the construction of really good roads, fit to carry a heavy traffic, is generally impossible, except at an enormous expense. In this district there is not a single metalled road, nor can I see a probability of any being made. My experience of road-making in the plains has been so small, that I can say nothing from my own knowledge; but if Colonel Cotton may be believed, the average cost of a good metalled road in this country is not less than 5,000 rupees per mile. I believe that in this district it would probably much exceed that sum. The average cost of transit is now very great,—not less probably in the most favourable season than 1½ anna per ton per mile; and as for three months of the year the roads may be considered almost impracticable for carts, the true average cost of transit for the year must be still higher. If this state of things could be easily amended by the construction of good common roads, it might perhaps be doubtful whether it would not be better to expend a large sum of money in making a great many miles of good common road, than in making a comparatively few miles of railroad. But the difficulties in the way of making good metalled roads, fit to carry the traffic along the main lines of transit through Rohilcund, would be so great, and the expense of keeping up such roads, when made, would be so high, that I cannot doubt that it would be far better, and far more economical in the end, to construct a line of cheap railroad at once. The plan which I believe has been recommended by Captain Yule, that the railroad should be adapted only for cattle draught, seems to me to be a very judicious one. For my part, I entirely believe, with Colonel Cotton, that the thing wanted is, "Speed in forming communications, not speed in travelling upon them."

The effect that the opening of the great line of railway from Calcutta to Dehlie may have upon the trade of Rohilcund, is a matter deserving the most serious consideration. I have no present means of forming any positive conclusions on the point, but I think it clear that the danger is no imaginary one, that the rice and sugar of Rohilcund may be superseded in the markets of the West by the produce of the country to the south, lying near the line of railway. If such a thing were to happen, and its sole good market were to be lost, the result would be disastrous to Rohilcund. The proposed Rohilcund railroad would clearly be a complete preservation against any danger of this kind.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

OUR advices from Persia by this Mail are to the 25th February. At that date General Outram was busily engaged in preparing to follow up his recent successes, by despatching an expedition to attack the town and fortress of Mohammerah, a frontier post of Persia lying close to the boundary-line which separates the territories of the Shah from the Turkish provinces of Arabia. This stronghold is situate on the right bank of the river Karoon, at the point of its confluence with the united stream of the Tigris and Euphrates, and about seventy miles above the open sea at the head of the gulf. The place is of importance, inasmuch as it commands the passage of the Euphrates, and thus affords the Persians the means of intercepting the supplies procured from the Arabs by the British commissariat officers, and despatched down the river for the use of the camp at Bushire. It is, moreover, well situated as a military post; and as a base of operations, affording an open communication with Bombay, and an easy advance by means of the Karoon towards Ispahan, the importance of its acquisition could scarcely be overrated. Mohammerah was said to be strongly fortified, and it was believed that it could not be captured but after a severe struggle. Its defences were reported to be manned by a Persian force consisting of 14,000 men, one portion of which was stationed within the town, the remainder being intrenched within a date-grove on the outside. It would thus be necessary to carry on a double attack, one from the river face by means of war steamers, and the other by a land force on the opposite side. The troops destined for the latter service, and the embarkation of which had commenced at Bushire, are reported to have consisted of the 3rd troop of horse-artillery, Captain Aitken's field-battery, and the whole or the greater portion of her Majesty's 64th regiment and the 78th Highlanders, the 2nd Bombay European regiment, the 4th rifles, the 20th and 26th Native infantry, and the light battalion, with some sappers and miners. The assault, it was expected, would take place between the 16th and 20th March. In the mean time the Shah's forces were again collecting in considerable force at Burazjoon. This place it will be recollected, was the site of the old encampment, which, on the approach of the British, was abandoned by the Persians, who subsequently sustained a signal overthrow on the plains of Khooshab. The expeditionary force at Bushire was about to receive an accession by the embarkation of the Sind horse from Kurrachee, eight hundred strong, under Brigadier-General Jacob, and H.M.'s 14th light dragoons, six hundred strong, from Bombay. These two regiments would bring General Outram's cavalry force to nearly two thousand sabres. The artillery had been strengthened by the despatch of the 3rd company of the 2nd battalion. The 7th and 25th regiments Bombay Native infantry and the 1st Madras fusiliers were also under orders to embark without delay; but news of the probability of peace having reached Bombay from Calcutta, some suspension of warlike preparations had taken place. To this cause may probably be traced the sudden halt of the 3rd Bombay European regiment at Khandalla, when under orders for immediate embarkation. It will be recollected, however, that the treaty concluded between Feruk Khan and Lord Cowley was not signed at Paris until the 4th March, and that, consequently, intelligence of the fact could not reach India till the beginning of April.

This mail brings no advices from China of later date than those noticed in our last.

From Calcutta we learn that the excitement some time since exhibited by the Hindoo troops at Barrackpore had extended to the vicinity of Moorshedabad. At the former place the cause assigned was the belief, on the part of the men, that their cartridges were greased with bullocks' fat, which, upon their biting off the ends, would be brought into contact with their lips, and thus subject them to pollution. After a time the Sepoys, being satisfied that they had been deceived in the matter, quietly returned to their former habits of obedience and discipline. At Berhampore, near Moorshedabad, the men of the 19th Native infantry hearing of the dispute, held a parade of their own authority, and attended it fully armed. The colonel in command remonstrated with the Native officers, who appear to have done their best under the sudden emergency; but the Sepoys continuing refractory, it was found necessary to call out the artillery, upon which the men complied with the order to ground their arms and return to their barracks. In reference to these proceedings the Bombay Times observes:—

There have been several unpleasant rumours of mutiny in the native regiments of the Company in various parts of India during the last month; but they are all traceable to local grievances, and in no way indicate anything like general disaffection. On the whole, Jack Sepoy is a loyal soldier; and a little more consideration shown his feelings and prejudices, would have saved these displays. In one instance a new cartridge was introduced into the regiment; and the Sepoys, learning that some unclean thing entered into its preparation, refused to have anything to do with it. In another and more recent case, in Madras, the men of the 1st Native infantry were ordered to march, leaving their wives and families behind, in charge of a few men selected from each company. Now the order was a mistake. Sepoys are in general suspicious husbands, and a separation under such circumstances was sure to lead to disaffection. Had the same regiment been ordered for foreign service, they would have received the order to embark without a complaint.

Owing probably to this state of feeling among a portion of the native troops, a degree of political significance has by some persons been ascribed to a novel and curious proceeding among the village police of several districts in the North-west provinces of Bengal. Whence the movement originated, and what is its object, have not transpired; but the village police, in a line of country extending from Goorgaon and Furruckabad to Banda, a distance of two hundred and fifty miles, have been actively employed in the distribution of small wheaten cakes. The mystery is thus described in a letter from Mr. Ford, the magistrate of Goorgaon, to Mr. Simon Frazer, the commissioner of Delhi:—

I have the honour to inform you that a signal has passed through numbers of the villages of this district, the purpose of which has not yet transpired. The chowkeydars of the villages bordering on those belonging to Muttra have received small baked cakes of atta, with orders to distribute them generally through this district. A chowkeydar, upon receiving one of these cakes, has had five or six more prepared, and thus they have passed from village to village. So quickly has the order been executed, that village after village has been served with this notice. To-day, cakes of this description have arrived and been distributed in the villages about Goorgaon, and an idea has been industriously circulated that Government has given the order.

Upon this the Bombay Telegraph and Courier observes:—“Everywhere the police are the instruments of conveyance, and everywhere the police are unable to afford the least clue to the meaning of so strange an effort. What does it mean? In France, such an occurrence would immediately be attributed to the agency of the hidden leaders of the Marianne. On the continent, some revolutionary hero would probably be thrown into prison, till he accounted for what he knew nothing about. In India, however, though conspiracies are possible, secret societies are not, and speculation is again at fault. Are all the chowkeydars about to strike for wages? Or is anybody trying a new scheme for a parcel-dawk? Is it treason or a jest? Is there to be an ‘explosion of feeling,’ or only of laughter? Is the chuppatty a fiery cross, or only an indigestible edible, a cause of revolt, or only of the colic? Is the act that of an influential malcontent, or only of a fool?”

It appears from the Delhi Gazette, that a large force is assembling at Dera Ghazee Khan, a town of the Punjab, situate on the right bank of the Indus, for the purpose of punishing the Bozdar tribe. The force is under the command of Brigadier Chamberlain, and must, it is said, force its way through the Suliman range of hills. Some sharp fighting is expected.

In Oude an affray has occurred, which we regret to say resulted in loss of life to a member of the Bengal civil service. A noted robber, named Sheik Fuzl Ali, in one of his forays murdered the head policeman of a village which he had attacked. It having been found necessary to employ the military against him, an affray ensued, in which Lieutenant Thomas, of the 22nd N.I., and several sepoy, were wounded, and the robber escaped into the jungle. A few days later, Mr. Charles Elliott Boileau, deputy-commissioner of Gonda, in Oude, twenty miles distant from Lucknow, hearing of his proximity, endeavoured to seize him, but fell into an ambush prepared by the robber, and was killed, together with four of the troopers who accompanied him.

The insurrection in Pegu, noticed in our last, is reported to be all but quelled, and it is expected that the next advices will convey intelligence of the capture of the insurgent chief.

The following particulars regarding the mutiny in one of the regiments of the Madras presidency, to which we have called attention in an extract from the Bombay Times, are transcribed from the Overland Athenæum:—“The next most important event that the past fortnight has witnessed, has occurred in our own presidency, and is the mutiny of the 1st regiment of native infantry at Vizianagrum. That regiment had recently arrived from Burmah, was subsequently engaged in what has been termed the Kimedey campaign, and on the 28th ult. the men were required to march to Kurnool without their families. One and all while on parade decidedly refused, and when remonstrated with by Colonel Goldsworthy, raised shouts of derision and defiance. As there was no force near at hand to compel obedience, the colonel was obliged to submit to the mutinous spirit of the men, without being able to make a single arrest. Since this occurred, however, we learn that they quietly marched on the 3rd inst.: their destination is Secunderabad."

CASUALTIES BY DEATH IN THE ARMIES OF INDIA REPORTED SINCE OUR LAST PUBLICATION.

H.M.'s FORCES.—Lieut. C. J. Phillips, 60th Rifles, on his passage home from India, March 16.

BENGAL.—Surgeon Lacon, 9th N.I., at Oligneh; Lieut.-Col. T. B. Jarvis, Engineers, aged 61, at 25, Cavendish-road West, St. John's Wood.

MADRAS.—Maj. W. T. Brett, Eur. Vet., at Vizagapatam, Feb. 26; Ens. D. Young, 40th N.I., at Westbourne-terrace North, aged 18, April 3.

FOUR MEN were committed by the magistrate of Ahmedabad, on a charge of conspiracy. The judge acquitted them. The magistrate thought the proceedings of the judge too summary, seized them with a view to their recommitment on the same or some other charge, and kept them in prison for two years. Mr. Hadow, the magistrate in question, was reprimanded by the court. We beg to say we have not exaggerated or omitted any detail of this case. We have taken it from the reports of the Bombay Sudder. We will only remind the Governor-general, that it is in his power to dismiss Mr. Hadow, in spite of the Bombay Government.—Friend of India.

PERSIA.

INTELLIGENCE FROM THE PERSIAN GULF.

(From the Bombay Times, March 10).

We subjoin the letter of our correspondent at the seat of war, received yesterday per H.C. steam-frigate Punjab:—

Bushire, Feb. 19, 1857.—By the mail taken down in the Pre-cursor on the 16th, I had the satisfaction to furnish you with a copy of the field order detailing the services and hardships endured by the troops, and the success of our arms in the field opposed to those of his highness the king of kings. General Sir James Outram has given greater effect to his appreciation of those services, by the issue to each soldier composing that expedition, of a pair of boots. Soldiers are ambitious, and glory to see their deeds acknowledged by their commander and their country, and the substantial reward of a pair of boots, whose cost is four rupees, to men whose means are very limited—and to whom the replacing of the boots worn out on the march would have cost them privations that they could ill afford in this dear, dear country, is judicious and appropriate. So you see that in the course of centuries the fashion of the warrior's gaining his spurs, has descended to his earning his boots. Poor Hoossein Khan, the Chief of Borasjoon, is still a prisoner in the Charboorj, formerly graced as the domicile of the Dehria Beggi, and now used as a depot for the reception of ship lumber and heavy ordnance stores. It is to be hoped that all that is said about this captain's treatment is not true. If, as I hear, he is only allowed five annas for his and his servants' support, the measure, to say the least, is harsh; and not even justified by his attempting to lead our army astray. Is it not natural, for man to have a patriotic spark, notwithstanding his cupidity will not permit to refuse our pay and glittering bribes? I see the trial of the well-known merchant Malcolm has been entrusted to an ex-political of some note, Brigadier Trevelyan of the artillery. It is reported that some of the munitions of war, particularly the lead, found at Borasjoon, were shipped by Mr. Malcolm since the surrender of the fort. The penalty attending the crime under investigation, notified under the authority of General Stalker, when Captain Jones first suspected that contraband goods were leaving this port, was death, but it is hoped, for the sake of the respectable position that Mr. Malcolm has maintained for so many years, that he will be able to clear himself of a charge so heinous to his reputation for friendship to our government. Our sepoys are fast recovering the effects of their arduous march, a good many were thrown into hospital during the first three days, but it is surprising to find how soon they rally and return to their work. The Europeans have stood it well.

Bushire, Feb. 23.—If all the rumours current in camp of late were recorded, the writer would be compelled to give you a long detail of the amical terms come to by the European powers at the late conference of Paris, how the Russians acceded to every proposition put forward, and of the despatches received from Lord Stratford de Redcliffe from Constantinople,—then follows the embarkation of troops for Mahamra,—then a message from the Shah that he had despatched a General Plenipotentiary to Sir James Outram with the sword in his right hand, backed by 20,000 men, and an olive-branch in his left, either of which our chief might accept as he pleased,—and now the strenuous exertions of our engineers in erecting batteries at every salient point, and the appearance of immense quantities of heavy guns ranged in line in our main street, ready to be placed in position. The rumours are certainly favourable to a speedy conclusion of hostilities, but facts concur in pointing to steady determination to be prepared for accidents, and it is well to be prepared; for the ancient practice of the Highlands of arming the country at the sign of bonfires seems to be understood here; and, of late, close observers have noticed the signal at play on the hills. Of one thing, however, the Shah-in-Shah may be sure that our general and his army, like weazles, will not be found asleep. We have had bitter cold weather of late, with occasional showers, to add to our misery. Provisions are getting dreadfully dear, and I think something should be done by either increasing the pay or throwing in some live stock from Bombay, Kurrachee, or Muscat to relieve the dearth—only fancy two rupees being paid for a fowl, eggs are not procurable, and nothing but mutton every day is sickening. I see one of the enterprising Bombay Parsees has opened a shop in the fort at very reasonable charges of 250 per cent. profit on his goods.—The Hon. Mr. Murray is off in great haste to Bus-sorah, with a company of the light battalion, he embarked under the salute due to his position, at noon to-day.

Bushire, Feb. 24.—It is some pleasure to have a liberal general to serve under, and some satisfaction to serve under one who has the power to do occasional good offices. By a mere stroke of his pen, Sir James has this day exempted the whole force from postage on letters and newspapers to seaports on the Indian coast. This is really kind and considerate when you think how eagerly a mail from Bombay is looked for, received, and devoured. It is a shame to find that they are so far between. I have just seen a proclamation of the Shah in the Teheran Veteran, wherein he complains that hostilities were commenced before war was declared. He admits that a coolness existed between her Britannic Majesty's Government and himself, but that he had dispatched a plenipotentiary to Constantinople to treat with our ambassador there. He complains of a print from the Indian Government being the only intimation he received of the commencement of war, and declares that he was utterly unprepared to resist; in fact, that he had not given any instructions to resist the landing of our forces on the shores of Iran. His Majesty of Persia says nothing of peace, so that we may expect before very many months are over our heads to breathe the same air with his august highness.

Bushire, Feb. 26.—The post is about closing, so that I must wind up sharp. The headless bodies of two natives have just been discovered near camp. This is rather strange with the sharp look-out kept on stragglers; it is indeed no easy matter to pass the cavalry advanced piquets unperceived, day or night, so that the murders can only be attributed to personal enmity—an investigation is being held on the matter. Officers have been prohibited riding beyond the cavalry piquets without first obtaining leave. This is a wholesome regulation, as it not only cares for those who will not care for themselves, but likewise prevents the chance of neighbouring villagers being insulted. For the latter precaution, however, no reason has been given, for I do not suppose that an army less disposed to disorderly behaviour was ever before collected. Sir James Outram inspected the cavalry on their parade-ground the evening before last, and yesterday afternoon he went over the infantry. Before closing, I must press you to advocate the claims of this force on the generosity of the Indian markets. Something in the shape of edibles must be sent in, and that so on, for the natives in particular, now pay a rupee for eight seers of flour, the same for six seers of rice, four annas per lb. for miserable mutton, and salt fish of the poorest description (soormah) two and three annas each. Forage is not always procurable, so that the commissariat is literally turned into an Indian bazaar, whence everything needful must be obtained. Something must be done; and a movement into the interior or shift of part of the force from this spot, may be looked upon as a certainty before long.—Bombay Times, Mar. 10.

The following letter from Bushire brings our news down to the 1st instant:—

"Bushire, March 1, 1857, 4 P.M.—The authorities have just announced that a mail will be closed at eight this evening for Bombay per Arthur the Great; I therefore hasten to scrawl over a few lines else you may think me asleep. Of news I have none—if I except the embarkation of the—who do you think? Three line sergeants, so you see that the embarkation of the troops for Mahomra is steadily progressing. The waggons of the 3rd troop horse artillery have been put on board the flats for removal to the shipping; the work cannot, however, be progressed with, owing to the sharp N.W. breeze, that has been prevalent for some days, raising up a disagreeable and blinding lot of sand. The small plots of grass that we found to gladden our return from Brassjoon have disappeared under these hillocks of moving sand. Peace is spoken of. I suppose it is natural that people should expect what they most wish for, and peace may be concluded for ought we know; one thing however is evident, that whatever our expectations, whatever our wishes, we are preparing for war. Fortifications are being constructed at the posts most open to attack. Two half-moon batteries, to be mounted with fifty-six pounder guns, are being thrown up south of the camp, whilst at the northern approach a Malakoff is making its appearance on the spot modestly called Masonry Tower, by General Stalker. A good deal of forage has been allowed to pass into our camp during the last two or three days, notwithstanding it is well-known that the enemy have again collected in great force at Brassjoon. A movement in that direction is again whispered; but no one knows the general's intentions,—he is no babler; his thoughts he keeps to himself till he has matured his projects, and gives his orders sufficient time to be executed, and no more. Great efforts are being made to preserve cleanliness in camp, and the exertions of the officers of the quartermaster-general's departments are very effective and praiseworthy. We have had some practice with the mountain train during the last two evenings, to ascertain the velocity of flight of the leaden balls after the bursting of spherical case; the result has been very satisfactory I believe, twenty-eight balls out of sixty having penetrated a 2-inch jungleplank target 10 × 8' fired at 500 yards, the shell bursting between forty and fifty yards in front, and about twenty above the horizontal line. The cold still continues to be felt; nearly all complain of coughs; the number of sick is materially decreasing.—Bombay Times, March 18.

BENGAL.

BENGAL ANNUAL REPORT.

The annual report on Bengal for 1855-56 is a most valuable paper. It is very dry to read. All the facts are clearly stated, but there is no pretension to literary excellence. It is somewhat overcrowded with statistics, and, like all the other reports, is totally wanting in political perspective. The great fact and the insignificant detail are equally prominent, and therefore equally likely to be overlooked. But to any one who, with a previous knowledge of the subject, will calmly study this report it is a mine of information. On the administration of justice alone, it supplies facts which, rightly comprehended, would smash any judicial system in the world. What an extent of misery and vexation, interruptions to commerce, and insecurity of property do these two tables represent. The total value of the suits pending in the Civil Courts on 31st December, 1855, was:—

Original Suits	Rs. 3,57,13,544
Zillah Appellate Courts	21,67,274
Sudder Court	1,47,96,832

Total 5,26,77,650

While the average delay in the decision of a case was:— 1855.

	Year.	m.	d.
Sudder Court	1	3	4
Zillah judges	0	11	3
Additional judges ..	0	9	14
Principal Sudder ameens ..	1	0	14
Sudder ameens	0	9	6
Moonsiffs	0	6	26

That is, the ownership of three and a half millions sterling was kept in suspense for an average period of six months. A million and a half remained useless for more than twelve. These figures, moreover, reveal but a portion of the evil. Most of the suits before the courts of original jurisdiction are appealed twice over, and the large claims are not delayed for an average but for a maximum period. We do not exaggerate when we say that a sum equal to the entire land revenue of Bengal is rendered useless for a period of two years by the delay of our civil courts. And then we talk of electric telegraphs, and point to a new harbour at Cocanada as the end alike of government and legislation. We build a new doorstep for the Chancery suitor, and tell him to admire its whiteness and forget his misery.

We see little hope either of improvement. Mr. Grant's bill, if it passes, may effect some improvement; but there is a timidity in our legislation on civil justice which seems absolutely unconquerable. We will not introduce the English law, as Mr. Lowe advises. We shrink from a civil code, as if Napoleon, Mr. Livingston, and the New York legislature had never existed. We refuse even to lay down some definite principles of commercial law, which of itself would reduce the delay one-half. A large part of these suits are for bond-debts of every conceivable form, which require, if not lawyers for their decision, at least a law. And to-morrow the facts thus revealed,—facts almost as discreditable and dangerous as the existence of disaffection or of systematic oppression,—will be forgotten. The world will spin on, and our rulers will still be eager for public works, and interested in museums. The improvements during the year have been many. The new Law of Evidence has been found to work most beneficially. Every judge has been compelled to write his final decree himself in his own tongue, to the disgust of the Amiah. The decrees have been shortened. The uncovenanted judges have been prohibited from appointing their relatives to situations in their courts. The number of suits dismissed on default has greatly diminished. But none of these reforms diminish the cardinal evil of our system,—an extent of delay which renders justice, even when obtained, a mockery.

The same evil exists in the criminal department, though to a less monstrous extent. The average duration of serious cases is:—

	Days.
From apprehension of prisoner to commitment	61
From commitment to reference	71
From transference of record to its receipt in Sudder Court ..	15
From receipt of record to issue of sentence	34

Total 181

Or, in non-official English, a man accused of a heavy crime remains six months in jail, in doubt whether he is to live or die—to return to his home, or linger out his life as a convict in Maulmain. The delay is bad enough in the case of the guilty, but imagine six months' confinement under such circumstances for the innocent! The police, who are to criminal justice what the courts are to legislation, are still unreformed. The lieutenant-governor, reaffirming the denunciation of them in his minute, adds as an illustration of their qualities the following table:—

		Number of Cases reported.	Persons arrested.	Persons convicted or committed.	Persons acquitted.	Value of Property stolen.	Value recovered.
PATNA	Theft ..	888	709	320	385	47,756	3,683
	Burglary ..	2,143	136	39	97
BEHAR	Theft ..	738	365	137	197	58,336	3,351
	Burglary ..	1,879	132	29	86
SARUN	Theft ..	729	266	109	147	28,724	3,276
	Burglary ..	1,401	58	22	34
SHAHABAD	Theft ..	505	153	85	57	42,317	3,116
	Burglary ..	568	40	11	27
CHUMPARUN ..	Theft ..	617	296	173	91	22,254	8,986
	Burglary ..	441	48	31	17

Burglary is committed with impunity, and but little property is ever recovered. It is the same in all other divisions, except Dacca, where there is a trifling improvement. In Bancoorah 404 cases of burglary were proved, and only three persons were convicted. Throughout Bengal for 19,787 cases reported, only 1,375 persons were convicted. Moreover, only 1,995 cases were investigated, the people preferring to abide by their losses rather than increase them by a reference to the police. The only radical improvement has been in the crime of dacoity. In one or two Zillahs,—notably in the 24 Pargunnahs—it has been almost extinguished. Throughout Bengal, the number of cases has declined from 461 in 1850 to 111 in 1853. The cause of this success is sufficiently clear. The Dacoity Commissioner up to the point of commitment is armed with extra legal powers. He can act with as little restraint as a French Prefet, and of course the criminal, whose only advantage is his own freedom from restraints, is beaten in the contest. If the Dacoity Commissioner possessed also the power of punishment, could string up his dacoits after fair trial there and then, dacoity would in three months be a phrase.

The revenue system of Bengal is, from its very nature, so little elastic, that improvements are scarcely possible. The returns, however, may be quoted:—

Land	Rs. 3,69,89,120
Customs	1,42,10,871
Abkaree	31,14,511
Stamps	20,31,214
Salt (net)	70,82,295
Opium (net)	2,85,42,105
Total	9,19,70,116

The Customs have tripled in sixteen years, partly from an increase in the import of salt, but chiefly from the additions to the regular trade. The latter has risen from twelve to twenty millions sterling in the same period, while the tonnage has increased from 2,30,154 to 6,50,320. To this increase, moreover, there is no apparent limit. The demand for produce never diminishes, except for the hour. The facilities for transmitting it to the port of shipment become every year more numerous. The railways will open up districts scarcely known in the markets, and every new road brings its direct addition to the commerce of Calcutta.

The report on Public Works is to the last degree unsatisfactory. The whole might be classed, without injustice, under the head of repairs. The work on the great Arracan Road has been "very small." The specifications and drawings for the Patna Road have not been furnished, though the work was sanctioned two years since. The Darjeeling Road has been sanctioned. The Jessore Road has been approved. The Cuttack Road is of great importance, and is under reference to England. The unbridged rivers on the Grand Trunk Road are, with the exception of the Soane, to be bridged, and the work on some of them has been commenced. The practicability of irrigating Shahabad has been proved. But with the exception of some works upon the embankments essential to the protection of the revenue, nothing can be said to have been done. Works have been proposed, discussed, and even estimated, but the visible results of the year are new bunds and new cutcherries.

The Presidency of Bengal has, strictly speaking, no political relations. Its frontier is occupied by tribes scarcely more civilized than the beasts of the field, and who seldom require the whip. During the year, however, there have been no expeditions, and the only political affair of importance has occurred in Cuttack. In this province British moderation, or British indifference, permits a dozen savages to retain the power of life and death over a territory of fifteen thousand square miles. Usually their history is about as interesting as that of Australian aborigines. They quarrel and agree, murder their enemies, and break the heads of their friends, without much interruption to the business of mankind. Occasionally, however, they come in contact with the power whose criminal indolence suffers them to exist. During the year it was discovered that the Boad Rajah harboured the outlaws of Goomsoor, and it was proposed to exchange his territory for a pension. The Rajah, however, objected, just as a dacoit would object to become respectable, and as his only offence was fostering rebellion in Goomsoor, "it was not considered proper to force the proposed arrangement upon him;" an instance of moderation which ought to weigh favourably against the bombardment of Canton.

And this is all. There has been much discussion during the year. Opinion has probably advanced. We are perhaps nearer to certain reforms than we were in 1854. But we cannot perceive that the presidency of Bengal has, except in the matter of prison discipline, advanced one solitary step. It has no more learned judges, and no better police; no more roads, and no more canals; no fewer criminals, and very little more of education. The year, upon the whole, must, we fear, be pronounced thoroughly unsatisfactory.—Friend of India.

THE PROGRESS OF PEGU.

Slowly but steadily the province of Pegu advances to its natural prosperity. With the influx of population from Bengal and Madras, Burmah, and the Karenee States, the breadth of land under cultivation increases every year. It was 4,04,315 acres in 1854-55. It was 5,39,818 acres in 1856-57. Already the production of rice begins to emulate that of Arracan, and in a few months the export will surpass that of Bengal. In 1854-55, the people exported, in addition to their home consumption, 80,388 tons. In 1855-56, when the high prices ruling in Europe induced the dealers to sweep the country as it were with a rake, the export rose to 126,674 tons, an amount almost equal to the export from Calcutta. It must rise with every addition to the population. As our readers know, the history of Arracan proves that the demand for rice is one which never ceases, and which, within certain limits as to price, it seems impossible to satisfy. The nations of the continent are learning to use it, not only as a luxury, as our countrymen do, but as food. The supply from America does not perceptibly increase, and Pegu may become one vast rice-field without a danger of a glut. This is the more evident from the fact that the export does not in the slightest degree affect that of Arracan. All through the year under review wages at Akyab stood at rates which would be high in Europe. Day-labourers were earning thirty rupees a month, or fifteen shillings a week, and coolies from Chittagong, and even Bengal, kept streaming into the Province. Eight hundred thousand pounds, according to Mr. Lushington, were remitted for rice alone, and although this seems an exaggeration, the amount cannot have fallen short of half a million sterling.

Of course, with the cultivation the revenue has increased:—

Total	23,30,603	7	8	30,29,208	4	7½

The customs duties, chiefly on imports, increase but slowly, the trade, we suspect, having in 1854-55 been slightly overdone. The return this year will be larger, the imports of one quarter having exceeded fifteen lakhs of rupees. The increase of revenue, it must be remembered, is wholly apart from an increase of taxation. It is the demand, not the rate, that has increased. We find in the list but one item to regret, and that is the rapid growth of the Abkaree. The Talines and savage section of the Karens were, it is true, drunkards before our arrival. We bring no new vice among them, but we cannot but think that in a new province, and among a native race, this curse might have been diminished. We would try no Maine Law at present, but we would steadily increase the taxes on liquor till it became evident that the profit overcame the risk of illicit distillation. Our rulers have yet to learn what a revenue may be thus obtained, and if there be an article on which a tax of a thousand per cent. is just and equitable, it is the poisonous country rum. The salt revenue, too, seems to be mismanaged. Would it not be simpler to prohibit the manufacture altogether, and import better salt from Madras? That presidency could supply all Asia, and an import duty seems at least easier to collect than the clumsy and irregular impost on boilers.

Great efforts are made to introduce new cultivations, and more especially a superior description of cotton. We notice them almost with regret. The introduction of superior seed is perhaps beneficial, but all official efforts to improve agriculture have as yet failed. In the case of cotton in particular, Mr. Mackay's reports should never be forgotten. The indigenous plant will do, if it is only sent to market in proper condition. The high prices now ruling in Bombay will do more to extend the cultivation than years of expensive farming. Nobody troubled himself about "fostering" potatoes, and potatoes in twenty years have become a staple cultivation in Bengal. It was not Government who introduced the large sugar-cane, which, by the way, has been over-cultivated, and is said to be dying out. Europeans introduced indigo. Dr. Carey introduced half the new fruits, and if Government really assisted the growth of tea, it was because tea grows on spots almost beyond the reach of private enterprise. It is not Government which is covering the Neilgherries with coffee, or growing it in Chota Nagpore at rates which will one day make Ceylon planters turn pale. That which will pay will be grown, even by natives. As to cotton in Pegu, Major Phayre says it costs threepence a pound on the spot. If that is to be the rate, neither Bourbon or Egyptian cotton, short staple or long staple, will compete with the slave-grown article. It may find a market in China, but for Europe the price must be reduced at least one-fourth.

For the rest, the province, in spite of some serious drawbacks, advances rapidly towards that incipient civilization which follows the establishment of British rule. The Burmese, for instance, like all other Buddhists, and large classes of Hindoos, hold all life sacred. Of course, therefore, they kill a man with as little compunction as a mosquito, and murders are frightfully common. Yet in the Rangoon district there was but one murder in 1855, while there were four in 1854. The number of violent crimes in 1855 was altogether only six against thirteen in 1854. The number of crimes of the second class is, for the population, very large, violent assault and rape being apparently frequent to a degree unknown in India. River dacoity and cattle-stealing are common; but a Burmese is a stupid fellow compared to a Hindoo, and seldom perishes himself successfully. Punishment is therefore much more certain than in Bengal, the acquittals amounting to only thirty per cent. The number of convictions is, however, enormous, nearly eighteen times the average of the Madras presidency. The fact is creditable to the police, though not to the population. The Burmese at first fancied that a sentence of imprisonment meant, as in the old régime, a demand for a heavy bribe. On the discovery of their error, they rushed in despair on the guards, and for months the population of the prisons refused to submit to discipline. They yielded at last, as men always do, and prison-breaking is now almost an unknown crime. No attempt, we are happy to perceive, is made at reformation, the commissioner obviously entertaining the improper but accurate idea that his business is to protect society, and not to pet felons. English has been introduced as the language of record in the courts presided over by Englishmen, an experiment the result of which we shall be glad to learn. Moreover, though the Burmese law has been left almost intact, still "in sea-port towns, the English law governs all cases connected with shipping freight, and commercial transactions generally, especially those between foreigners." That experiment also is in accordance with the quiet sense which distinguishes the proceedings of the commissioner of Pegu. All rights in lands are to be registered, and stamps have never been introduced. There is consequently a yearly increase in the amount of litigation; the suits in Bassein, for example, have doubled in a year.

We turn from the state of justice to that of education. It is not unsatisfactory. There is, it is true, but one State School, but the missionaries have supplied many deficiencies. They have opened Normal Schools at Rangoon, Bassein, Henzada, and Promé, and scores of village schools throughout the districts. The people pay for them, books only being supplied gratis, and in the Rangoon Normal Schools they study:—

"The English division, History, Ancient and Modern, Astronomy, Arithmetic, Grammar, Composition, and Declamation. In the Vernacular division, Natural Philosophy, Practical Trigonometry and Surveying, Astronomy, Geography, and the higher branches of Arithmetic."

The pupils, of course, are chiefly Karens, a race, says the Commissioner, whom the missionaries are raising rapidly into civilization.

The electric telegraph is complete from Rangoon to the frontier. Another line from Rangoon to Tounghoo is under construction. A river road has been marked out, and the town of Rangoon has been commenced. Ninety thousand pounds have been received for building lots, one hundred and twelve thousand pounds have been expended in improvements, and the great river frontage has been protected from spoliation. In the interior the civil officers exist as yet the best way they can, but one new station, Mengwe has been laid out as the capital of Tharawadee. Immigration has been encouraged, a vein of coal has been discovered, and finally the trade of the province stands thus:—

Imports	Rs. 1,26,54,710
Exports	66,36,785

Total value, Rs. .. 1,92,91,495

Major Phayre, therefore, in three years, has rendered property secure throughout Pegu, has abolished armed outrage, and introduced an effective police; has built a great capital, and organized a revenue system, under which—we speak on the evidence of an "independent European,"—the people grow rich too fast; has lightened the Burmese taxation, and has doubled the Burmese revenue; has introduced the electric telegraph, and has raised the trade from nothing to two millions sterling a year. Such, under an able ruler, are the results of our "iniquitous thirst for territorial aggrandisement."—Friend of India.

TWO NEW COMPANIES.

There is a tendency at the present moment to hail every new association, provided its object be the development of the resources. No matter how wide the difference between its means and ends. No matter how disproportionate the machinery to the work to be performed. No matter even how great the risk of a total loss of capital. The liability is limited; the end is philanthropic; the estimated dividend is fifteen per cent., and journalism applauds the spirit of the projectors. That is very pleasant for those gentlemen, but, unfortunately, the public, which invests its small savings in these schemes, has too little inclination to examine for itself. Smith trusts his newspaper and subscribes. Brown trusts Smith and subscribes, too, neither of them perhaps looking beyond the prospectus. We do not say that a palpably absurd scheme could be written into a reputation. There is no chance of a company for extracting sunbeams out of cucumbers getting its shares into the market. But carelessness is in business just as ruinous as folly, and it is watchfulness which seems to us to be wanting.

We have at this moment two schemes before us, both very warmly received, both very promising, both very philanthropic, and both, as we conceive, setting business principles at defiance. The first is the "Oriental Indian Steam Company, Limited," with a capital of 250,000*l.*, to be increased if necessary to a million. It is exactly the company likely to attract quiet Indian shareholders. The names of the provisional committee are all good, and all known to Anglo-Indians. River Navigation does pay we all know, and fifteen per cent. is nothing very monstrous. Anglo-Indians are patriotic enough, to wish to open a new river provided they gain by the operation, and they have all an indistinct idea that Col. A. Cotton knows all about the Godavery, and he is on the direction. Yet at the risk of bringing all Madras upon our shoulders, we venture to suggest the propriety of caution. The company, so far as we can perceive, is not a trading company at all in the ordinary sense of the word. It is an experimental company, formed not to secure a dividend, but to try whether a line of steamers can be maintained on the Godavery. The talk about "the Gauges, the Indus, and the Godavery," must be a delusion. The directors know well enough, if the public does not, that they cannot occupy the three great rivers of India for a quarter of a million. But perhaps they intend to try the Ganges first, and only expend some of their profits on the Godavery?

That is possible, but the prospectus discusses only the Godavery, the estimates are only for the Godavery, and there is but one Bengal man on the provisional committee. We do not object to an attempt to place steamers on the Godavery—Col. Cotton's efforts to improve that river are worthy even of his reputation,—but we do object to see the money of quiet people, men with small incomes, and widows with a pittance, drawn away as if for an investment, while in reality it is wanted for an experiment. The Godavery may possibly return 500 per cent. Still, no sane man in India doubts that for dividend purposes a steam company on the Ganges is one thing, and a steam company on the Godavery is another, and a very different thing. Is it quite fair to jumble them up together after the fashion of this prospectus? We do not wish to be unjust, but the following strikes us as a specimen of very clever writing:—

"The cotton of Berar has at present to be carried upwards of 400 miles upon bullocks' backs before it can reach a port of shipment at Bombay, or at Mirzapore, upon the Ganges. The expense of this transport is very great; the damage to the cotton is considerable; and when the monsoon rains set in during the journey, the rivers become impassable, the bullocks sink in the soft alluvial earth of which the cotton-fields are composed, and sometimes the cotton is lost altogether. The very causes, however, which render communication by the roads more difficult, facilitate communication by the rivers, since the rivers are more easily navigable when well filled by the rains."

The roads are very bad, and very dear. The rivers are very good, and very cheap. Nevertheless, a shrewd and active race prefers to go round two sides of a triangle by a bad road, to going down the third side by a good river. Is it not just possible that the risks upon the said river, from rocks, bad bits, and other little difficulties, overbalance the advantage of speed? That is the impression one is apt to receive, at all events, from reports on the Godavery.

Let us not be mistaken. The improvement of the Godavery and of its ports are objects of the last importance to the empire. It might be advisable to devote half a million sterling to the clearance, or avoidance of the channel. The improvements once completed, a steamer with barges tacked on to its tail might possibly move down the river at six miles an hour, the rate assumed. But those experiments, profitable and laudable as they may be, are scarcely the objects for which the shareholders of the Godavery will believe that they invest their funds.

The second scheme is of smaller proportions. It is called the "Ceylon Cooly Transport and Steam Company (limited)." The island requires about 80,000 coolies a year. These men are imported from Southern India in native boats, and the mortality en route is great. The company proposes, with a capital of 50,000*l.*, to place two steamers on this route, and to keep up the coast communication. The dividend is estimated at fifteen per cent. So far the scheme looks well. The coolies doubtless can be carried more cheaply and easily on a steamer than in native boats. A coasting steamer will doubtless be a convenience to the people and Government of the island. But why, if the undertaking must be so profitable, is it not done within the island? why appeal to England and India to raise a paltry 50,000*l.*? Is it that the planters are averse to cheap labour? Or that the planters would like the cheap labour without taking shares in a concern which may or may not be profitable? Why, above all, should it be.

"More satisfactory to the shareholders generally to be informed that the plan proposed for the management of this company is as follows:—At the first general meeting a committee of permanent-paid directors will be formed, one of whom will be thoroughly acquainted with shipping matters, and the practical details of ship-building, &c. This committee will form the home board. In Ceylon a similar committee will be formed, consisting of three merchants and a secretary, to regulate the operations of the company, as it would be impossible for a board at home to exercise control over operations which would necessarily be influenced solely by local requirements. The cost of the whole management, as stated in the estimate, will not exceed 1,000*l.* a year."

And why, again, in the second prospectus, issued immediately after the first, and announcing an increase in the scale of operations attempted, is that little paragraph the only one left out? To us the paid agency in London seems simply absurd. The work is to be done in India; the dividend only is to be received in England. If the shareholders or directors cannot meet once in six months to receive a dividend of 15 per cent., they are more indifferent to profit than men in England usually are.

Both these companies may be admirably managed; both may return excellent dividends. But we warn our readers not to believe that the law of limited liability abolishes the utility of eyes.—Friend of India.

A MYSTERY.

One morning towards the end of last month the officials of Futtehghurh were in commotion. From thannah after thannah there arrived little chupatties about two inches in diameter. They were accompanied by all kinds of reports from puzzled thannahdars, and set the European world in a fever of speculation. It appeared that a few evenings previous, a chowkeydar from Cawnpore ordered a chowkeydar in Futtehghurh to make and bake twelve chupatties, such as the one he showed. Two he was to retain; two more were to be given to each of the five nearest chowkeydars. The order was obeyed, and all night long there was running and baking of chupatties. The five obeyed orders also, and distributed their message to twenty-five, and so the affair went on in geometrical ratio, the cakes sweeping over the district at a speed at which no Indian post yet travels. The wave has not stopped yet. It reached Allahabad in a few days, and to all appearances will include the whole of the north-west. Everywhere the police are the instruments of conveyance, and everywhere the police are unable to afford the least clue to the meaning of so strange an effort.

What does it mean? In France such an occurrence would immediately be attributed to the agency of the hidden leaders of the Marianne. On the continent, some revolutionary hero would probably be thrown into prison, till he accounted for what he knew nothing about. In India, however, though conspiracies are possible, secret societies are not, and speculation is again at fault. Are all the chowkeydars about to strike for wages? or is anybody trying a new scheme for a parcel dawk? Is it treason, or a jest? Is there to be an "explosion of feeling," or only of laughter? Is the chupatty a fiery cross, or only an indigestible edible, a cause of revolt, or only of the colic? Is the act that of an influential malcontent, or only of a fool? All these suggestions have been offered, and we may add one more to the crowd. The despatch may have been the consequence of a vow made by some policeman, aided by the intense ignorance which distinguishes the force. These speculations, however, afford no light, the only clear fact appearing to be this—the police obey orders without knowing whence they are transmitted. They ought to be prohibited from transmitting signals not authorized by a European.—Friend of India.

THE LONDON MAIL of Jan. 26 arrived at Calcutta March 3 (per Bentinck). The mail of March 10 left Suez March 23, for Calcutta (per Hindustan).

SMALL-POX is raging in Calcutta, and the mortality is very great.

THE LIEUT.-GOVERNOR.—There is a wild, but thoroughly improbable report in the bazaar, that the Lieut.-Governor of Bengal has been killed by the petty chief of Sikkim.

THE BANK OF BENGLA reduced its rates one per cent. all round on the 27th Feb., and again one per cent. on the 6th March; consequently, first-class paper can now be discounted at twelve per cent., and government securities at ten.

FIBRES.—There is a nettle in the hills which grows to the height of some six feet. It is dressed like flax, and the fibres spun into thread or twisted into a strong rope. Strong ropes also are made of the fibres of the Bewal, a kind of willow. The bark and leaves are used as fodder, the twigs are macerated, and present a mass of fibre, and the centre burns as readily and clearly as a torch.

A NEW COMIC JOURNAL, to be called Momus, is to be started at Lucknow. Comus, the Calcutta Punch, has not yet made its appearance.

MR. T. J. LEIGHTON, chief officer of the Enterprise, recently found Rs. 2,000 on the Alguada Reef. He was walking on the reef in quest of oysters, when he came upon some fragments of a wreck. He saw in a lagoon close by a heap of black counters, and stooped to pick them up. They turned out to be rupees, to the number of nearly 2,000. The treasure was immediately conveyed on board the ship, and it is said that Government will obtain one-third, the captain half the remainder, and Mr. Leighton some microscopic share.

LIEUT.-COL. G. ST. P. LAWRENCE will, it is reported, succeed to the political agency in Rajpootana.

SALE OF ARSENIC.—Mr. Montgomery, the judicial commissioner of the Punjab, desired to restrain the sale of arsenic. The chief commissioner doubted, but recommended the experiment. The Government of India overruled both. It appears that arsenic is the poison generally used, but poisoning is not very frequent, nor is the stock very large. A restriction of the kind renders espionage necessary, and affords opportunity for extortion.

DR. EATWELL is, it is understood, to be appointed principal of the medical college.

THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL paid a state visit to Maharajah Scindiah of Gwalior on the afternoon of Feb. 25.

PILOT VESSEL IN THE MUTLAH.—We understand that on the recommendation of the marine authorities, the Government has authorized the purchase of the brig Minx, at a cost of Co.'s Rs. 30,000, to serve as a pilot vessel at the entrance of the river Mutlah.

THE MEN of the 1st and 13th regiments of irregular cavalry have unanimously tendered their services to the state for employment in any part of the world.

DOST MAHOMED.—It is rumoured that Dost Mahomed has agreed to resign Caubul to the British in exchange for a pension. We do not credit this statement.

THE INDIAN NAVY AND BENGAL MARINE.—Final instructions are said to have reached Bombay for the amalgamation of the Indian navy and the Bengal marine, which will be carried into effect forthwith.

THE POST-OFFICE.—The value of postage-stamps sold in India during the last official year was Rs. 8,52,744, and the total receipts on account of postage on letters, newspapers, parcels, &c., including stamps sold, was Rs. 16,25,488.

THE BRANCH OF THE AGRA BANK, recently established at Rangoon, is to be withdrawn.

CINCHONA.—Two species of Cinchona indigenous in India have been described by botanists. Their medicinal qualities should be investigated, as the South American plant will require time to reach maturity. A very slight expense would suffice to set the question at rest. The importation from South America into India has, however, been ordered on a great scale. The expenditure of Government on quinine is more than 40,000*l.* a year.

MR. J. F. BROWN, a student of the civil service, has received an honorary donation of Rs. 800 for proficiency in the Persian language; and Mr. H. E. Perkins two donations, each of Rs. 800, for proficiency in the Persian and Oordoo languages.

THE SCHOOL OF MUSKETRY AT SEALKOTE, formed in accordance with G.O.C.C., 12th December, is working along in great style; both officers and men, royal and native, evincing the greatest alacrity and desire to obtain all information they can possibly gain upon the subject which has drawn them together.

AN AFFRAY NEAR FYZABAD is reported. A Moulavie, it appears, who called himself a Madrassee, contrived to collect a crowd. The deputy-commissioner, Mr. Forbes, ordered them to surrender their weapons. The mob refused, and the military were called out. The Moulavie's followers charged the soldiers, and were the next instant scattered like sheep, several of the party being killed, and many most severe wounds inflicted. The affair has been of great benefit to the district, where the healthy awe of the troops had somewhat declined.

THE ACTION FOR LIBEL brought by Mr. H. Cope, against certain shareholders of the Lahore Chronicle, has resulted in a verdict for the plaintiff; damages one hundred and fifty rupees. The libel consisted, we believe, in some statement about the jewels forwarded by a native of the Punjab to the Paris Exhibition.

THE DIRECTORS OF THE ASSAM TEA COMPANY report that the outturn for 1855-56 amounted to 638,000 lbs. The outturn for 1856-57 is expected to reach 700,000 lbs. The company is, however, embarrassed by the difficulty of procuring labour. The Bengulers and Dangars are turbulent and ill-conditioned, and the Assamese alone are to be relied on. Their wages have been raised eight annas a month, but the supply is still deficient. Nothing is said about the financial position of the association.

ANTIMONY IN THE PUNJAB.—Major Hay has discovered mines of antimony on the Shigree mountain, in the Punjab. The supply appears to be inexhaustible. The ore yields sixty per cent. of pure metal; but it is not by any means of first-rate quality. The mine, too, is 13,507 feet above the level of the sea; and it seems impossible, therefore, that the discovery should be of any commercial value. Government has refused to sanction further experiments.

AN AMERICAN RIVER STEAMER.—The Hurkaru announces the arrival of a small American steamer, fitted up exactly like the American fast river-boats. "She is about one hundred and seventy-five feet in length, and above thirty feet beam; and she has two admirably-constructed passenger-decks, capable of accommodating easily above a hundred passengers." She draws only seven feet, but has great steam power, having reached her moorings from Kedgee in three hours and a quarter. She has been employed on the Canton river, but has been sent round for sale.

THE BLACK ACT.—The Calcutta Morning Chronicle, writing of the Black Act, says:—"Seething pitch, brimstone, and salt-petre, are flowing in considerable volumes into the throats of these vampiries, who sold their immortality of soul. Ages have rolled over, but the undying pain and the firm links of eternal torture hold them fast."

GOVERNMENT, it is said, have solicited the sanction of the Court of Directors to issue Treasury promissory notes, payable on demand without interest.

THE TERRITORY OF NELLOHGHUR has been annexed to the British dominions.

THE REVENUE OFFICER who recently absconded from Rangoon is at Ava. An attempt has been made to murder his successor, but it failed. It is said that the fugitive has round him a band of desperadoes ready for any crime.

TRADE WITH JAPAN.—The Dutch Government has abolished the monopoly of the Japanese trade, hitherto enjoyed by a few firms. It has taken it into its own hands. The Emperor of Japan, it is said, has asked for advice as to the exclusion of foreigners, and for aid in constructing a European fleet. A Dutch steamer of twenty guns is accordingly to be sent to Desima.

CANDAHAR.—The Lahore Chronicle publishes letters stating that 12,000 Persians had left Anadurra for Candahar. Their leader, Sooltan Jan, had received orders to take Candahar by the 26th February, the Persian new year. Gholam Hyder Khan, who holds Candahar, is in great distress for want of grain, which is brought in only from Ghuznee. This story of want of food in Candahar is repeated in every letter received from Central Asia.

The Delhi Gazette announces that Mr. Sidney Blanchard, editor of the Mofussilite, has quitted that journal. He has accepted the chair of the Hurkaru. As a light graceful writer, Mr. Blanchard has few equals, if any, in India.

THE CALCUTTA AUCTION COMPANY (LIMITED).—We noticed some time ago the prospectus of the "Calcutta Auction Company (Limited)," which we thought promised exceedingly well: we were subsequently informed that there had been applications for some 1,600 or 1,700 shares. We have now before us the second edition of the same prospectus, and we find the shares reduced from Rs. 250 each to Rs. 100, a most judicious alteration. We learn from the prospectus, that the provisional directors have taken up shares to the amount of two lakhs of rupees, and that no individual director has subscribed for less than 100 shares. The Board is exceedingly strong in men of business and of known wealth, and we augur for this undertaking a very brilliant success. The great inducement to people to join is this, that it is an undertaking requiring no preliminary experimental outlay of capital: there is nothing to interfere with the certainty of a dividend the first half-year after the commencement of business.—Hurkaru.

ESCAPE FROM FIRE.—The British ship the British Trident, which vessel dropped down to the Botanical Gardens on Sunday last, escaped being destroyed by fire at about eleven o'clock A.M. on Saturday, while lying under fairs off the Esplanade. The ship's joiner, it would appear, went down to the store-room and broached a barrel of whiskey. The man having taken a lighted candle down with him and having incautiously held it close to the barrel, set fire to the spirits. On the alarm being given, two water-boats, made fast alongside the vessel filling water, applied their hose to the fire, and extinguished it in a short time, without doing material damage.—Daily News, March 10.

RUNGPORE, FEB. 18.—"I give you a brief account of two hunting excursions the Lieut.-Governor went out on yesterday and the day before. On the 16th Mr. Halliday was encamped at a place called Tignamurree, in the Rungpore district, about twenty-seven miles from Rungpore, when, during the day, some villagers came in, and informed the Lieut.-Governor that they had seen a tiger about a mile from the camp. On this, he and suite started off at about sunset, rather too late for the occasion, for they came across the beast, and one of the party managed to lodge a ball in his back; on which the animal ran into an adjacent village, and into a hut, in which fortunately there was no one at the time, the inmates being out looking at the fun. On the animal entering the hut, they got permission to make a hole in the thatch, and began peppering him; but the beast, finding the place getting too warm, bolted out, and, owing to the lateness of the evening, effected his escape. But the following day, the 17th, they were more fortunate, and started off at about four in the afternoon, and by dusk they managed to bring the beast in. It appears that some sowars were out cutting grass for their horses about two miles from camp, at a place called Raheemgunge, in the Rungpore district, and about thirty-seven miles from the station, where they observed two tigers asleep, which of course made them (the sowars) bolt for it. They came into camp about twelve P.M., and informed the Governor of what they had seen. Mr. Buckland, the junior secretary, appears to have lodged the first ball in the beast, and Capt. Nedham, the officer in charge of the 11th irregular cavalry, about to be stationed at Madar-egunge, in Rungpore, having lodged three more balls in him, cooked his goose: however, from all accounts, they all appear to have given him a peppering. It measured from the tip of the tail to the nose six feet, and was a male."

THE SUM COLLECTED FOR A MEMORIAL TO LADY LAWRENCE amounts to Rs. 11,350. At the suggestion of Sir H. Lawrence, the money is to be devoted to the establishment of a native female school at Umritsur. It is to be superintended by the Church of England missionaries at that station.

THE WIDOW MARRIAGES ON THE INCREASE.—We are glad to record two more marriages of respectable widows of Kyasth families, which a native friend tells us were celebrated in Calcutta on the 12th and 26th Fagoon current, respectively, with great pomp and éclat, and numerous attended by several respectable members of the Hindu community, Pundits, Ghuttucks, and Coolins, so as to make the shooaba a complete picture of happiness and decorum in every way worthy of the occasion. The first bride is the daughter of Ramsoonder Ghose, of Nadaie, near Kulna, married to Doorganarine Bose, nephew of Nundoo Coomara Bose, of Boraul. The second bride is the daughter of Hurriah Chunder Biswas, of Sookchur, near Barrackpore, married to Mudden Moolhun Bose, son of Nundoo Coomar Bose, of Boraul. Both the bridegrooms, as the public will know better, are one a cousin and the other a brother to Baboo Raj Narain Bose, head master of the Midnapore Government school.—Bengal Hurkaru, March 10.

THE 19TH N.I. AT BERHAMPORE.—There has been a rather serious mutiny at Berhampore. The 19th N.I., on being ordered to lay down their arms and return to their lines, refused to obey the order. The 11th irregular cavalry were called out, and a couple of guns pointed at the refractory regiment. The sepoys at last consented to obey orders, on condition that the cavalry and guns should be withdrawn. This was conceded, perhaps rather too readily, and the 19th again assumed an air of discipline and submission.

LIGHTHOUSE ON THE ALGUADA REEF.—We learn that Lieutenant Fraser, of the engineers, is to proceed to England upon full allowances, to carry out the Government plan regarding the lighthouse to be erected on the Alguada reef, near Cape Nigrais, the model of which has been most skilfully designed in wax and sand by that able officer. This measure is now before Council.—Englishman, March 5.

A HINDOO GOD MISSING.—We are informed that in the garden, at Garden Reach, the property belonging to his highness the Rajah of Burdwan, the same which was in the occupation of Sir Lawrence Peel, and at present occupied by his majesty the ex-king of Oude, there stood, from time immemorial, under a peepul-tree, a Hindoo god (Mahadeo), made of solid stone, which has, since Monday last, the 2nd inst., been missing. During the long period the garden remained in the occupation of Sir Lawrence, his lordship, it is alleged, had never interfered with those who generally resorted there to worship, as it did not interfere with the interior of his lordship's garden nor the dwelling-house, the deified Mahadeo being placed in a remote place, although within the walls of his lordship's garden, and near the southern gate, and a great way off from the house. In the same locality in which the Mahadeo stood, the famous Nubean eunuch, the favourite of his royal master, who, being garbed with the exalted title of "Deeanuth-ood-Dowlah," has, not long ago, built a thatched bungalow, for his own residence, and has, it is supposed, ordered the destruction or removal from its original place of the stone god. The worshippers of the deity in question being greatly annoyed at the disappearance of their god, have made a great stir, and preferred their complaint to his majesty; but his majesty has paid no attention to their complaints. We are further informed that the neighbouring Hindoos have determined to carry their grievances, in the first instance, before the proprietor of the garden, the Rajah of Burdwan, and eventually before the magistrate of the Twenty-four Pergunnahs, against the suspected party. We sincerely hope that his majesty the ex-king will not so quickly forget the Hunnooman Ghurreeh affair, which has cost his majesty his country, and what next.—Daily News, March 6.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

CERTIFICATES OF LEAVE—CIVIL SERVICE.

Extract from letter from the Hon. the Court of Directors:—

Financial Department, Oct. 29, 1856.—Inconvenience having in some cases been experienced through the omission on the part of civil servants returning on leave to deliver to us certificates of the exact date from which their leave commences, we desire that in future every civil servant to whom leave to Europe may be granted be directed, immediately on his arrival, to forward to our secretary a copy of the Government letter granting him the leave, and also a certificate showing the date of the sailing of the vessel on which he embarked for Europe.

THE OUDE BRIGADE.

Fort William, Feb. 25, 1857.—The Right Hon. the Governor-General in Council is pleased to direct, that the whole of the regular troops serving in Oude, shall be placed under the command of the Brigadier commanding at Lucknow, under the designation of the Oude brigade.

This arrangement to take effect from the 1st instant, on which date brigadier F. Wheeler, commanding the Oude field force, made over the command of that force to the officer commanding at Lucknow.

The office of brigade major to the Oude field force, and all special appointments connected with that force, will cease from the date of receipt of this order at Lucknow.

REDUCTION OF SALARY.

Fort William, Feb. 27, 1857.—Under instructions from the hon. the Court of Directors, the Right Hon. the Governor-General of India in Council is pleased to direct that the staff salary of the pay master and superintendent of native pensioners Barrackpore circle, shall be reduced to rupees (250) two hundred and fifty per mensem.

NATIVE TROOPS ON FOREIGN SERVICE.

Fort William, Feb. 27th, 1857.—In the G.G.O. issued on the 25th July last, the Government of India gave notice that it would not, after the 1st September, 1856, accept the services of any native recruit for the regular army of Bengal, and for a corps of irregular cavalry, unless at the time of his enlistment he distinctly undertook to serve beyond sea, whether within the territories of the Company or beyond them.

On this order being made known to the 1st regiment of irregular cavalry, the native officers, non-commissioned officers, and men, of their own free will, expressed their readiness to cross the seas, and to serve in every clime and country, wherever the exigencies of the state might demand, submitting a petition to that effect, to which the seal of every man present, 473 in all, is attached.

In like manner the 13th regiment of irregular cavalry have expressed, in a memorial, and by the unanimous declaration of the officers, non-commissioned officers, and men, at regimental headquarters, their willingness to undertake general service wherever the Government of India may please to send them, either now or at any future time.

The Right Hon. the Governor-General in Council desires to express the great satisfaction with which the Government of India has received these offers of unrestricted service. The public spirit evinced by the 1st and 13th regiments of irregular cavalry calls for the marked thanks of the Government of India, and the Governor-General in Council directs that these thanks may be publicly conveyed to the officers, non-commissioned officers, and men of those regiments, and recorded in General Orders.

FREIGHTS.

Quotations to London and Liverpool, 3l. to 3l. 17s.

EXPORTS.—(Calcutta, March 7.)—In the produce market there has been little increased animation. Very little of Indigo remains now unsold, and that of low quality of country produce. Raw Silk has gone up considerably, and large shipments have been made per steamer Alma. Saltpetre has fallen in demand since the receipt of advices from home; but has not been much affected in price in consequence of light stocks. Sugar has been in increased demand for Great Britain and N. America. In Rice there is a fair amount of business going on principally for the Liverpool market, and since the receipt of news from China of the scarcity of this staple there, there has been active operation in Ballum kind. Linseed has again engaged inquiry, particularly for American, and large shipments are going forward. Rape Seed continues to be purchased for Great Britain only, and to a limited extent. Lac Dye and Shell Lac—there has been a better demand for the latter, of good quality, particularly for America. Jute is arriving more freely, and has continued to engage attention for Great Britain. Hides—large shipments are going forward for Great Britain. In all other staples there has been limited operation.

IMPORTS.—(Calcutta, March 7.)—The market has been without material change. Mule Twist has been sold to a fair extent, but the improvement in price noticed has, in consequence of recent arrivals, been slightly checked; Stocks, however, may be reported moderate. All Manchester fabrics have changed hands to a fair extent at fully previous prices, but the recent large imports have induced buyers to make lower offers. Mule Twist.—The improvement in demand and price noticed in our last have, in consequence of recent arrivals, been slightly checked. Sales have lately been effected at 1 to 1½ pie per morah below our last quotations. Coloured Yarns.—Turkey Red Yarn has been in moderate request at unaltered prices. Orange and Green have continued in good inquiry at former prices. Shirtings.—Grey 39-inch to 40-inch low and middling qualities, 6 lb. to 7 lb. command attention, and extensive sales have taken place at former prices, viz. Rs. 3-10 to 5-11 per piece. Madapolams.—Grey of low qualities have continued to meet ready sales at full previous prices, viz. Rs. 1-12 to 2-2 per piece. Cambrics.—Grey 50-inch by 24 yards are inquired for at Rs. 3 to 3-3 per piece, and stock is very light. Jaconets.—Both grey and white continue in fair request, with an upward tendency in price for the former only.

MADRAS.

THE ANNALS OF MADRAS.

THE report commences, like the rest, with the administration of justice. In the matter of civil justice, the only peculiarity in Madras is the existence of subordinate judges between the zillah judges and the principal Sudder Ameeris. The cases are like cases everywhere else, and the number of cases filed, 88,633, shows nothing remarkable. Neither in this department nor in criminal justice does there appear to have been any improvement during the year. We may remark en passant, however, that only forty-nine persons were sentenced to death, and only fifty-six to transportation for life during the entire year. This statement savours far more of laxity in the administration of the laws, than of innocence on the part of the people. The impression is strengthened when we find that "the total number of convicts in all the gaols, remaining at the beginning of the year, and admitted during it, amounted to 11,698, of whom 5,965 remained at the close of the year; but when it is remembered that 52,745 were in one year supposed to be implicated in reported crimes and misdemeanors (irrespective of petty offences), and that 21,726 were said to be implicated in cases involving grave injury to person or property, it is to be feared that the paucity of convictions is rather owing to the inefficiency of the police and want of co-operation of the inhabitants (who selfishly disregard all offence which does not affect themselves), than to any paucity of offenders."

The discipline of the gaols is as bad as it is possible to be. The buildings are unhealthy, and there is no room for classification. Labour on the roads is still the great employment of the convicts, and there is no attempt to exact a penal amount of work. The inspector, however, has proposed to remedy all this by the introduction of one central and four great division gaols on the panopticon principle. This project appears to be warmly seconded by the local government, and to be considered economical.

The revenue statement is far more satisfactory, the returns of the year having increased in the face of bad seasons, and of a direct diminution of taxation. Thus, although in South Arcot direct reductions have been made to the extent of seven lacs of rupees, the cultivation has increased by 178,000 acres, and the collection by Rs. 682,000. In North Arcot, Trichinopoly, Coimbatore, Nellore, Tinnevely, Madura, and Kurnool reductions have been made, yet on the whole of the sixteen regular districts the land revenue has risen from

Increase 16,17,860

That result bears out most strongly the impressions of the Madras Government in favour of reduction. Orders, moreover, have been issued to avoid increasing the ryot's assessment for any improvements he may himself have made, a fair and just reform. A gigantic project for the reform of the assessment has, as our readers are aware, been submitted to Government, and, though not mentioned in this report, was the great work of the year. Measures have been adopted for the creation of local funds, by the addition of an anna per cawnie to the assessment, and a plan for remodelling the subordinate revenue agency has been matured. Every branch of the revenue except the Moturpala has been prosperous.

The balance sheet shows a deficit of more than half a million sterling, the result, say the authorities, of charging troops not in Madras to Madras; the result, say we, of charging nearly ninety lacs expended on new public works to revenue instead of capital. For that extraordinary policy, the Madras Government is not of course, responsible, and its revenue statement on the whole is clear, straightforward, and satisfactory. Another statement of some value exhibits the remittances in specie dispatched to the aid of Bengal and Bombay during the last ten years.

In the matter of education, a beginning has been made. Sanction has been received for the establishment of a Normal school, twelve Anglo-vernacular schools, and one hundred vernacular schools. Owing, however, to a tedious correspondence, little has actually been effected up to the date of the report. Three grants-in-aid, however, had been made; four zillah schools had been opened, the Normal school had been established, and the old university college was remodelled. The talook schools are only commenced in Tanjore and Madura, and great attention has been paid to the village school system adopted by the Tinnevely mission.

The sums authorised for expenditure on public works amounted to Rs. 41,21,719. Public works furnish the great staple of official discussion at Madras, and the narrative is proportionately minute. The great work between Madras and the Bengal frontier has advanced, but not rapidly. Seventy miles of the Nellore trunk-road have been opened, and twenty more will speedily be ready. In almost every district great additions have been made to the roads, and new bridges built on those already in existence. The strength of the department, however, has been thrown upon the works connected with the Kistnah and Godavery Anicuts. Three new main lines of irrigation and navigation have been commenced:—

"Several hundred thousand acres of land have been irrigated this year by the Anicut and channels. The average assessment is Rs. 4½ per acre, and the whole expenses certainly not more than Rs. 8; and it is believed that at the selling prices that have ruled during the past season, the net profit to the cultivators has not been less than Rs. 24 per acre."

Works equally large have been commenced in Guntoor, but it would be useless as well as wearisome to enter on all details.

We have no space for farther analysis. In all the more important departments of Government, the administration of justice excepted, the Government of Madras has, during the year, steadily advanced. There appears, so far as this report can be admitted in evidence, to be no want either of clear-sightedness or energy. There has been work done, and successfully, in revenue, in education, and in public works. It is to record and illustrate such progress that these reports were ordered for publication.—Madras Athenaeum.

SURVEY AND ASSESSMENT.

A DISPATCH was received last month from the Court of Directors, sanctioning the general scheme of survey and assessment at a cost of upwards of seventy lacs of rupees, and of which the following is the purport:—

"All lands ought to be classified according to the fertility and productiveness of the soil, without any reference whatever to the benefits which they may have derived from irrigation works; but on these latter a water-rate is proposed to be levied.

"As to the mode of determining the assessment, the Court disapprove of the recommendation by the Local Government for fixing it on the gross produce, and recommend the net produce as the proper basis of assessment. In short, they state that the rent should be so much as would leave a small surplus profit to the ryots. Small holdings are condemned, which would, therefore, induce an interference with the law respecting the subdivision of inheritance. On this the Court observe, that this ought not to be permitted, unless the whole estate is held responsible. Assessment as settlement is made with each field rather than with each ryot: the Court would rather call the new system Keithwar than Ryotwar.

"The survey and revision, after they are finished, should not be disturbed for the space of thirty years; though the period recommended by the local government was fifty.

"The Madras Government proposed that the commutation of rents into money should take place once in seven or ten years, and be fixed in reference to the market prices of the produce during that period: and the Court approve of this generally; but recommend the English system of commuting tithes every year, with reference to the state of the markets of the preceding seven years. They also propose that at the end of thirty years the commutation should also be revised. Reduction of assessment should be simultaneously accompanied with the ready means of communication, or the benefits expected from it will be neutralized, and the object of revision defeated. The appointment of a Surveyor-general, on one thousand rupees a month, and a settlement officer, on a salary equal to that of a member of the Board of Revenue, and establishment, was sanctioned. The ryots are to be allowed to sub-let their lands, so that the levy of rent through middle-men is, to a certain extent, sanctioned. The Court recommend this Government to communicate with the Bombay Government on this subject, as survey and revision of assessment were recently completed there, with the view that this Government may obtain valuable suggestions and information as to the mode of proceeding: twenty-two years is the time stated to be required for the completion of survey and settlement. The settlement officer is to follow the surveyor-general, their assistants being detached to other places. The Court also request this Government to take into deliberate consideration the views of Mr. Grant, of the Legislative Council, who points out in his minute the many inherent evils of the ryotwar system, such as the interference of the Talook officers,"—Crescent, February 28.

THE SLAVES OF MALABAR.

On the 27th December the acting collector of Malabar forwarded to Government the following description of the condition of the Chermurs of Malabar:—Of a slave population of 187,758, about 148,210 remained with their former proprietors; 39,548, or about 21 per cent., have availed themselves of the freedom secured by Act V. of 1843. Thus the great bulk of the slaves of Malabar still remain with their former masters; but they, as well as their masters, are, I believe, quite alive to the fact that they are at liberty, and the feeling has had the effect of greatly ameliorating their condition. British soil is now known to be free, and hundreds of fugitive slaves from the Cochín territory have for years, and do still, seek refuge in Malabar; and a very common mode of satisfying a grudge against any holder of Chermurs, is to entice them away by holding out prospect of better wages. Sale and mortgage, and lease of slaves, with the consequent breaking up of slave families, have probably entirely ceased, for the people are loath now to venture money on so uncertain a transaction as the purchase or mortgage of a slave.

But though aware of their position by law, the Chermurs are not as a body in a condition to avail themselves of their liberty. Many causes operate with the predial slave in inducing him to cling to the estate which his ancestors have cultivated for generations, where stands his hut and garden and demon-temple. Poverty, ignorance, reluctance to change, uncertainty of employment, and above all the fact that they are generally deeply indebted to their late owners, and are entirely dependent on them for retaining their present homes and gardens, operate to prevent their breaking off the ancient ties; and, degraded as they have been under an immemorial condition of slavery, many still bear severity and wrong with dull indifference; but on the whole a great change has taken place, and their wages and comfort are improving, and independence springing up.

The Chermur body constitute the only really good and certain body of agricultural labourers. The landed proprietor knows his worth as such, and he is forced, as the condition of the labouring population improves, to meet his Chermur's increasing demand. Public works and coffee-plantations in Wynaad, &c., are exercising an important influence on wages in Malabar; and the general rise acts on the condition of the Chermur. It is common to hear the exclamation, "The slaves are become the masters."

The social condition of the Chermur of Malabar, and caste prejudices of the people of Malabar, will for long stand much in the way of the improvement of the Chermur condition. The ceremonial taint (uncleanliness) of the Chermur is such, that he cannot approach within thirty yards of a man of caste, or approach a house without conveying a taint, which puts those affected to the trouble and expense of purifying. They have been turned off the public road wherever it is possible; and caste coolies often object even on public works to labour in the same gang with Chermurs. The objection is now always overcome by the determination of the European officers to put down such opposition.

Time, and diffusion of intelligence among the higher classes, alone will ameliorate the Chermur condition in this respect.

In the meantime the roads are kept free to them, they are allowed to enter every public office in the country. Education has been attempted among them, and every expedient that British abhorrence of slavery can compass to raise the degraded class, is resorted to. My impression is, that within our generation slavery will have ceased to exist practically.

442 slaves have valuable lines of 121 pieces of paddy-lands, 400 small compounds to the value of about Rs. 5,600, and paying a land-tax of Rs. 360; 13 only are actual proprietors in fee-simple.

1,066 cases of violence of masters towards slaves have been tried; but these do not include the cases in which application is made to the magistracy by fugitive slaves to support them in their asserted liberty when this has been threatened by the slaves' former owner. In such cases it is usual to send for the owner, and in the presence of the slave point out to him that the law recognizes no right over the person of the slave; and that continuance in a course likely to lead to breach of the peace will force the magistrate to require security from him, otherwise the petition is indorsed to the head of police, or Adighary, requiring them to prevent any interference with the liberty of the petitioner. These measures generally have the required effect.

THE PONDICHERY GOVERNMENT have decreed that the right and left hand (Native) castes are entitled to freely use the streets in a palanquin carriage, or in any other conveyance; the free exercise of their marriage and funeral ceremonies in the streets, under the supervision of the proper authorities, and with permission, is also accorded to them.

PEGU MEDAL.—The whole of the artillery at the Mount paraded in full dress yesterday morning, when Major Mein, of the H. B. and four gunners were decorated with medals for service in Pegu. We subjoin the order directing the parade:—

C. O. By Brigadier A. Sherriff, Commanding, 9th March, 1857.

The whole of the artillery will parade on the general parade ground on Wednesday morning next, at six o'clock, for the inspection of the Brigadier Commandant of Artillery, and will be formed in divisions right in front and in continuous close column of batteries, the horse artillery on the right. The men not told off to batteries will be formed in line on the extreme left. Staff sergeants will take up the ground the previous evening for their detachments, with the Adjutant of the Golundauze.

C. O. 10th March, 1857.

In continuation of para 4 C. O. of yesterday, the Brigadier Commandant will decorate the undermentioned officer and men with the Pegu Medal: Major Mein, H.A. Gunners, F. Doyle, H.A.; J. McLaughlin, H.A.; J. Brown, H.A.; and C. Harris, Batt. Art.—Ibid.

COMMERCIAL PRODUCTS OF THE MADRAS PRESIDENCY.—In fulfilment of the promise made in our last, we proceed to notice the tables which show the "Commercial products of the Madras Presidency," for the last four years. Exports on the whole are apparently on the decrease. In 1852-53, the total amount of merchandise exported was Rs. 3,28,50,486, while in 1855-56 the exports were only 2,91,70,903, showing a decrease of Rs. 26,79,581 in four years, the amount of exports during the intermediate years being respectively Rs. 2,99,77,350, and Rs. 2,39,48,083. The imports on the other hand exhibit a steady increase. In 1852-53, the total amount of merchandise imported into the Madras territories, was Rs. 1,27,72,232; in 1853-54, Rs. 163,52,337; in the succeeding year there was an increase of Rs. 27,72,625, and in 1855-56, the imports amounted to Rs. 2,31,33,876, showing an increase over the preceding year of Rs. 40,08,914. The principal exports consisted in cotton, wool, indigo, rice (Oryza Sativa), and sugar. Of the former there were exported during the last four years to the United Kingdom, Ceylon, China, Bengal, Bombay, Indian French Ports, Malacca Straits, Travancore, and Germany, 15,52,56,697 lbs. valuing Rs. 1,80,91,229. Of indigo, 1,41,50,332 lbs. were exported, chiefly to the United Kingdom, France, the sister Presidencies, Indian French ports, America, and the Arabian and Persian gulfs, from 1852-53 till 1855-56, inclusive, valued at Rs. 1,35,86,681. To the United Kingdom, Arabian and Persian Gulfs, Ceylon, France, Mauritius, Pegu, West Indies, Bombay, Cutch, Goa, Malacca Straits, Indian French Ports, Sind, Travancore, China, Bourbon, there were exported 23,13,665 qrs. of rice, valued at Rs. 2,11,28,930. During the last four years 15,66,633 cwt. valued at Rs. 1,05,88,378, of sugar, were exported from the Madras territories, chiefly to the United Kingdom, Bombay, Ceylon, New South Wales, Arabian and Persian Gulfs, Siam, Rangoon, Indian French Ports, and Cutch. The total amount of treasure (gold, silver, and copper) exported during the four years was Rs. 2,66,32,38, exclusive of a sum of Rs. 6,14,637 in silver on Company's account. The amount of treasure imported in 1852-53 was Rs. 1,08,78,112; in 1853-54, Rs. 1,10,60,291; in 1854-55, only Rs. 64,81,955; but in 1855-56, the imports amounted to Rs. 1,37,16,606; of which Rs. 22,51,900 was gold, Rs. 1,14,58,386 silver, and Rs. 6,410 in copper.—Examiner, March 10.

HYDERABAD DISTRICTS.—Orders have, we believe, been issued by the Government of India, directing that Mr. F. N. Maltby, the Financial and Judicial Commissioner of the Assigned Districts at Hyderabad, should take up his permanent residence in a more central position than Bolarum. It is therefore likely that Mr. Maltby and his establishment will leave the latter station almost immediately, and take up head-quarters at Hingolli, Jaulnah, or Aurungabad. Strange to say, nothing seems yet known as to who will be Mr. Bushby's successor at the Hyderabad residency.—Spectator, March 12.

MADRAS TROOPS TO CHINA.—A wing of the 12th, without a brigadier, a brigade major, or any staff (as originally ordered), is to proceed in the Zenobia to join the detachments already in China. There will be in China, despatched from Singapore and Madras, a portion of the 38th and a portion of the 29th, a portion of the 12th and the 14th regiments, to be commanded by whoever may chance to be the senior officer.—Madras Spectator, February 23.

A ST. THOMAS' MOUNT correspondent thus writes to the Athenæum:—"A horrible accident took place at the laboratory belonging to the artillery depot at this station, on Thursday evening last, by which Store-sergeant Alexander Struthers is maimed for life. In the manipulation of a quantity of percussion-cap powder, a grit in the meal (it is supposed) caused it to explode, when the sergeant was dreadfully shattered. One of his hands was smashed as if a large waggon-wheel had rolled over it. His toes have been amputated, and his person is scarcely recognizable. His watch was broken to pieces; and the laboratory was spotted with blood, and studded with broken pieces of glass from the shattered windows. Sergeant Struthers has since died.

THE LOAN.—The commercial reporter of the Athenæum says that four lacs of rupees have been subscribed to the new five per cent. loan.

CAPT. GREENLAW'S TALBTYPE VIEWS.—Among the most interesting specimens of art in the Exhibition must be placed the numerous Talbotype pictures furnished by Capt. Greenlaw. We (Athenæum) have seldom passed a pleasanter or more interesting hour than we did the other day amongst the ruins, the rocks, and temples of Bijanuggur, reproduced in so astonishing a manner upon the Talbotype of Capt. Greenlaw. Were a series of views of this description taken all over India, it would save much useless trouble in travelling; for, of course, the Talbotype in the hand of one who knows how to use it, is the thing represented itself.

THE Athenæum March Summary says,—We have just heard, with extreme regret, of the death of Mr. Fraser, editor of the Spectator, after a few hours' illness.

MESSRS. SANDERS AND MITCHELL'S PLAN FOR A PIER AT MADRAS has been approved. "The plan is simply for constructing a pier on piles across the surf, the materials being wrought-iron and Baltic timber with cast-iron screws on the foot of the piles. The pier is in the shape of the letter T, the head being parallel to the coast. The width of this pier head is 40 feet, and the length of the main pier, or that part which connects it with the shore, is 960 feet; thus making the end of the pier exactly 1,000 from high-water mark on the beach, the height of the platform above the ordinary high-water mark being 15 feet." The pier will make Madras accessible.

TAX ON DATES.—In answer to an inquiry from Government, the acting collector of Guntur, explained that an item, "tax on small dates used for basket-work," was collected from the wandering tribe of Yetalas and others who gather twigs near the coast. Mr. Newill and the Board of Revenue recommended the abolition of the tax, and Government, taking into consideration the smallness of the amount collected (Rs. 193 on an average of three years) and the poor condition of the payers, directed its abolition from Fusly 1267.

THE Spectator says: "We do not remember to have seen it stated before, in any of the presidency journals, that Mr. W. E. Jellicoe, late of the civil service, has accepted employment in connection with the Church Missionary Society, and that he has been appointed to assist the Rev. R. T. Noble in the Native English School of Masulipatam."

MILITARY ON DITS.—The 1st Madras Fusiliers have received orders to proceed to Bushire as soon as practicable.—A wing of H.M.'s 43rd Regiment will be ordered to the Presidency for garrison duty.—The left wing of H.M.'s 43rd left that place on the 9th of March for the Presidency.—The 39th N.I. have received orders to leave Bangalore for Vellore.—We learn that the 8th Light Cavalry is expected to arrive at Bangalore on the 24th March.—The 3rd Light Cavalry, it is reported, will leave Bangalore on 28th idem. The 6th and 44th regiments have received orders to be prepared to embark at the shortest notice. Their destination, at present is Rangoon, but under existing circumstances, it may be anywhere: it is, as likely as not, to be changed at the last moment.—The 5th infantry of the Hyderabad Contingent was to March from Bolarum for Hingolli.—The 6th infantry moving from Lingasongoor to Balarum commenced its March on the 21st March.—The 14th Madras N.I. are said to have received orders to prepare for service in China.

A SECUNDERABAD correspondent states that it is expected the electric telegraph will be at work at that place on the 10th or 15th of the present month.

A LAWRENCE ASYLUM is in course of formation at Ootacamund on the Neilgherry Hills.

A MEETING took place on March 9th, at Messrs. Pharoah's new premises, for the purpose of adopting an address, and considering in what shape a testimonial should be presented to Sir William Burton, who is about to leave Madras. Mr. Orme took the chair. An address was read and adopted, and the following gentlemen were voted a deputation to present it.—Messrs. F. Orme, J. B. Pharoah, D. Shaw, W. Grant, P. Orr, A. J. Johannes, A. M. Simpson, G. G. Richardson, R. P. Campbell, T. Williamson, A. French, and H. Branson. It was resolved that subscription-lists should be opened for purchasing a piece of plate, or some other suitable testimonial, and Rs. 905 were subscribed on the spot.

PHOTOGRAPHY.—Mr. W. Pigon, Photographer to the Bombay Government, is engaged in taking photographs of the palace, Hindoo temples, and other curiosities in Mysore, and its vicinity.

HYDERABAD (March 6th).—Mr. Mayes, the Superintendent of Electric Telegraphs, was busily engaged in connecting the line from Kurnool to Benares, via Hyderabad, Wurungul, and Nagpore, and hoped to have the line to Hyderabad at work in about a month.

AKYAB.—The following is from Akyab, the 13th instant:—"Captain Faithful, our P. A. C. has just returned from the district: he reports that one of our savage border tribes, the Kains, are in a state of great insubordination. Whilst in camp, about 100 miles up the Kaladyne river, he, with his party, consisting of four Burkundazes, was surrounded at night by some hundreds of these savages. On his expostulating that he could not communicate with them whilst they had arms in their hands, they replied they had armed themselves on account of his having come to make war with them; on this being denied, he was requested, if he had not come to fight them, to join and fight with them against another tribe, with whom they were at variance. Not deeming it prudent, I presume, to come to an open rupture with so powerful an enemy, he acceded to this proposition. After this, a musket was discharged at Capt. Faithful, when within five yards of him, which providentially missed him, giving him the opportunity to escape during the night from the vicinity of such undesirable friends. Lieut. McLeod, with about thirty men of the Arrakan local battalion, has been since dispatched to the seat of disturbance. This, it would appear, is a very inadequate force to deal with a whole population, which appears to be in a state of excitement and hostility. I hear that Major Sutherland has recommended that a line of frontier stations be established, as the only means of preventing these dangerous neighbours exceeding proper bounds.

MUTINY.—We regret to learn from our Mount Road contemporary, that the 1st regiment of Native Infantry, under marching orders from Vizianagram to Kurnool, mutinied on the 28th ultimo. The regiment arrived at Vizianagram two years ago, on their return from foreign service in Burmah, and during their stay at the former station had been employed in Kinedy. They were to march forthwith to Kurnool, to relieve the 17th N.I., under orders for Burmah; but some difficulty having been experienced in procuring sufficient carriage for the families, orders were issued that these were to remain behind, until bandies were obtained, some of the men from each company being told off to take care of them. Having been paraded for the march at three in the morning, the men resolutely refused to obey the orders of Colonel Goldsworthy, repeatedly issued, to fix bayonets and shoulder arms. On being harangued by their commanding officer, who rose, we believe, to the rank of field officer in the regiment, they replied by shouts of derision, and would not leave without their families. A sepoy in the ranks was ordered into confinement, but it being evident that an attempt would be made to rescue him, he had to be released. The native commissioned and non-commissioned officers were called to the front and addressed by their commanding officer, but they were either unable or unwilling to assist in bringing the men to a proper sense of duty. We cannot help thinking, with our contemporary, "that the unanimity with which the orders were disobeyed, was a convincing proof that the thing was preconcerted," and that "without help from them it could never have been so well prearranged." The brigadier hastened to the parade-ground, and, with much difficulty, induced the men to march a mile or two out of cantonments, and there wait in camp till carriage should be procured. We trust that the conduct of these men will be speedily punished with all the severity the occasion demands. The regiment has just been ordered, we observe from last evening's Gazette, to march to Secunderabad instead of Kurnool. The officers present on parade on the 28th ultimo, were Col. Goldsworthy, Lieuts. Farquhar (adjutant), Newdick, Gompertz (quartermaster); Ensigns Tindel and Hodges,—not a single captain, be it remarked! Need we wonder that Government are now reaping as they have sown.—Spectator.

GOVERNMENT-GENERAL ORDER.

MOVEMENTS OF CORPS.

Fort St. George, March 10, 1857.—The following movements of Corps are ordered:—

Left Wing H.M.'s 43rd Regt. L.I. from Bangalore to Fort St. George.

1st Madras Fusiliers from Fort St. George to Bushire on Field Service.

1st Regt. N.I. from Kurnool to Secunderabad.

31st Regt. L.I. from Field Service Northern Division to Vizianagram, to be there stationed.

49th Regt. N.I. from Secunderabad to Kurnool.

A Company 3rd Bn. Arty. including Horse Field Battery Establishment and Guns to remain at Bombay.

COURT MARTIAL.

ASSISTANT-SURGEON CHARLES EDWARD PLUNKETT JOHNSTON.

Head-quarters, Rangoon, Jan. 7th, 1857.—At a general court martial, held at Rangoon, on Jan. 2nd, 1857, Asst.-Surg. C. E. P. Johnston, Madras Med. Estab. in Med. charge 45th M.N.I., was arraigned on the following charge:—

Charge.—For conduct unbecoming the character of an officer, and to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, in having at Rangoon, on Sept. 3rd, 1856, been in a state of intoxication at the mess-table of the 45th M.N.I., and thereby incapacitated himself from the performance of medical duties.

Finding.—Guilty.

Sentence.—To be reprimanded, and further to be placed ten steps lower than the position he now holds in the list of assistant-surgeons on the Madras Med. Estab.

Rangoon, Jan. 3rd, 1857.

Confirmed.—But notwithstanding some extenuating circumstances by the prisoner, I consider the sentence very inadequate. The degrading vice of intemperance is sufficiently reprehensible in any gentleman, but in a medical officer, liable at any moment to be called upon to discharge professional duties, it is not to be tolerated.

Assist. Surg. C. E. P. Johnston is not to be again intrusted with an independent medical charge, until he proves, by a lengthened course of irreproachable conduct, that he can be safely placed in a position of such responsibility. Assist. Surg. Johnston is released from arrest, and he will do duty in the Pegu division until further orders. A report on his conduct is to be made monthly to the Adjutant-General of the army, for my information, until further orders.

(Signed) PAT. GRANT, Lieut.-Gen., Com.-in-Chief.

Rangoon, Jan. 7, 1857.

Assist. Surg. Johnston's name is to be transposed in the list of assistant surgeons, and will stand in future next below Assist. Surg. C. Drew.

THE HYDERABAD DISASTER.

Macaulay remarks that Englishmen never introduce a reform till the necessity is evident—never innovate beyond the exact point required by the emergency. This temperament he considers among the causes of the permanence and freedom of our constitution. It has, however, its disadvantages. Nothing is improved till a disaster has occurred. No railway doors are unlocked till a bishop has been burnt. For nearly a century we have been sending Europeans into the field. For nearly a century their families have on such occasions been reduced to distress which demanded the aid of private charity. No catastrophe has occurred, and the old want of system is allowed heedlessly to continue. At last, at the beginning of a great war, we have a scene such as that which recently occurred at Hyderabad, and which the Scindian so honourably exposed. The official minutes on the subject have been published; and we have at last the whole of a tale as disgraceful as any occurrence in the Crimea.

The 2nd European regiment marched from Hyderabad for Persia on the 14th of October, leaving in dépôt their incapables and families. The former were lodged in one of the barrack rooms, and the latter in their own houses in the Patcherry; a native guard being mounted for their protection. Their rations were supplied by the commissariat. From the first, however, the simplest arrangements for their comfort were neglected. The officer left in charge, Lieut. Ledwith, received indeed a roll of the unfits, but was not informed even of the number of the women and children, much less of the remittances he was to receive for their support; for this, Lieut.-Colonel Ramsay, the commanding officer, was responsible. After the departure of the regiment, the hospital continued open for the use of the men and women, but though considerable sickness prevailed at the time, Staff Surgeon Remington thought fit to employ the head matron of the hospital in his own family. In the mean time, Assistant Surgeon James, in charge of the hospital, allowed young unmarried officers to accompany him in his visits to the female-ward of the hospital after ten o'clock at night. The women were dressed, and there was a kind of reason for the visit; but the effect was that in two instances women would not enter the hospital, in order to avoid the intrusion of strangers. When the unfits were removed, it seems to have been supposed by the local authorities that the dépôt was broken up. Accordingly, the women were literally turned out of the hospital, and one died within twenty-four hours. The remainder had no rations, no medicine, and a very insufficient supply of money. The only man who seems to have acted with common humanity is the Rev. Mr. Gell, who addressed himself to the officer in command, on behalf of the starving. The superintending surgeon issued no definite order as to what establishment should be kept up for the female-ward, nor did Mr. Remington take upon himself the light responsibility of its institution. The only relieving feature in this distressing case is the impartiality with which punishment has been dealt out. Lieut.-Col. Ramsay has been removed from the command of the regiment. Dr. James has lost his situation as civil surgeon at Hyderabad. Doubtless Dr. Rooke, the superintending surgeon, and Assistant-Surgeon Remington will not have received the whole of their punishment in the severe reprimand which has been already administered.

Rations also have been granted to the women, and for the present the distress has ceased. The reform, however, only meets the present evil. There ought to be distinct rules applicable whenever the Europeans proceed on service. If the wives of the soldiers are to be recognized by the State, they should be cared for as thoroughly as their husbands. They should always receive rations as matters of right, and not as matters of favour. Some one officer should be deputed to provide for their wants as part of his official duty, and thus rid us at once of vague culpabilities. It is a permanent rule, not a philanthropic minute, that is required—an army reform, and not an act which, greatly as it redounds to the credit of Lord Elphinstone, is after all one of official almsgiving.

REPORT ON TELEGRAPHS FOR 1855.

From the first part of a retrospective report by Dr. W. B. O'Shaughnessy, superintendent of electric telegraphs in India, on the operations of the electric telegraph in India, from the 1st February, 1855, to 31st January, 1856, we learn that the total number of despatches transmitted for Government and for the public in each month, and for every office, amounted to 9,971. Of this number, 8,533 were paid for on private business, and 1,438 sent on public service, and not paid for in cash. Of the 8,533 paid despatches, 2,864 have been sent by native correspondents, or more than one-third of the whole number. Dr. O'Shaughnessy has every reason to conclude that the future income of the department will increase far beyond all his anticipations. While the European community are, he observes, comparatively a very limited class, the native merchants, bankers, fundholders, and gentry may be considered as innumerable. The number of native correspondents is accordingly increasing daily. Not only do they use the lines for financial business, but on the most delicate and secret matters affecting family arrangements, betrothals, marriages, and other domestic affairs, of which they treat with an absence of all disguise which is almost beyond belief. The total amount of cash received for messages, including messenger-hire, from February to July inclusive, is Rs. 60,534-7-0. The amount in the month of May, Rs. 8,635-4-0; and the remarkable increase in June to Rs. 10,181-14-0, and July to Rs. 10,823-6-0, is accounted for by the commercial messages in May being reduced over 25 per 100, attributable to a successful intrigue devised by the native establishment in the Calcutta telegraph office, to keep off native correspondents, till a paid interpreter was sanctioned for the office in question. From a table of monthly returns it appears that the Calcutta office alone returns a monthly average of Rs. 4,432-12-0; Bombay, Rs. 2,391-12-0; and Madras, Rs. 512-11-0. The important mart of Mirzapore returns a monthly average of Rs. 162-5-0; and the great military station of Poona only Rs. 53-9-0. Owing to the considerable employment of the line by the editors of the Delhi Gazette and Lahore Chronicle, the receipts have increased for the former from Rs. 155-13-0 in February to Rs. 443-4-0 in July; and for the latter during the same period from Rs. 121-1-0 to Rs. 411-8-0. The service despatches, we are told, are charged exactly as commercial despatches, at repetition prices, and are brought to credit on receipts granted by the despatching authorities. Thus the receipts in cash have been Rs. 60-534-7-0; the value of service despatches Rs. 24-288-0-0; making a total of Rs. 84,822-7-0. The average monthly value of work is set down at Rs. 14-137-1-0; and the probable minimum annual receipts at Rs. 169-644-14-0. The superintendent, moreover, observes that he is much deceived if the returns and value of actual work done for the first year do not attain at least Rs. 2,00,000. This does not include the value of new bulletins conveyed to the Governments and published free at Calcutta, Madras, Agra, and Lahore; and at the repeating-stations of Benares, Indore, and Bangalore; and lastly, no entry is made, or credit taken, for the very numerous messages constantly transmitted on the business of the telegraph department itself.

Regarding complaints of delays, errors, &c., Dr. O'Shaughnessy attributes it more to the system adopted by the senders. There are causes of delay and error, he writes, specially affecting the question, which explain the matter clearly. The arrival of the English or China Mails at Bombay, or the occurrence of opium-sales in Calcutta, causes a rush of business on the lines. Further, for economy's sake, these messages are cramped into a few obscure and enigmatical words, of which three-fourths are numerals; many of these are, from their similarity of spelling and sound, liable to be confounded with each other. By nearly all signalers on the line, such messages are regarded with aversion, as so many traps and riddles; and despite every amount of punishment, short of disbanding the establishment, they are shirked and mutilated through sheer dislike or unwillingness to apply to these despatches the attention they demand. The true practical bearing of these remarks is conclusively shown by the safety and precision with which the vast number of messages sent by native opium speculators are transmitted between Calcutta and Bombay. The native merchant never attempts the petty economy of four rupees on his really important despatch; and, following the invariable practice in their transaction of business, he expresses the sum concerned, twice, in two different forms, thus:—"Rupees eight hundred and thirty-four, or twice four hundred and seventeen." If the Europeans would adopt this practice, it is stated that their despatches could be transmitted as correctly. To sift this matter still more conclusively, Dr. O'Shaughnessy applied to the accountant-general of the N.W. Provinces for his experience of the line. Mr. Grant, whose telegraphic correspondence is the most extensive of that of any public functionary in India, as every second line of every despatch of his contains numerical details of great importance, affecting remittances, loans, exchanges, &c., writes that "one mistake occurred in October last year (1854), ten in the month of February (1st month of general business on the line), none in March, April, or May, one in June, and two in August." The superintendent considers Mr. Grant's evidence as conclusive of his view, and observes that when the telegraph gets fair play, it can do its work fairly in return. The messages sent by the European bankers, he says, might as well be in French or Latin as in the terms they habitually employ. The consequence is, disappointment to the sender, and discredit to the department. We are furthermore told that the work has been performed with some success as affects the general service of the community. Finding early in June that much confusion prevailed in the Bombay section of the line, and anxious to prevent any just cause of disappointment to the public, a circular was issued, advising the use of the line "as little as possible during the rains." The result, it appears, was a greater amount of business done and cash received, in June and July, than in the previous month, and also larger receipts in the Calcutta office than for any equal period since the lines were opened. Dr. O'Shaughnessy, in concluding his observations on the causes of errors and delays, observes—"I am far from wishing, in the slightest degree, to palliate the stupidity and criminal neglect which have disgraced some of our officers during the period under notice. This has been punished as far as the circumstances permitted, short of actually closing the bad offices, and thereby stopping the whole correspondence of the line. But despite all the natural and social difficulties we have to struggle with, I make no boast when I assert that we work as well at this moment, in any telegraphic system ever introduced, as any country has worked in double the period for which ours has been placed at the public service."—Bombay Times.

THE LONDON MAIL of Feb. 10 arrived at Bombay March 9 (per Ganges). The mail of March 10 left Suez March 22, for Bombay (per Bombay).

THE PROGRESS OF SIND.—A correspondent furnishes some account of progress in Sind. Col. Jacob has not yet left the province, but is expected to start every day. He takes with him a very large staff of officers. Plots of building ground in Kurachee are fast bought up by the new residents. Three or four cotton screws are on their way from England. A direct trade is to be commenced in seeds and saltpetre.

JAIL ACCOMMODATION.—So insufficient is the jail accommodation in the island of Bombay that the magistrate is compelled to send the prisoners in batches into the interior. Beggars cannot be punished, because there is no room for them in the jails, and the magistrate is compelled to let them off with an admonition.

THE RAJA OF BHOWNUGGER, in Guzerat, has established a school, and given Rs. 2,400 a year towards the support of education. The family of this chief was the first to put down the pirates of the seaboard, and to co-operate heartily with the British Government in the suppression of infanticide.

M. SVOBODA, a painter at the presidency, has succeeded in taking photographs of the caves at Elephanta. The pictures are 10½ inches by 14, and are described as admirable. The grain of the stone is given exactly, and the pictures far surpass in fidelity any paintings yet made of these caves. M. Svoboda is selling prints from these photographs.

THE NATIVES OF INDIA AND ANGLO-SAXONS.—A writer in the Bombay Times, who maintains that the natives of India are equal to the Anglo-Saxon race in capacity for civilization, gives the following list of Indian conquerors: "Zenghis, Timour, Baber, Akbar, Shivajee, Bajecrow, Nana Furnavese, Mahadjee Sindhia, and a host of others." The first three were not natives at all. Akbar had probably not a drop of Indian blood in his veins. Bajee Row was an imbecile Hindoo, and Nana Furnavese, though really a great man in his own line, was only a financier.

THE BOMBAY BANK.—We perceive a statement published by the directors of the Bombay Bank that the net profits of that institution have doubled since 1841. They now amount to Rs. 4,86,390 a year. The business has also more than doubled. The shareholders have refused to allow the directors any remuneration.

INCOME TAX.—The native justices of Bombay are anxious to raise their municipal revenue by means of an income tax. It is calculated that a tax of one and a half per cent. would yield four or five lakhs a year. This calculation must be exaggerated unless all incomes are included, even those earned by daily labour. We hope the Legislature will refuse the request. It is pleasant to find natives sensible of the justice of this impost, but folly to fling away our only remaining chance of an addition to the imperial revenue.

MR. E. I. HOWARD has been confirmed in the appointment of director of public instruction.

THE SOUTHERN MAHARATTA HORSE, and details of the Poona irregulars, are waiting at Panwell for transport to the gulf. Col. Malcolm is in command.

THE BOMBAY ASSOCIATION have despatched a petition by this mail to the Imperial Parliament relative to the reports of the commissioners appointed by her Majesty for the reform of the judicial establishments, codes of procedure, and laws of India.

A LARGE FORCE is assembling at Dera Ghazee Khan, consisting of artillery, cavalry, and infantry, for the purpose of punishing the Bozlar tribe, on the other side of the hills. The force will have to fight its way through the hills. It is under the command of Brigadier Chamberlain, which is a good guarantee for the success of the expedition.

THE NORTH-WESTERN BANK OF INDIA has declared a dividend of seven per cent. per annum, for the half year ending 31st December, payable on and after the 12th March.

SCARCITY OF WATER IN BUSHIRE.—The following is the translation of a letter written by a Hindustanee gentleman at Kurachee:—"Information has reached this place that in consequence of the scarcity of water in and around Bushire, orders have been issued for conveying a supply of it from this station in jars. Accordingly a great number of large earthen vessels are being filled with water, and despatched in country ships and small craft. It is delightful to contemplate the flutter and excitement into which the merchants and traders of this station and the country around have been thrown, since the possession and occupation of Bushire by British troops. In such numbers are they embarking for Bushire by day as well as by night, that you should call it a procession to some celebrated fair, that attracts to it crowds of people from all parts of the surrounding country. A certain Raices, or chief of this place, being lately fined fifty rupees for some delinquency, has prevailed upon the hill people, who are probably his dependants, not to carry grass for sale into the town, which has the effect not only of causing some loss to the public revenue, but of starving the horses of the inhabitants."

OFFICERS ON THE GENERAL STAFF.—We subjoin a list of the officers now on the General Staff, who will form a valuable addition to the 3rd European regiment, and 25th regiment N.I., under orders to proceed to Persia:—3rd European regt.—Major Stockley; Capt. Landon, Ramsay, Price, Rose, Hodgson, Mervether, Etheridge; Lieuts. Schneider, Dyett, Henry, Miles, Armstrong, Baignee, Mildway. 25th regt. N.I.—Capt. Preedy, Robertson, Playre, Marston, Nixon; Lieuts. Battye and Rose.

OFFICERS PLACED AT THE DISPOSAL OF GENERAL OUTRAM.—We observe it stated that, amongst the officers whose services have been placed at the disposal of General Outram, the following have been selected for the command of the Arab levies that are to be organized in Persia by Brigadier-General Jacob, C.B.:—Capt. L. Pelly, 17th Bom. N.I.; Capt. E. P. Arthur, 1st Lt. Cav.; Major W. H. R. Green, 19th N.I.; Lieut. G. Nicoletta, 1st Fusiliers; Lieut. G. W. Macauley, 17th Bom. N.I.; Lieut. F. H. M. FREIGHTS.

Our quotations are, to London and Liverpool, 3l. to 3l. 10s. per ton.

IMPORTS (Bombay, March 18).—Cotton Piece Goods.—Since the despatch of last Mail very little business has been transacted, owing to the intervention of the Hoolie holidays, which caused all doing to be suspended for a week. Fancy Goods.—The market has been dull, except for articles of low qualities. Cotton Yarns.—This article is dull, and no sales have been effected with the exception of a hundred bales. The market, however, is soon expected to resume an active appearance. Metals.—An improvement has taken place in all descriptions except Swedish bar iron. We quote British bar at Rs. 35½ to Rs. 36, and Swedish bar at Rs. 60 to 65 per candy. Spelter is in good demand, as also pig lead, of which latter the stock is very light.

EXPORTS (Bombay, March 18).—Cotton Wool.—There has been a further advance in the value of new crops of Rs. 2 to Rs. 3; but the old crops have declined by three to four rupees. We quote new Oomeravuttee at Rs. 125, old Compta at Rs. 113, Surat and Broach at Rs. 138-39, new Dhollera at Rs. 131-32, new Mangarole at Rs. 122-23, old Sawginned at Rs. 125. Hemp.—Arrivals of this article continue to be large, and the value has risen from two to three rupees per candy. Oil Seeds.—The prices have further risen from ten to eleven annas per cwt. notwithstanding the fact of the supplies being very large. Linseed is in active inquiry; Teel seed continues steady in prices, and is in moderate demand.

LOSS OF THE SHIP "SUMATRA."

The ship Sumatra, Captain Johnson, belonging to Messrs. Tindall, from London, bound to Colombo, was totally wrecked on the Great Bases on the 15th ultimo, all hands being saved by the Futteh Rohaman. We do not clearly comprehend how a ship from the southward bound to Colombo, managed to get so far to the eastward and northward of her port, nor does the captain explain it by any means satisfactorily in the account he has furnished of the circumstances attending the wreck.

At four P.M. the ship's presumed position by the mean of three chronometers was east long. 82° 44'; while she was known to be in north lat. 6° 9', for of course there could be no mistake on that point. For the next two hours and a half, or till 6:30 P.M., the ship was steered north, which, with the moderate breeze described, would carry her fifteen miles, or a little to the north of the parallel of the Great Bases in 6° 24'—and when she got to this position, her course was changed to "west a little southerly," which was precisely the very direction to steer, had the captain's object been to run right on the Basses.

The captain says he was out in his longitude about a degree, the Great Basses being in $81^{\circ} 49'$, but we have doubts on this subject, for at 4 P.M. he saw the land bearing N.W. by N., which from the ship's true position must have been the coast in the vicinity of Palatupan E. long. $81^{\circ} 31'$, N. lat. $6^{\circ} 18'$, or actually distant from the big end of the captain's telescope about 17 miles, whereas if he placed faith in his chronometers, as he would lead us to suppose, he must have imagined the land he saw, to be distant about 72 miles! Few nautical eyes, we venture to say, would make a blunder of this kind, and therefore, we suspect, the chronometers were all nearly right, and if a correct calculation had been made, they would have shown the ship's position to have been exactly where she really was, namely one degree further west, or say respectively $81^{\circ} 49'$, $81^{\circ} 46'$ and $81^{\circ} 38'$.

But admitting the chronometers to have been all out, the latitude at any rate was right, and as Dondra Head is in N. lat. $5^{\circ} 59'$, what business had a ship bound to Colombo in $6^{\circ} 50'$ on the west side of Ceylon to be in N. lat. $6^{\circ} 24'$ on the east side of Ceylon with studding-sails set!

The following is the captain's account of the matter, which we take from a Ceylon paper:—

"Wind N.N.E., P.M., moderate breeze, cloudy weather, all sails set to best advantage. Wind N.E. at 4 P.M., weather moderate, the land bearing N.W. by N. at 6:30 P.M. the weather being very thick ahead, in all studding-sails and stay-sails, and kept the ship very handy, with a good look out ahead; supposing the ship to be to the southward of the Great Basses, steered W. a little southerly, expecting a strong current setting to the southward; at 8:30 P.M. saw breakers right ahead, and on the lee bow; put the helm hard a port, but being so close, she struck immediately. Tried every means to back her off with the sails, but to no avail. Lowered the quarter-boats, and got all the passengers into them, and sent them clear of the ship, as I was expecting the masts to go over the sides every moment, the ship rolling heavily. After a great deal of difficulty, got the long-boat out, and the remainder of crew got into her, and left the ship at 1:30 A.M.; kept close to the ship till morning. At daylight the captain got on board the ship again. At 7 A.M. in sight ship to eastward, made signals of distress, which were answered; at 8:30 A.M. she hove to as near the Great Basses as possible; we steered towards her with two of the boats under sail, and one in tow of the life-boat; at 9 A.M. we got on board the Fellah Rahaman. Captain Abdul Sultan, from Calcutta, bound to Juddah; and from him we received every kind assistance, and he landed us at Point de Galle, on the 17th inst. at 3 P.M.

"Being so very thick ahead, the water also very smooth, and having no wind, we could not have seen the breakers till we were close into them; we had also taken sight by the chronometers at 4 P.M. which placed us considerably to the eastward of our real position—lat. at 4 P.M. $6^{\circ} 9' N.$; long. by chronometer $576, 82^{\circ} 49'$; chronometer 902, $82^{\circ} 46' E.$; chronometer 2,706, $82^{\circ} 38' E.$ "—Hurkaru.

THE "MOORMEN" of Colombo have for some time been divided into two parties. There are two mosques in the town. One faction holds that the mosques should be opened on alternate Fridays, as it is improper for Mussulmans to have two places of worship open in the same town on the same day. The other faction holds that it is quite proper, because the two parties cannot worship together in peace. Accordingly they made preparations for a formidable riot; but all their priests and many of the ring-leaders were arrested by the police. There were 3,000 men engaged on each side.

THE REVENUE.—As the Colombo Observer some time ago anticipated, the revenue of Ceylon for 1856 has exceeded half a million sterling.

THE "SUMATRA."—The same paper, of the 23rd Feb., learns that Major Skinner boarded the Sumatra, and found twelve feet of water in the hold. A vessel has been chartered, and Capt. Johnstone has gone to Galle to proceed in her to save all that is valuable.

A COURT OF ENQUIRY was sitting to investigate a dispute between two military officers. Mr. John Selby, the editor of the Examiner, had stated that in his hearing Lieut. Sillery, C.R.R. made use of words highly derogatory to the character of Lieut. Bolton, R.A. Lieut. Sillery denies that he uttered the expressions attributed to him.

CHINA.

COOLIE MASSACRE.—The Friend of China announces another Coolie massacre. The Anais, a French vessel, left Swatow with a cargo of Chinese for Havannah. The day after their departure, the master was cut down with a hatchet, the officers and some of the crew were despatched in detail. The Chinese then beached the vessel, and escaped. The remainder of the crew are in the hands of the villagers, and will be massacred. There is too much reason to fear that all these coolies are decoyed on board on pretence of proceeding to the Straits.

CABUL.

THE LATE INTERVIEW BETWEEN DOST MAHOMED AND SIR JOHN LAWRENCE.

We (Delhi Gazette, March 3) have received our Cabul letter; it is dated the 18th January:—

I have already informed you what has been thought and talked regarding the Ameer's visit to the Chief Commissioner of the Punjab. I will record the reports in circulation relative to their conversations and the arrangements believed to have taken place between the Ameer and the British representative at Peshawur; some of them are old friends with a new face; and some rumours groundless enough perhaps, but indicative of the thoughts of the people.

The Ameer told Sir John Lawrence that he was ready to fight the Persians; to which the chief replied that he did not think he (the Ameer) could successfully oppose them, as neither his funds nor his army would enable him to do so. Sir John added, if the British were to supply money and soldiers, the Ameer might make head against the Shah with some prospect of success. This way of putting the facts did not suit the Ameer, who replied that the Chief Commissioner would do well to leave him to arrange his affairs at Cabul and Candahar, and march the English troops to Frah, where the Russians would be found.

It is said the Chief Commissioner was desirous that the Ameer should allow him to nominate two English officers to remain, the one at Cabul and the other at Balkh, to forward to their Government reports of the events occurring in those quarters. The Ameer seemed reluctant to concede this point, and objected that he would be unable to protect these officers against the hostility of the people. It was at once retorted, if the Ameer be unable to protect the persons of two English officers against the prejudices of his own subjects, how could he influence those subjects to contend against Persia? Sir John Lawrence also added, that if agencies were sanctioned, Foujdur Khan was to reside at Cabul, and the agent of the Ameer at Peshawur would receive the amount of twelve lakhs per annum for his highness, in consideration of his resisting the intrigues of Persia.

The following is the purport of the treaty of alliance which has lately been contracted between the Ameer and the British Government. The source from which the information is derived is not entirely unexceptionable.

First.—The Ameer is to watch the progress of the Persians.

Second.—An agent on the part of the English will remain at the court of Cabul, and one on the part of the Ameer is to reside at Peshawur.

Third.—Two or three English officers are to remain at Candahar.

Fourth.—The Ameer is to receive twelve lakhs per annum from the British Government for his co-operation against the foreign invaders.

Fifth.—In case of intestine discord in Afghanistan, the British Government will not interfere.

Sixth.—If the Shah of Persia give up Herat to the Affghans, whether to the Ameer or any other Affghan chief, the misunderstanding between the English Government and Persia will cease.

Seventh.—In case the Shah should persist in keeping possession of Herat, the English will undertake to drive the Persians thence.

There is a rumour that the general commanding at Peshawur was so much enraged by the murder of one of his officers in the vicinity of the Ameer's camp and boundary, that he had predetermined not to allow his highness to leave Peshawur before he obtained the extradition of the culprit. But the officers of the politicals arranged the matter. We hear that some Affghans of the Kookhee Kheyl clan have been apprehended at Peshawur, and have repudiated the charge on behalf of their tribe, accusing followers of the Ameer of the crime. This annoyed the Ameer very much, and roused him to declare that if the murderer be not traced and given up, it will be the worse for the whole clan, every family of which run the risk of being extirpated in expiation of the crime.

The Ameer did not approve of the sale of the horse which he gave to the chief commissioner, and especially when he heard that the animal had been purchased and bedstrid by Nizam-ool-Dowla.

The Ameer has advised the chief that the officers who are to proceed to Candahar should doff the English uniform, and travel in disguise, to avoid the risks of murder by fanatics on the road.

BURMAH.

THE REBEL LEADER MIN LOUNG.

WE have received Rangoon papers to the 25th and Maulmein to the 21st February. From the latter we extract the following intelligence respecting the rebel leader Min Loung, who, it will be remembered, lately attacked a detachment of H.M.'s 35th Regiment and a party of sepoys, in which three officers were seriously wounded, two European soldiers and several sepoys killed, and many others wounded:—

"The following is from a correspondent, dated Shoay-Gyeen, 14th February:—

"The left wing and head-quarters of the 37th Grenadiers arrived here on the 7th inst. Since their arrival here, the detachment at Bogata has been increased by an additional company, and another sent to Thansai, ten miles from here. This was done to prevent Min Loung making his escape.

"Yesterday a red Karen arrived here at six a.m., and offered to take the English force to Min Loung's retreat, provided he is paid well for the risks he will run by it, and further added, if he failed to do so, the English can string him up to the first tree. This offer was accepted by Lieut. Williams, officiating assistant commissioner, who intimated the same to the officer commanding the station. The latter immediately sent a force as follows:—Capt. Morton, commanding H.M.'s 35th regt.; sergeants, 2; rank and file, 40; 37th Grenadiers—1 subadar, 4 havildars, 1 drummer, 40 privates, and 1 bleestie; commissariat followers, 31. Total, 120.

"Min Loung is now 13 miles from Shoay Gyeen. He, with 60 Karens and 40 Shans, are concealed in a large cave between three immense ranges of hills. The situation of this cave, it is evident, forms a splendid and safe retreat for this rebel. Of the 700 or 800 followers he had some time ago, all have deserted him, and there only remains about 100. The Red Karen states that the situation of this cave is so very peculiar that it would defy our engineering skill to get at it; and this he states has always been the place of his retreat. It is almost directly east or south-east from this, in the direction of Bileng. In accordance with the request of the Red Karen, the officer commanding the station directed Capt. Morton to march the whole night (they left this about 4 p.m.); as soon as the moon rises, to lay the luggage and seven elephants which accompany them, about five miles from the cave, and then proceed towards it, ascend the hill, and then stay till the dawn of the next morn,—all this calculated to be completed in seven hours: from 4 to 6, and from 10 p.m. to 3 a.m. Taking into consideration that there is only a single individual pathway, and no regular road to get to this place, and the very dense jungle they have to pass through ere they can reach the hills that give retreat to Min Loung, and that the greatest of all difficulties is the ascent of the hills by the eighty-nine men forming the fighting men—without creating noise and alarm. After reaching the cave they are to wait as I said the dawn of day, and when this arrives, walk into Min Loung's cave and seize him—if possible without shedding blood—but should any resistance be offered, of course the ultimatum—shoot the followers, but not Min Loung, as they are very anxious to have him alive. The force left this yesterday about 4 p.m. We are anxiously waiting the result, and the issue we anticipate with great confidence will terminate very successfully. Captain Berdmore and his force are out searching for him more in the interior, and are therefore not aware of this movement.

"In the next I trust I will be able to give you full particulars of the capture of Min Loung, and a description of him."—Hurkaru, March 7.

SCINDE.

TENTS.—The Sindian reports that it is intended to introduce a great tent-manufactory into the Kurrachee jail. Teachers are to be imported from Jubbulpore. Tents are much wanted in the province. Those imported from Jubbulpore are expensive, and the Bombay tents are bad. The outlay required has been sanctioned.

MAURITIUS.

A TESTIMONIAL has been presented to Dr. J. R. Johnston, by his friends of Grand Fort, Mauritius, as a token of their esteem and regard for him during twelve years of his professional career amongst them. The gift is a piece of table plate, representing a banana-tree surmounted by a crystal tazza, &c., and bearing the inscription, "Au bon et charitable Dr. J. R. Johnston, ses amis du Grand Fort Ile Maurice, 1856." The plate has been executed in solid silver by Messrs. Smith, Nicholson, and Co., Duke Street, Lincoln's Inn.

Our friends who favour us with communications will greatly add to their obliging kindness by writing on one side only of their paper. All persons acquainted with the details of a printing-office know how much this promotes convenience.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON.

WEDNESDAY, April 15, 1857.

THE PERSIAN AMBASSADOR AND THE REPRESENTATIVES OF THE EAST-INDIA COMPANY.

AN exchange of visits has taken place between his Excellency the Persian Ambassador and the representatives of the East-India Company. On Tuesday, the 7th instant, the Chairman and the Deputy-Chairman called upon Ferouk Khan at Claridge's Hotel; and on the following day his Excellency returned the visit at the East-India House, where he was received in the court-room by the Chairman, Deputy-Chairman, and most of the members of the Court.

THE "CHAIRS" OF THE EAST-INDIA COMPANY.

AT a Court of Directors, held on the 9th instant, at the India House, Mr. R. D. MANGLES, M.P., was elected Chairman, and SIR FREDERICK CURRIE, BART., Deputy-Chairman of the East-India Company for the ensuing year. Both gentlemen are retired members of the Bengal Civil Service. Mr. Mangles proceeded to India in 1819, where, after filling various high offices, among which were those of Secretary to the Board of Revenue in the Lower Provinces and Secretary to the Government of India in the Revenue department, he finally became a member of the Board of Revenue. Returning to England in 1840, he resigned the service in 1844, and at the general election of 1847 obtained a seat in the Court of Directors. Sir Frederick Currie's date of appointment is somewhat earlier. In 1839 we find him filling the office of Secretary to Government in the North-west Provinces in some of the most important departments, and shortly after succeeding to the rank of Judge of the Sudder Court in the same provinces. In November, 1843, he was appointed Secretary to the Government of India in the Foreign department, and in that capacity accompanied Lord Hardinge in 1845 to the North-west, during the campaign of the Sutlej. For his services on that occasion he was, in the following year, created a baronet. On the 1st April, 1847, Sir F. Currie took his seat as a member of the Supreme Council, but resigned it in January, 1848, having immediately accepted the appointment of Commissioner and President at Lahore. On the 12th March, 1849, he resumed his place at the Council Board, from which he finally retired on the 1st May, 1853. In April, 1854, he was appointed one of the Government Directors of the East-India Company for a period of six years, under the provisions of the recent Act of Parliament. Although, therefore, both occupants of the chairs are members of the same service, it will be observed that the scenes of their respective labours, and the nature of the offices they held, were widely different. The appointment of Sir Frederick Currie to the deputy-chair is moreover noticeable as being the first occasion on which a Government nominee has been thus elected, and also on account of the unexampled early period after his accession to the Court at which it has taken place,—nine or ten years, instead of three, having heretofore been the usual length of service in the body of the Court before the chair could be attained.

THE CONSEQUENCES OF FAILURE IN THE SUPPLY OF COTTON.

NINETY years ago the annual value of all the cotton goods manufactured in Great Britain was estimated at £600,000. What is the annual value of the present amount of production it is very difficult to conjecture. It has been estimated at sums varying from forty to sixty millions. The highest of these is possibly an exaggeration; but if the lowest only be taken, it is awful to think of the number of persons who must be dependent on this branch of manufacture for their daily bread, and of the consequences that must ensue from any serious check to its prosperity. So long as we can supply goods to the extent which may be required at lower prices than those which must be paid elsewhere, we may hope to retain the practical monopoly which, through the unrivalled ingenuity of our artisans and our wonderful natural advantages, we now enjoy in almost every market in the world. But should any untoward event interfere to diminish our powers of production, the manufacturing districts of Lancashire and Scotland may become—what Ireland has become. Our dangers from competition are not perhaps great. There is abundant jealousy of us almost everywhere. On the Continent both governments and people are well disposed to obtain a share of our manufacturing trade, and of the opulence that flows from it. In America the feeling is still stronger. In the Northern States it has long prevailed, and it has now extended to the South, where in the cotton-growing states factories have more recently arisen to some extent, for the conversion of the raw material of the country into twist, and the various fabrics to which the article is applicable. But we repeat, that these indications of rivalry need not appal us, so long as we possess those advantages, moral and physical, which have raised the stupendous column of our manufacturing grandeur—our industry, energy, and enterprise; our capital and coal. True it is, that in regard to America we are under the disadvantage of being obliged to seek our raw material at a distance, and transport it over many miles of ocean to the spot whence after its form is changed, it has again to sustain a long and expensive voyage before the returns can be reaped. But this is counterbalanced by other circumstances, some of them most powerful elements of America's prosperity. The abundance of land and the high price of labour, which tend so powerfully to avert the abject wretchedness which is too common in older states, operate unfavourably for any extensive manufacturing development. It is known that some of the establishments in the Southern States are worked by slave labour; but to slave labour there is a limit; and under any sound view America will do well for some time to come in applying her capital and her industry chiefly to agriculture. In striving to rival Great Britain in manufacturing processes, she will injure herself much more than the object of her jealousy.

Still we are not justified in folding our arms in calm serenity, and concluding that the cotton manufacture is ours to the end of time, exclusively and in unimpaired prosperity. We may defy all competitors, and in a fair field be ready to vanquish them. Our exquisite and multiplied machinery, our wide-spread coalfields and numerous population, our vast monetary resources, may afford us a well-grounded human confidence in the stability of our manufacturing system. But there is one thing, within the verge of possibility, to say the least, which, should it occur, would strike it down at once—the failure of an adequate supply of cotton wool. Should this occur, our natural advantages would become either simply useless, or positively injurious and dangerous. Machinery rapidly passing to the condition of firewood and old iron; factories dropping to pieces brick by brick; mines unworked and filling with water; money unproductive to the few who should retain any; credit paralyzed, and all moveable capital making a quick transit from a country where it was useless to some place where it would yield a return. These would be some of the results of the stoppage of our cotton manufacture; while the population who had been attracted to its seats by the abundant demand for labour, but now starving, riotous, and prepared for any excess, would be the terror of the districts which they had previously contributed to enrich. Let it be considered, that the cotton manufacture is by far the greatest carried on in this great manufacturing country; let the local effect of the mere removal of manufactures of inferior extent and importance (as in Spitalfields) be brought to mind, and it will at once be perceived that this is not an overcharged picture. It may be added, in regard to one part of it, that the classes in the mill districts are collected from many different quarters, and are by no means of the most manageable character. They certainly would not perish in silence.

We may see, then, what is our position,—to what an extent we are dependent on an article which we cannot produce at home; an article absolutely necessary to our progress in wealth and power; absolutely necessary even to the maintenance of our present position; absolutely necessary to furnish the means of life to an immense portion of our entire population. We know something of the effects of commercial reverses; but happily we have as yet no experience of anything resembling the convulsion of society which would follow the destruction of the cotton manufacture of the country, or even its temporary suspension. Surely it becomes us to guard, by all the means in our power, against the occurrence of such a calamity. To have the means of repairing its effects, and to use them, would be something; but, supposing them repaired and prosperity restored, the amount of suffering during the interval of its suspension could never be compensated. We depend on America for an article which may almost be considered a necessary of life; for though not so in itself, it is that which gives the necessities of life to millions. Without attaching much importance to the rivalry of the Americans, and to the desire which certainly exists among a portion of them for working up their cotton at home in place of selling it to us, we cannot but see that there are circumstances in quite the ordinary course of things which may interfere with our supply. War may arise; bad seasons must occasionally occur; and, even on plain commercial principles, is it advisable that we should depend on a single source if we can extend the field of supply? This question has excited some interest, but by no means so much as it deserves. America may fail us; but whether it should or not, our policy is to multiply the sources whence the elements of our wealth are drawn. Can India afford us what we want in liberal quantity, and of the requisite quality? These are questions which we propose to take an early opportunity of discussing.

THE LATE FIRE IN LEADENHALL STREET.

It may be desirable to mention that the temporary obstruction to business caused by the late fire on the premises of Messrs. Wm. H. Allen and Co., the proprietors of this Journal and the well-known booksellers and publishers of the East-India Company, has been entirely removed, and that the affairs of the firm are carried on as usual at No. 7, Leadenhall-street. The fire broke out late on the evening of the 2nd instant, after the premises had been closed, and no clue to its origin has yet been traced. The estimated damage is considerable, no portion of the literary stock deposited on the ground-floor of the building having been saved. Among the books consumed or charred by the fire were sundry works rendered highly valuable from their scarcity, the loss of which is greatly aggravated by the destruction of a choice collection of Oriental manuscripts which had been accumulating for many years in the hands of this old-established firm.

EAST-INDIA HOUSE.—On the 8th inst. a Court of Directors was held at the East-India House, when the thanks of the Court were voted unanimously to Colonel William H. Sykes, M.P., chairman, and Mr. Ross Donnelly Mangles, M.P., deputy chairman, for their great application and attention to the affairs of the East-India Company during the past year. On Thursday, the 9th inst., a Court of Directors was held at the East-India House, when Mr. Ross Donnelly Mangles, M.P., was chosen chairman, and Sir F. Currie, Bart., deputy chairman, for the year ensuing.

ADDITIONAL MAIL TO JAVA.—Mails for Java will in future be made up in London, and forwarded by each despatch of the Overland Indian Mail.—Post Office Notice, April 6.

DIRECT CADETS.—The following gentlemen, having received appointments as direct cadets in the Indian service, passed the required examination on the 7th inst.:—Messrs. B. Princep, F. S. Cherry, J. L. G. O'Brien, T. A. Scott, R. C. Evanson, F. S. Fitz-Patrick, H. Barber, H. Gardiner, M. P. Moriarty, R. F. Burton, G. McKenzie, J. Affick, G. L. M. Parker; F. G. Lindsay and E. P. Gambier, Engineers.

A FREAK OF FORTUNE.—The Greenock Telegraph states that the distant relatives of a Calcutta merchant, recently deceased, who was a native of Rothesay, have just come to the knowledge that their ancestor, of whom they scarcely ever heard, had left the enormous fortune of 1,500,000*l.* bequeathed to those of his relations who can be discovered. Those already known number about thirty, and several of them are now resident in Greenock, Dumbarton, and Glasgow.

A CASE FOR THE BENEVOLENT.—An application was made to Mr. Burcham for a little pecuniary assistance to Mrs. Kelly, the mother of the late Lieutenant Kelly, a meritorious officer in the 62nd regiment, who was killed in the Sutlej war on Dec. 21, 1845. The case was recommended by Mr. J. Day, the assistant-overseer of St. George's, who had known her in the parish fifteen years, and could testify as to her good character and being deeply distressed; at the same time informing his worship that Mrs. Kelly had suffered a severe loss by the death of her son, as she nearly depended on him for support. It appears that Lieutenant Kelly served in the 13th Light Infantry with the army of the Indus, and in Afghanistan from 1838 to 1842, including the storming and capture of Ghuznee, the forts of Tooltumdarrah and Joolgah, the night attacks on the lines at Kardarrah, and other skirmishes. He was at the recapture of Cabul, and general action at Tazeen; and was killed in action in front of his regiment at the Sutlej. Mr. Burcham perused the letter sent by Mr. Day, and told the applicant that he was sorry he could not render any assistance to Mrs. Kelly, however worthy she might be of relief. He was sorry to say there were no funds in the poor-box.

MEDICAL, INVALID, and GENERAL LIFE

OFFICE, 25, FALM MALL, LONDON.

EMPOWERED BY SPECIAL ACT OF PARLIAMENT.

At the FIFTEENTH ANNUAL MEETING, held on 27th November, 1856, it was shown that on the 30th June last—

The number of Policies in force was 5,798

The Amount Insured was £2,752,197 7s. 2d.

The Annual Income was £119,557 10s. 2d.

Two Bonuses have been declared (in 1848 and 1853), adding nearly two per cent. per annum on the average to sums assured, and by which a Policy of £1,000 issued in 1842 on a healthy life, is now increased to £1,260.

Since the last division of Profits in 1853, the accumulated funds have increased by more than £105,000, offering considerable advantages to present assureds.

Profits divided every five years—next division in 1858.

The Society, since its establishment, has paid claims on 651 Policies, amounting to £254,008.

Assurances are effected at home or abroad on healthy lives at as moderate rates as the most recent data will allow.

Indian Assurances at very moderate rates, and great facilities given to assureds.

Invalid Lives assured on scientifically-constructed tables.

Policies issued free of stamp-duty, and every charge but the Premiums.

Agents wanted for vacant places.

Prospectuses, Forms of Proposals, and every other information, may be obtained of the Secretary, at the Chief Office, or on application to any of the Society's Agents in the country.

A Bonus of Twenty per cent. from realized profits has been declared for the present year to all policy-holders on the profit scale who have paid five years' premium.

The advantages of this Society are as follow:—

Low Rates of Premium, calculated on the best and most recent investigations of mortality in India.

Annual participation in the profits after payment of premium for five years, by parties assured on the profit scale.

Immediate reduction of premium to the English rates in the case of a party assured proceeding to Europe for a permanency, and reduction after one year in the case of the party visiting Europe for a short period.

The civil rate only charged on the lives of parties in the military service, holding civil offices, as long as they continue in such office.

The Society also grants Deferred Annuities and Endowments payable at any given period.

Tables and full information may be had at the Office in Chatham Place; or on application to the Secretaries at Calcutta, Messrs. GORDON, STUART, and Co.; or to the Agents of the Agra and United Service Bank, at the other Indian Presidencies.

A GRAMMAR OF THE HINDUSTANI LANGUAGE;

TO WHICH IS ADDED,

A GRAMMAR OF THE DAKHNI.

BY JOHN SHAKESPEAR.

. The First Part of this Work has been the class-book at Addiscombe for more than forty years past; and the Second Part, which explains the principles of the most prevalent language of the South of India, being the only systematic Grammar now to be obtained on that extensive dialect, will prove of especial advantage to Gentlemen proceeding to the Madras or Bombay Presidency.

By the same Author,

SHAKESPEAR'S DICTIONARY, HINDUSTANI and ENGLISH, as well as ENGLISH and HINDUSTANI. Fourth Edition, 1 vol. 4to., price £5. 6s.

. The First Part of this book comprises many thousand more words explained than does any other work of similar description.

SHAKESPEAR'S INTRODUCTION to the HINDUSTANI—designed especially for those who have no Instructor. 1 vol. royal 8vo., price £1. 10s.

. This single volume contains a HINDUSTANI GRAMMAR—A copious Vocabulary of the most useful Hindustani words—SHORT SENTENCES of common use—DIALOGUES—SHORT STORIES, in both Persian and Nagari characters, with Grammatical Analysis—HINDUSTANI COMPOSITION—FORMS of LETTERS and NOTES—GRAMMATICAL TERMS—MILITARY WORDS of COMMAND, English and Hindustani, in both Nagari and Roman characters.

SHAKESPEAR'S MUNTAKHABAT-I-HINDI; or, SELECTIONS in HINDUSTANI, with Verbal Translation and Grammatical Analysis, for the use of Students of that language. 2 vols. 4to., price £1. 10s.

. This work, which has passed through several large editions, has continued in constant use as the class-book at Addiscombe and elsewhere during the last forty years.

THACKER'S OVERLAND NEWS,
FOR INDIA AND THE COLONIES.

THE First Number of the Overland Newspaper, which is to supersede the CIRCULAR hitherto forwarded to India by Messrs. W. THACKER and CO., was published and will be continued upon the day of the departure of each succeeding Overland Mail.

ON THE 10TH OF JANUARY, 1857,

In entering upon the field of competition with established Journals having the same object in view, it will be required of Messrs. W. THACKER and Co. that they should explain on what peculiar ground they lay claim to public support.

Their long and intimate connection with the Anglo-Indian community entitles them to believe that every confidence will be placed in their assurance, that they will endeavour to deserve the preference they seek to obtain; but they are aware, that even amongst their oldest and warmest friends, some practical demonstration of an intention to achieve superiority is expected.

Messrs. W. THACKER and Co. beg, therefore, to state that in their OVERLAND NEWS they propose to aim at a more perfect CONDENSATION of General News than has hitherto been attempted, that they may be enabled to devote a greater portion of their space to COMMERCIAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

The peculiar constitution of British Society in India, and the immense impulse that has been given of late years to Railway Speculation, Agricultural Improvement, and Commercial Enterprise in that vast Empire, suggest the importance of a close attention to all these matters, which bear particularly on the interests of the great classes concerned.

From several channels of information, hitherto closed or neglected, the fullest details will therefore be sought.

LITERATURE in all its branches, as bearing essentially on the experience of Messrs. W. THACKER and Co., will receive, as hitherto, the minutest care; and as they have been able to secure the services of a gentleman who moves much in literary circles, occasional items of pleasant gossip, which do not find their way into the public journals, will embellish the pages of the OVERLAND NEWS.

Upon all subjects connected with Indian politics, the interests of the Services, contemplated Local Changes, the arrival in and departure from this country of Passengers, by Ship or Steamer, the retirement of Officers of all classes, &c., the greatest attention will be bestowed; while the intelligence from Europe, of a general nature, will be presented in a striking form, accompanied by such Commentaries as may be expected from the pen of an experienced Journalist.

In a word, Messrs. W. THACKER and Co. hope that their Paper will be all that the best papers have hitherto been—AND SOMETHING MORE.

The Publication will be of the same size as the ordinary English Overland Papers, viz., a folio of Twenty-four pages, with Supplements when necessary, and it will be issued in time for transmission to India by each Fortnightly Mail, via Marseilles. The Price, inclusive of postage, will be Rs. 8 per annum, payable in advance. Orders to be addressed to Messrs. W. THACKER and Co., 87, Newgate Street, London; Messrs. THACKER, SPINK, and Co., St. Andrew's Library, Calcutta; Messrs. THACKER and Co., St. Andrew's Library, Bombay; and Mr. JAMES HILL, Lucknow.

Allen's Maps of India & China.

MAP OF INDIA;

Showing the British Territories subdivided into Collectorates, and the position and boundary of each Native State; chiefly compiled from Trigonometrical Surveys, executed by order of the Honourable Court of Directors of the East-India Company. On six sheets—Size, 5 ft. 6 in. high; 5 ft. 8 in. wide. £2; or on cloth, in a case, £2. 12s. 6d.; or with rollers, and varnished, £3. 3s.

The object kept in view in compiling this Map has been to render it available to the greatest possible extent for popular use. For this purpose the names of all stations, civil and military, are inserted, as well as those of all towns and places of note likely to be looked for. To make clear the subdivisions of the whole of the country, both British and native, the limits of the various districts and collectorates, with their names, are distinctly indicated. The railways are laid down, and the trunk roads conspicuously coloured. The newly-acquired district in Burmah is included. To avoid, however, the confusion consequent upon over-crowding, and make the Map clear and easy for reference, the names of many small villages, and places of no present importance, have been omitted, and thus a very wide measure of comprehensiveness has been attained, while needless diffusiveness has been avoided.

A GENERAL MAP OF INDIA;

Compiled chiefly from Surveys executed by Order of the Honourable East-India Company. On six sheets—Size, 5 ft. 3 in. wide; 5 ft. 4 in. high. £2; or on cloth, in a case, £2. 12s. 6d.; or with rollers, and varnished, £3. 3s.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS extraordinarily efficacious in curing Erysipelas.—Mr. Charles Henley, aged 18, of Abingdon, Oxon, suffered with intermittent attacks of this most dreadful of cutaneous disorders for several years, and had recourse to every known remedy for the cure of the same, but without success. As a dernier resort, he tried Holloway's Ointment and Pills, which were, as usual, signally beneficial, for he was entirely cured in five weeks, to the astonishment of all who had beheld his sufferings; and to the infinite delight of his family and friends.

Sold by all Medicine Vendors, at PROFESSOR HOLLOWAY'S Establishments, 244, Strand, London, and 80, Maiden Lane, New York; by A. Stamp, Constantinople; A. Guidici, Smyrna; E. Muir, Malta; and by all European and Native Vendors of Medicine throughout the whole of the East Indies.

UNDER THE PATRONAGE OF ROYALTY AND THE ARISTOCRACY THROUGHOUT EUROPE.

ROWLAND'S KALYDOR, an Oriental botanical preparation, for improving and beautifying the Complexion. It eradicates all redness, tan, pimples, spots, freckles, discolorations, and other cutaneous visitations. The radiant bloom it imparts to the cheek, and the softness and delicacy which it induces of the hands and arms, render it indispensable to every toilet. During the heat and dust of summer, or frost and bleak winds of winter, and in cases of sunburn, stings of insects, chilblains, chapped skin, or incidental inflammation, its virtues have long and extensively been acknowledged.—Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle.

SOUND and WHITE TEETH are not only indispensably requisite to a pleasing exterior in both sexes, but they are peculiarly appreciated through life as highly conducive to health and longevity by the proper mastication of food. ROWLAND'S ODONTO; or, Pearl Dentifrice, compounded of Oriental ingredients, imported by the Proprietors at a great expense. This Powder is of inestimable value in preserving and beautifying the teeth, imparting to them a pearl-like whiteness, strengthening the gums, and in rendering the breath sweet and pure.—Price 2s. 9d. per box.

CAUTION.—The words "ROWLAND'S ODONTO" are on the label, and "A. ROWLAND and SONS, 20, Hatton-garden," engraved on the Government stamp, affixed on each box. Sold by them, and by Chemists and Perfumers.

WATCH, CLOCK, and CHRONOMETER MANUFACTORY, 33 and 34, LUDGATE HILL, LONDON. ESTABLISHED 1749.

J. W. BENSON MANUFACTURER of GOLD and SILVER WATCHES of every description, construction, and pattern, invites attention to his magnificent and unprecedented display of Watches, which is admitted to be the largest and best selected Stock in London. It consists of Chronometer, Duplex, Patent Detached Lever, Horizontal, and Vertical Movements, Jewelled, &c., with all the latest improvements, mounted in superbly-finished engine-turned and engraved Gold and Silver Cases. The designs engraved upon many of the cases are by eminent artists, and can only be obtained at this manufactory. If the important requisites, superiority of finish, combined with accuracy of performance, elegance, durability, and reasonableness of price, are wished for, the intending purchaser should visit this Manufactory, or send for the ILLUSTRATED PAMPHLET, published by J. W. BENSON (and sent post-free on application), which contains sketches, prices, and directions as to what Watch to buy, where to buy it, and how to use it. Several hundred letters have been received from persons who have bought Watches at this Manufactory, bearing testimony to the correct performance of the same. The following extracts from the opinions of the Press will, it is hoped, be a sufficient guarantee to the public that they may secure at this House a good Watch at a reasonable price :—

INDIAN DIRECT INFANTRY APPOINTMENTS.—With the sanction of the Hon. the Court of Directors, CLASSES will be formed at the Military College, Addiscombe, during the ensuing Christmas and Midsummer Vacations, to prepare for examination Gentlemen who have received, or may receive, nominations to Direct Infantry Appointments.
For further information, apply to J. T. HYDE, Esq., Addiscombe, Surrey.

EDUCATION.—TO INDIAN FAMILIES.—MISS BALAAM, who has had many years' experience in the education of youth, RECEIVES into her Establishment YOUNG GENTLEMEN from the ages of five to eleven, to whom she engages to impart a sound EDUCATION, and, assisted by Masters, prepares her Pupils for higher classical schools; she will, if required, retain them during the holidays, and provide every requisite of clothing. Her terms are moderate, and she can offer the highest testimonials from the Parents who have favoured her with the care of their sons, and Indian families.
Address, MISS BALAAM, Clapham Common, Surrey.

HINDUSTANI IN CLASSES.

THE REV. G. SMALL, believing that many Ladies and Gentlemen, though aware to some degree of the desirableness of acquiring, at least, the rudiments of Hindustani before going to India, are yet deterred from doing so by the usual expensiveness of a course of private lessons under a competent teacher in this country, proposes to form CLASSES for the study of that most useful language, on very economical terms, for Ladies as well as Gentlemen, at his

CLASS ROOMS, No. 3, LEADENHALL STREET.

For Terms, &c. address, 1, St. John's-grove, Croydon.

N.B.—Mr. S. has been a Teacher of Languages for upwards of 20 years, ten of which were spent in India.

HOLLAND-HOUSE MILITARY COLLEGE, BLACKHEATH.

T. KIMBER, M.A., London, Principal.

R. THACKERAY, A.B. St. John's, Cam., Resident Master.

Referees:—The Rev. Dr. Jelf, Principal of King's College, London; Lieut.-Col. Arbuthnot, Madras Cavalry, &c. &c.

The "Outline of Education" sent post-free from Holland House, or the Publishers of Mr. Kimber's works—Rivingtons, Waterloo Place; and Parker and Son, 445, West Strand.

HANWELL COLLEGE, MIDDLESEX, SEVEN MILES FROM LONDON.

INDIA AND THE COLONIES.

The increasing importance of the cultivation of the LANGUAGES of the EAST, and the immediate advantages that result from their acquisition, have induced the Principal to make arrangements for affording INSTRUCTION therein.

The rudiments of Hindustani, Persian, and Arabic, will be taught to all who are intended for employment in our Eastern Possessions; and the more advanced Pupils will be prepared for their examination on their arrival in India.

The course of instruction includes not only that which is necessary to pass at Addiscombe or Haileybury, but all that may be requisite for those who are destined to pursue an Indian career.

The history and geography of the country, and the general features of Anglo-Indian life, are taught by a gentleman whose perfect acquaintance with India, from long residence there, peculiarly qualifies him for the duties he has undertaken.

The great advantage to Parents in India of an Institution of this kind must be evident. At a short distance from London, in a proverbially healthy locality, they may place their children from an EARLY AGE under a system from which there need be no departure until their education is completely finished; a class being expressly formed for the matriculation at the University of London, wherein they may matriculate at sixteen years of age, and graduate two years after that time.

Prospectuses, with full particulars, may be had on application to the Rev. J. A. EMERTON, D.D., Hanwell College, Middlesex.

STEAM to the CAPE of GOOD HOPE and INDIA.—The undermentioned new auxiliary STEAM SHIPS will sail, with Her Majesty's Mail, for the CAPE of GOOD HOPE, MAURITIUS, POINT DE GALLE, MADRAS, and CALCUTTA, on the 1st of each month from London, and on the morning of the 6th from Dartmouth:—

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

ADVICES from China by the mail just arrived have reached us to the 15th March. In the absence of a sufficient armament to compel the imperial government to respect the British power, and to recognize the principles of international law, some frightful enormities have been committed by the Chinese. A tragedy similar to that which a few weeks before was perpetrated on board the Thistle, has been repeated on another steamer, the Queen, commanded by Captain Wynn. This vessel, though British property, was sailing under Portuguese colours. She left Hongkong for Macao on the 13th March, having on board, besides the captain, the engineer, and two sailors, a number of passengers. The latter consisted of two Europeans, some Portuguese and Chinese women, and about thirty Chinese of the first and second class. When near Macao, and while the captain and Europeans were at dinner, the first-class Chinese passengers seized the arms-chest, and fired a volley into the cabin. One of the passengers, Mr. O. Cleverly, late marine surveyor of Whampoa and Canton, made a desperate resistance, and with a revolver killed several of the Chinese. The captain was wounded, and jumped overboard, as did also the engineer, the purser Mr. Cunha, and the second European passenger, Mr. Weir, late engineer of the Sir Charles Forbes; but none of these parties were subsequently heard of. Mr. Cleverly, notwithstanding his thigh had been fractured by a ball, contrived to throw himself overboard, and ultimately succeeded in reaching a boat, which conveyed him to Macao. A correspondent of the Overland China Mail says: "Mr. Cleverly's escape, and the indomitable courage and perseverance he displayed, is almost beyond belief. His thigh-bone was broken by a shot; notwithstanding which, he kept the whole band of savages at bay with a revolver for about twenty minutes, and shot two or three of them when they tried to enter the after-cabin where he was. When he had no further means of resistance, he threw a bamboo chair from the cabin window, stripped off his clothes, and jumped into the water, where he remained for an hour and a half, and was picked up by a lorcha."

Macao, to which place he was taken; and though he may probably lose his leg, it is hoped his life will be saved." The Queen, which appears to have had a valuable cargo on board at the time of her capture, is reported to have been burned. After this catastrophe, it was discovered that the guns on board some other steamers had been rendered useless by spiking; the fact indicating a wide-spread conspiracy for the perpetration of similar atrocities. Another of the outrages we have to record occurred at Hongkong on the night of the 6th March, when the warehouses of the government contractors, stored with flour for the troops and fleet, were burned to the ground. The conflagration, it is asserted, was the work of Chinese incendiaries. This ill-feeling on the part of the Chinese towards the British is not confined within narrow limits. It would seem to have extended even to the Archipelago. On the 17th February, the Chinese in Sarawak, on the island of Borneo, rose in insurrection, and massacred a number of Europeans. The Governor, Sir James Brooke, only saved his life by swimming across a creek. In this instance, however, a speedy and terrible retribution awaited the insurgents. Placing himself at the head of a body of Malays and Dyaks, and aided by one of the Borneo Company's steamers, which opportunely arrived, Sir James avenged the assault upon the settlement by a vigorous attack upon the rebels; two thousand of whom were slaughtered. Sir Michael Seymour was at Hongkong on the 13th March. The gallant admiral is represented as being constantly on the river, between that place and Canton, "inspecting, instructing, and occasionally attacking." The Auckland and her Majesty's steamer Niger had been engaged in exploratory expeditions, and had succeeded in capturing several Chinese junks.

From the Persian Gulf we have no intelligence of the meditated attack upon the Persian fortress of Mohammerah, which it was expected would take place about the 20th March. The news, indeed, from Bushire is only to the 6th March, and this was conveyed to Bombay by a sailing vessel which had been twenty days at sea. At the date of its departure from Bushire, the force destined for Mohammerah was still in course of embarkation. The 3rd troop of horse artillery had sailed on the previous day. The mouth of the Euphrates had been fixed upon as the place of rendezvous for the fleet, whence it was to proceed to Mohammerah by the Shatt-el-Arab channel, which had been carefully buoyed by a small steamer. Possibly all further hostilities may have been prevented by the confirmation of the pacific rumours which had already reached Bushire.

The 19th regiment Bengal Native Infantry, the men of which, it will be recollected, held a parade of their own authority, to discuss the merits of the "cartridge order," has been ordered down from Berhampore to Barrackpore, where it is said it will be disbanded. The bad spirit evinced by this regiment had urged the Government to call up her Majesty's 84th regiment from Rangoon, which, with the aid of the 53rd foot, previously stationed at Calcutta, will suffice to preserve order in the event of any disposition to breach of discipline. Fuzl Ali, the murderer of Mr. Charles Elliott Boileau, Deputy Commissioner in Oude, has hitherto contrived to elude the pursuit of justice. The outlaw, it is said, put his wives and children to death, for fear they should be seized as hostages.

The force assembled near Dera Ghazee Khan, on the Punjab frontier, under Brigadier Chamberlain, for the purpose of inflicting punishment on the Bozdar tribe, has had one skirmish with the borderers. On the 6th of March the brigadier, with twelve guns of the Punjab irregular force, and four thousand men, entered the defiles opposite to Toussah, in the Dera Ghazee Khan district. On the following day, the force came upon the enemy in a narrow defile, which had been blocked up by the Bozdars, but from which they were rapidly shelled. The loss on the part of the Brigadier was six or seven killed, and twenty-five wounded. Among the latter was Major Coke, who received a slight wound on the shoulder. Dost Mahomed, the ruler of Caubul, had not returned to his capital on the 4th of March, but was then in the vicinity of Jellalabad, engaged in arranging differences between himself and the mountain chiefs.

In the North-West the distribution by the police of the wheaten cakes is still in progress. The little missives, of the size and shape of gingerbread nuts, having traversed Oude, are now travelling through Central India. According to a correspondent of the Times, a somewhat similar occurrence took place in 1818, shortly after the termination of the Pindarree war, the particulars of which, with an explanation of its origin, are thus given:—

At every village there suddenly arrived a messenger in hot haste, the bearer of a cocoanut, which he delivered to the "Potail," or head man, with instructions to forward it instantly to the nearest hamlet, whence it was conveyed onwards in the same rapid and mysterious manner. About twenty of these nuts were brought to Sir John Malcolm, then residing at Mhow, but some time elapsed before he discovered any clue to their hidden meaning. By some they were supposed to notify the establishment of British supremacy, while others looked forward to a general rising in favour of the vanquished Peishwah, Bajee Rao. But no state secrets were concealed beneath these "hard shells." A Brahmin at Jyepore had sent round to his distant acquaintances a number of cocoa-nuts in honour of the birth of a son, and these, through the stupidity of the messengers, were soon wandering over the face of the land on an errand of mystery. An immense tract of country was thus thrown into a state of dangerous excitement, from Jyepore in the north to the Deccan in the south, and from Guzerat to Bhopal; and although no serious consequences ensued on that occasion, the incident shows how easily an agitation may be created, owing to the peculiarly impulsive temperament of the natives and the extraordinary system of network which unites together every town, village, and hamlet throughout Hindostan.

At Bombay an atrocious attempt has been made to poison a number of officers at the mess of the 5th N.L.I. It appears that on the 21st March, some officers of this regiment, accompanied by others, sat down to dinner in the mess-house and partook of soup. Almost immediately after several were seized with vomiting. Fortunately, all have recovered, and the matter is under investigation. The mess-man and the head cook are the parties suspected; but no motive has been assigned for the diabolical attempt. The chief sufferer was Dr. Trestrail; the other officers, more or less affected, were Capt. Scott, Capt. Symons, Ensigns Hunter, Caldicot, and Brown, and Lieut. Maunsell of the 11th regiment. Bombay is again threatened with a water-famine, and it has become necessary to drive the cattle off the island. This, however, will be the last year of scarcity, as the Vehar waterworks are rapidly progressing. The island of Perim, in the gorge of the Straits of Babelmandel, has been taken possession of in the name of the British crown. The Bombay Times says that "here forty sail of the line might hermetically seal the mouth of the Red Sea." It appears that the island had been occupied by us about three quarters of a century ago, and afterwards abandoned.

Sir James Outram has been appointed Governor-Gener-ral's agent in the Rajpootana states. During Sir James's absence in Persia, Colonel George Lawrence will act as officiating agent.

THE 3RD EUROPEAN REGIMENT.—We are compelled, by an imperative sense of duty, to state that reports very unfavourable to the discipline and conduct of the 3rd European Regiment, whilst on its march lately, and even since its return to quarters, have reached us. No one that knows our regard for the honour of this regiment will believe that we would say aught in its disfavour without good grounds; and yet we hope that our young friends have not forfeited all consideration by their recent misconduct. We are most reluctant to say a word that might give even the slightest offence to the officers present with the corps, who, we feel well assured, are in no way responsible for the excesses of the men under their command; but if the Government will persist in the suicidal course it seems bent upon pursuing, of removing all the most efficient officers to fill Staff appointments, then they must be prepared to meet the worst consequences of this act. We are assured, on excellent authority, and we state the fact with feelings of the deepest regret, that the men of the 3rd Europeans have brought disgrace upon their colours as well as upon the name of Englishmen, by the excesses of a character that we shall for the present refrain from particularising. Suffice it to say, that the men who have been so lost to all good feeling as soldiers of a Sovereign so gracious as Queen Victoria—to serve whom, in any capacity, is an honour that every man should be proud of—are deserving of the severest punishment. It is, however, utterly impossible to maintain a rigid discipline in a European regiment, with only six or eight officers. Every officer now absent from the 3rd European regiment should be instantly recommended to regimental duty. Nothing short of this measure will ever redeem the character of the corps. These are not the times for noble lords and honourable councillors to palter with their duty, seeking favours from the relatives of men who owe implicit obedience to the crown of England. They must be up and doing if they do not wish the word "craven" to be emblazoned on their escutcheons.—Poona Observer, March 28.

PERSIAN EXPEDITION.

INTELLIGENCE FROM BUSHIRE.

By the transport ship British Flag, which left Bushire on the 6th instant, we have received the following from our correspondent:—

"BUSHIRE, March 4, 1857.—We have news here of the arrival at Mahamrah of 10,000 Persians, and the expected arrival of 18,000 more, with seventeen guns, to reinforce the garrison already there. On our part we are shipping but slowly. Boats are not readily procured, and the roughness of the sea during the last fortnight has nearly cut off all communication with the shipping, the nearest of which lays about three or four miles out. This, however, has been a calm day, and the 3rd troop has been got on board, and the 78th, 64th, 20th, and 26th are warned to prepare for embarkation. Enfield rifle practice was had the other evening, the men being first required to cast the bullets and make up cartridges in the arsenal, owing to a scarcity of ammunition for that arm. The 78th have been daily exercising at escalating duties. Three of the field-hospitals are under construction. This does not look like giving up Bushire, as was reported here on the receipt of the mail of the 21st January from England, via Bagdad, the other day."—Bombay Times, March 28.

MARCH UPON BORASJOON AND THE BATTLE OF KHOOSHAB.

We make room to-day for the following very graphic account of the recent march upon Borasjoon and battle of Kooshab, with which we have been favoured by a correspondent; and although a little out of date, are persuaded its minute circumstantiality will be found interesting:—

"Who has not heard of the Vale of Cashmere—ay, who, indeed? And who in Bombay has not, ere this, heard of the action fought on Sunday, the 8th February, 1857, at Kooshab? Very good; but what have they heard? Can they say, as the celebrated Mrs. —, queen of Sheba, said to old Solomon? I fear not. I wish I could give you an interesting, or even a readable, account of it. When Outram arrived, a change came over the spirit of our dreamy camp life, and 'twas apparent that something was up. The Highlanders and 26th regiment, N.I., marched up to camp on the 1st of February, marched out again on the night of the 3rd, Tuesday, for 'Borasjoon,' a large, irregularly-built, dirty mud town on the Shiraz road, and about forty-six miles from this. There we heard the enemy were encamped, and leaving a very small force in Bushire, but aided by a naval brigade, whose mad freaks, during our absence, had on one or two occasions nearly terminated fatally, we marched out on the night above-named. Sir James Outram has a fancy, I believe, for night marches. Our first march, to Charkoota, about twenty-six miles, was a long and tedious one, not halting, but for short periods, as is usual upon all marches, till about 8 o'clock on Wednesday morning. At 4 p.m. we were again on the move, and halted for the night upon a bleak, barren plain, about twelve miles further on. The wind was cold and biting: we had no tents. Some few, showing more care for their own health and comfort than for order and obedience, had brought rowties and other small tents.

Our followers straggled terribly, and the rain poured down in torrents within an hour and a half after our halting. I had nothing beyond a thin great coat. My railway wrapper, blanket, and russai were non est inventus. A more wretched night I never spent, and my condition was general. By half-past eight next morning we were again on the move; and about eleven o'clock we observed two or three of the enemy's videttes, who kept watching us and retiring, and ultimately made off to the town, then almost within sight. By twelve o'clock their entrenched camp was in view, and we could see that they were busy removing a few tents, camp equipage, &c. But the force, where was it? The bird had flown, and when we got up, beyond a few horsemen who skirmished admirably, galloping down to within a few hundred yards of the whole of our cavalry, discharging their long guns, galloping back again and loading as they went—nothing was to be seen; and even these ultimately made off: watching every opportunity and never losing one that offered, they at last robbed two poor doolie-bearers of their pugrees, the heads being in them! 'Tis a fact, I assure you: they kept prowling about our rear guard, seized an opportunity, and bagged two unfortunate doolie-bearers. We remained in the camp evacuated by the enemy from two p.m. (or thereabouts), on Thursday, till dark on Saturday evening, I went over the town well during our stay, and I believe that it was full of soldiers disguised, and that lots of ammunition, guns, &c. were secreted. We destroyed an immense quantity of powder, and took away a vast amount of flour, rice, &c. The night we marched out of this place was fine, but the wind very cold. However, the roads were vastly improved, and our men moved merrily on. A little before twelve we halted, to allow the rear-guard to get up, and I believe were about to take up a position for the night. Colonel Tapp had command of the advanced guard, of which the Poona Irregular Horse formed the chief part—the 3rd Cavalry and Rifles having the rear guard. The general and staff were in advance of the advance guard, about 400 yards. Just about this time, and under these circumstances, a shot was heard; presently another, a third, a fourth, and up galloped a mounted officer inquiring for the general. In a minute or two he rode back to Colonel Tapp with an order to take his irregulars back to support the rear-guard, which had been attacked by the enemy's horse. The generals and their staff galloped back sharp—whilst so engaged the horse Sir J. Outram was riding stumbled, from some cause or other, and fell, throwing his rider with considerable violence, his forehead coming in contact with the ground with great force. When he was picked up it was discovered, that though not what is generally termed insensible, he had sustained a severe concussion, for his intellect was quite gone. I was within 18 feet of him, and heard him wander and talk in the most incoherent manner; it was quite pitiable, so sudden and so terrible an affliction, reason gone—quite gone. He is now all right again. After considerable difficulty he was prevailed upon to get into a doolie, but he did not remain long into it, and would mount his horse again. Whilst all this was going on, the enemy were keeping up a vigorous fusillade, and we were actively engaged getting our force into a good and tolerably safe position, one best calculated to repel, and reply to the enemy, and at the same time to protect our numerous followers, &c.

A hollow square, really an oblong, was formed, skirmishers were thrown out, the 4th rifles, Beloochees, 26th, 28th, and artillery, were soon put into requisition. Of course nothing offensive could be done. The night was pitch dark, the enemy's horsemen attacked us on all sides, and their object now became apparent—to check our advance till they could get up their artillery. They managed well. Our formation was not quite completed, when like a messenger from the infernal regions—phiz-iz-iz-iz, and into the ground went a round shot, another, a third, a fourth, and so on. The ball was fairly opened; we were caught, and in a very pretty fix. Give us daylight, and in almost any position, and with any number of Persians, we cared not. However, we were not idle, nor were they, as our poor fellows soon found. The 64th Queen's, was the first regiment to suffer severely; a round shot tore off Lieutenant Greentree's foot, just at the ankle, burying it in the ground some distance from where he stood. Several of the men of his regiment were touched up in the same severe manner, and whilst their artillery were thus peppering us, their horsemen kept up their attack upon all sides of our position, yelling like fiends after each discharge of their musketry. It was exciting enough, I assure you, though far from agreeable, and we certainly prayed for daylight, though almost every one of us was of opinion, that before day fairly dawned, they would move off. Slowly and sullenly the daylight came, and with it what severe retribution! They had not moved far, although they had changed their position.

For nearly two hours before daybreak they ceased firing, and we thought that our rifles and artillery had been too much for them, or, what was still more probable, that their ammunition was running short, when their position was discovered. Our infantry was moved up, but the horse artillery and cavalry did not wait, and went to work con amore. From first to last no men in the field did their work better than the Poona Irregular Horse; steady, well together, and gallantly led on, they went at them; the enemy's cavalry fled like sheep; the supports of the 3rd cavalry and Poona Irregular Horse came up, the word was given, and in a few minutes the enemy were finding out what they had to deal with. The 3rd cavalry behaved very gallantly, and the manner in which they charged a square, prepared to receive them in regular European style, elicited general and deserved applause. The majority of their officers had wonderful escapes, particularly Lieutenant Moore and Cornet Coombs, the latter had his horse wounded in three places, his reins cut by a shot, his cloak (carried in front of his saddle) riddled. Lieut. Moore had his horse shot under him, and his brother, captain in the same regiment, met with the like accident. Three of the Poona Irregular Horse were killed on the field, one died sixteen hours after the action was over, from his wounds, besides a poor syce, whose leg was so shattered that they were obliged to amputate it below the knee. The 3rd cavalry lost but one man on the field, but had several wounded, besides their gallant commanding officer, Captain Forbes, an amiable, clever, and justly esteemed man. He has gone to Bombay. Colonel Tapp's brigade-major, Lieutenant Frankland, of the 2nd Europeans, was the only officer killed; he was advancing with Colonel Tapp and the Poona Irregular Horse, and had sabred three men, when a shot entered the right eye, pierced his brain, killing on the spot. A talented, brave, and accomplished soldier, and a good man, his loss is lamented by all. By ten o'clock the action was over; by eleven we had got back to the village of Kooshab, having chased the enemy for about three or four miles, and taking two guns, of which the Poona Irregular Horse captured one, besides a standard, consisting of a solid silver hand and forearm attached to a staff, with the name and number of the regiment to which it belonged engraved upon the palm or surface. About half-past eleven the rain commenced falling, and did not cease till about twelve the next day. At half-past eight that night we again moved on—through slush and sludge to Chagaduck, and in what a plight! From thence to Bushire is only fourteen miles. The general offered any regiments that preferred taking a six hours' rest, and marching in to do so. When we reached the village just named, men and horses were exhausted, wet, weary, cold, hungry, covered with mud; but notwithstanding all we suffered (entirely forgot long ago), the impression we made upon the enemy must be good. With what feelings I viewed my comfortable tent the next night, and all the then thought luxuries by which I was surrounded! How I poured out my heart in gratitude to my gracious God for all his goodness to me! All this I must leave you, if you can, to imagine. During the first part of the night attack the servants, followers, baggage, tattoos, &c., were almost distracted, and the result is, that everybody has lost some kit, more or less (and I have not escaped), slippers, brushes, cooking-pots, and plates. Various are the reports in camp as to future operations. Some of the force, only artillery, have gone on, and more embarking to-day for Mohumrah,—5th company of the light battalion, the 23rd regiment, Jacob's Horse, and the 14th dragoons; the battery from Kurrachee has not yet arrived, in consequence of the continuance for days past of strong north-westers. We are becoming very anxious as to their fate. It is great folly sending the 14th dragoons here altogether. Forage is becoming scarce; I should say it is used up, and we are living on the commissariat supplies entirely. Food is also getting very dear. To-day it is reported that the enemy is again collecting in large numbers at Borasjoon. We have another live lord in camp, the son of the Duke of Somerset, Lord Seymour. Dunkellin is very quiet. Mr. Murray has returned to Bagdad.—Bombay Times, March 30.

BENGAL.

THE DISTURBANCE AT BERHAMPORE.

There are signs abroad that we are about to face one of those surges of religious feeling that periodically sweep across the face of India. Two years ago it was manifested by the Mussulman population. A wild idea that Government favoured the Hindoos took possession of many classes in the north-west. The momentary but bloody struggle in Oude, the wide circulation of an incendiary pamphlet, the causeless mutiny in the Deccan, the passive resistance to education in Behar, the mad talk that always circulates in the bazaars of Patna, roused a feeling among officials not widely distinguished from alarm. The wave subsided as usual, but not till Government had checked a reform in education in deference to Moslem susceptibilities. This time the feeling finds expression among the sepoys. The vague, dreamy idea that Government has some project of conversion in hand, which has always been present in India, and every now and then rises to the surface, has possession of the ranks. Regiments which go to parade as orderly as Europeans have still a suspicion, which an accident might blow into a dangerous explosion. Whence it arises it is difficult to conceive. There are fools in the world, who, sooner than not distribute a tract, would risk the permanent welfare of a whole population; but no pamphlets have been found in the ranks, as they were in Behar. As to the interference of the King of Oude, we regard the supposition as simply ludicrous. What earthly interest can the Hindoos of Oude have in his fate, beyond a fervent hope that he may never regain his power? If he could do nothing when throne and kingdom and honour were at stake, when his own position and his son's prospects depended on his resolution, he can accomplish nothing now. Besides, what has he to gain by success? If all India were convulsed, he would not be one step nearer to Lucknow. We are not much given to believe in the sense of Oriental princes, but even the faults of the King of Oude would restrain him from intrigues so suicidal.

Be the cause what it may, there can be no doubt of its effect. Scarcely had the disturbances at Barrackpore been lulled, when they re-appeared in the cantonment which controls Moorshedabad. The sepoys of the 19th N.I. stationed at Berhampore had heard, it seems evident, of the objection to the cartridge-paper. By way of expressing their sympathy with the hostility to fat, they objected to receive their musket-caps. The pretext was, of course, absurd; but in a few hours the men had talked themselves into an excitement which ended in an undress but armed parade, without officers or orders. As at Barrackpore, wild plans are said to have been discussed; but those who know how morbid is the imagination of an excited native, will not attach much value to this gossip. The dangerous fact was, that men with arms in their hands were deliberating by themselves. Col. Mitchell, the officer in command, appears at first to have acted with judgment and decision. Calling his officers together, he ordered out a regiment of cavalry and two guns. At the first call of the bugle, the native officers flocked round him, and Colonel Mitchell inquired into their grievance, and gravely and kindly pointed out the position in which they stood. The remonstrance seems to have been ineffectual, and immediately after the men were ordered to ground their arms, and retire. After a moment's hesitation, they agreed to obey, provided the artillery and cavalry were withdrawn. The object of the demand seems sufficiently apparent. They dreaded the laughter of their mounted comrades, who would scarcely fail to exult in the terror their presence had inspired. Col. Mitchell acceded to their request, and the sepoy returned obediently to their quarters. They were still reluctant to lose sight of their arms, but pickets selected from among themselves were respected. Indeed, in many points, they behaved more like fractious children than men engaged in a serious undertaking.

It cannot, we fear, be denied that at the last moment Colonel Mitchell was betrayed into a grave error of judgment. His situation, it is true, was trying in the extreme. On the one hand, it was impossible to foresee the lengths to which the men might not be tempted to proceed. An order to obey without conditions might have produced a struggle, of all others the most terrible to the true soldier. It was difficult, too, to shut out the possibility of failure, and its results. There are no Europeans in Berhampore, and Captain Rattray's corps were forty-eight hours' away. The responsibility might have tried a Napier, and it is the peculiarity of Indian officers to dread nothing except a secretary's pen. On the other hand, if there is one thing clear in military ethics, it is that no petition can even be heard from soldiers with arms in their hands. Instant obedience or instant death are the only possible alternatives. Whatever the consequences, the destruction of a regiment, the loss of a province, unconditional submission should have been secured. Had the sepoys yielded to force, the cartridge question would have been forgotten. As it is, the movement may spread, till at some station it meets a general, who will say with Danton, mon nom soit flétri, mais la France sauvée. The Government, so far as we can learn, meets the difficulty—the greatest which can impede an Indian administration—with judgment and decision. Every well-founded grievance has been promptly redressed. The order to use fat has been cancelled, and the men allowed money to purchase the necessary quantity of ghee. The use of the "shiny" paper has been suspended till an investigation can be made. And there concession ends, and the Government prepares quietly but decisively to enforce discipline. There is no unseemly haste to punish as if in alarm, but we will not doubt that the sentence, when promulgated, will be found adequate to the occasion.

The immediate difficulty over, it remains to remedy the evils these outbursts too obviously indicate. We have pointed already to the necessity of more care in brigading great bodies of sepoys. We are told that it is inexpedient to display distrust, but how is it displayed? Nobody distrusts English sailors, but the marines are, for all that, necessary on board a man-of-war. Military discipline, talk of it as we will, is based on force, and the means of employing force unsparingly should always be at hand. But no measure of the kind will suffice to remove the cause of this evil. The "exhaustion of the army," palliate it as we choose, is at last endangering the empire. We have sacrificed the army to the administrative necessities of the state, turned the sword into a ploughshare with no millennium at hand. Year by year the separation between the officers and their men seems to increase. First came the reform in morals, which, excellent as its effects have been, severed a strong bond between officers and natives. Then we adopted a system which drafts away some of the ablest officers from every regiment, and renders it the first object of a soldier's ambition to cease to be a soldier. Everybody is hankering for civil employ. Officers are incessantly on the move. The majority know their men as little as they are known by them.

They are present in action. Their courage is appreciated as of old, but the influence which springs of daily intercourse, of the thousand references that should bind the private to his officer, is passing away. There are regiments, doubtless, where this is little felt. In some the older officers have remained attached to their corps. Others are commanded by men possessing that peculiar force of character which natives seem hopelessly unable to resist. Others, again, stationed by the side of an overwhelming European force, have never been tempted to deliberate. But over the whole army the effect of our staff system is incipient disorganization. It is of no use mincing phrases any longer. Either this system must be reformed, or it will in no long period reform itself, after a fashion that will tax the courage of soldiers as well as statesmen. Our columns, and those of our contemporaries, have teemed with plans for staff corps. In the presence of some of the facts before us, we may doubt whether any of them are more than palliatives; whether it would not be more expedient to make his regiment the life-care of every officer. At all events, his choice between the two professions—administration or war—should be early, and should be final.

The progress of events tends daily further to Anglicise our minds. Europe becomes nearer every year. Every year we recede further, not only from that old Hindooized life, the failure of which was inevitable, but from that sympathy with Orientals, which is essential to their comprehension. How many officers are there who can recognize the faintest sign of discontent, who have that instinct for the perception of public opinion which makes successful governors and editors? Natives, we believe, may be managed by the old, half-familiar, half-stern system of discipline. They may be managed even on the reserved, rigid formulas obeyed in European regiments. But that they can be managed by the latter system without officers to work it, we utterly refuse to believe.—Friend of India.

THE NORTH-WEST PROVINCES.

If any illustration were needed of the wide difference between England and India, it would be furnished by the reception of the first annual reports. They are to the Empire what the debate on a Queen's speech is to England. They place before us exactly the progress of the year, clear up circumstances which have been doubtful throughout its course, indicate not obscurely the measures to be immediately pursued. Yet they have excited no interest, have not been read except by a few officials, have scarcely been noticed publicly except by ourselves. The gems of information they contain are left in the mine unextracted, and for public purposes they might almost as well have remained in manuscript.

The report from the North-West is on the whole the best of the long series presented by Government to the public. Mr. Colvin appears to have comprehended the task he was called on to perform. Written with some literary ability, and full of statistics, the report deals, as none of the remaining reports deal, with principles. The improvement effected is described, but the reason for that improvement is not forgotten. The report is sufficient of itself to explain why Mr. Colvin is considered a successful governor. It illustrates too in some degree the defect of his administration, the tendency to overgovern, which seems to be inherent in men of strong will and fixed convictions.

It was expected on Mr. Colvin's appointment to Agra, that his first task would be to reform the judiciary. It was notoriously in a bad condition. Mr. Thomason, fettered by service claims, and by his own conviction that the duties of a collector were all-important, transported his incapables to the judgment seat. The native judges were believed to be more corrupt as well as more ignorant than those of Bengal. The civil courts were tardy even beyond the tardiness of Indian tribunals, and it was the avowed belief of experienced men that the benefits of our rule were almost neutralized by the inefficiency of our courts. The new lieutenant-governor was singularly fitted to meet this special evil. He had ruled a non-regulation province, and had therefore emancipated himself from English formulas. He had been a successful judge in the Sudder Court. He was understood to possess that peculiar turn of mind which in England makes jurists, and in India law reformers. No sudden change, however, took place. Mr. Colvin threw himself into revenue work with energy and zeal, and the public impatiently declared that the system of his predecessor was continued with its defects as well as its advantages. The disappointment was as groundless as the overstrained expectation. Mr. Colvin did not create a revolution in the judicial system. For such an enterprise he had neither the power, nor the means, nor the agency required. But what he could do he did. He turned out the most inefficient of the judges. He reinvigorated the Sudder by new blood, by a degree of suggestion, rebuke, and interference generally which would strike English patriots with horror. The rest, received or took warning, and the record of the past year shows the extent to which the details of procedure have been watched and improved.

During the year a Sudder judge has been despatched into the interior simply to watch defects and suggest improvements. The custom of retaining sessions judges always at the civil station has been broken up. For the future, sessions judges in certain districts will make circuits once a quarter into the interior, to the great acceleration of justice. The whole system of tulubana, or fees for processes, an intolerable nuisance to the people, has been reformed. In the non-regulation provinces, where his power is uncontrolled by formulas, the Lieutenant-Governor has gone farther. The code of the Punjab, modified by Mr. Roberts, has been introduced into them all. A system of compulsory registration, the bête-noire of all Indian reformers, is to be introduced into Saugor, whence, if successful, it must be rapidly extended to the provinces. The duration of a criminal trial has been reduced everywhere to three and a half months, or just half the average usual in Bengal. The course of procedure in police cases has been fixed by rules which the people can understand as well as the magistrates. The practice of receiving confessions has been restricted till it is almost extinct. Private executions have been introduced, in spite of English prejudice. And lastly, without talk, and apparently almost without notice, a change of the highest importance has been introduced in the status of the police. By a series of reductions in the least turbulent districts, the Lieutenant-Governor obtained a surplus fund. It was at once devoted to increase the salaries of the police. One-third of the thanahdars receive sixty rupees a month, or seven times the Bengal rate, and sufficient to secure the services of men of respectability. The remainder receive a little less, with the prospect of promotion. A third of the jemadars obtain twenty rupees a month, and a third of the burkundazes have their pay increased twenty-five per cent. The whole of these changes, which have probably doubled the efficiency of the police, were effected without any additional cost to the state. The change was effected easily, by management rather than by great efforts, by great attention to details rather than the introduction of new principles. This is after all the function of the subordinate Governments. A special detective force has been introduced into the larger cities. A quasi military force has been added to the general strength of the police. This has been effected by selecting a certain number of men on whose courage the magistrate knows he can rely, paying them slightly above the average, and holding them prepared on an emergency to act in the place of soldiers. The want of some such support has been felt even more keenly in Bengal than in the north-west. In the Lower Provinces there are no soldiers to call out, and an attempt to arrest a great landholder, or even to carry out the decree of a court, is a service of no ordinary danger. When Mr. Bright arrested the Rajah of Mysadul, he in fact entered a fortified and well-garrisoned house alone. The whole of his police had fled. Lastly, the permanent improvement of the police has been secured. The settlements are slowly falling in. At every new settlement the people are required to commute the present modes of payment to chowkidars for a money contribution of three rupees a month. A little hard cash is sought after by a cultivator in these provinces with an avidity Europeans can scarcely conceive. The provision is, therefore, sufficient to attract decent men, while it liberates them at once from the authority of the village zemindars. Hitherto this portion of the police arrangements has been as defective as in Bengal. Lord Auckland's resolution commuting all jaghires into money has been neglected, and the police have been paid pretty much according to the personal influence of the magistrate. The commutation is not considered oppressive. The people of Allypore have imposed the tax on themselves of their own accord, though their settlement has twelve years to run. With this activity in improvement we scarcely wonder that

"The crime of Thuggee scarcely lingers in any part of the Provinces, and no case of this kind appears in the Returns for 1855. Bands of dacoits, living within the districts under this Government, are now almost unknown.

"Professional highway robbery, once very prevalent in the Provinces, has disappeared, excepting that one case occurred within the last twelve months in the Goorgaon, and one in the Delhi district. Poisoning on the high roads has also been put down. It has at last ceased in some of the Benares districts."

It is in the revenue department that the defect of Mr. Colvin's administration is most clearly perceived. The report contains a list of eighteen measures introduced during the year. One or two of them are reforms, and one or two more might fairly claim the attention of Government. The remainder strike us as instances of petty legislation which, if necessary at all, certainly deserve no notice in an annual report. What can it matter to the community whether two Tehsildars were dismissed in spite of an over-indulgent commissioner, or not? Or what is it to the community that

"New and more comprehensive rules have been issued for giving compensation to every kind of interest affected by the taking up of land for railways, canals, roads, or any public object. These are embodied in a Circular Order of the Revenue Board, of April 10th, 1855."

The most perfect instance of this spirit, however, is contained in the following paragraph:—

"The interests may in many instances have passed to other sharers in the same villages; but the means of separating such transfers from those to strangers do not exist in the returns. Orders have been issued for giving precise information in future in every case of the transfer of an entire village or estate (which may have the effect, perhaps, of breaking up an ancestral community), as to the particulars of the transaction; whether the property is one which had been before alienated, and is now transferred for a second time; or whether it is a fresh case of loss to a body of original owners; and also as to the position of the new acquirers, whether neighbouring landholders, traders, or persons connected with official employment. The attention of the collectors is also excited to the progress of these transactions; and in different cases registers of the causes which may have led to the transfers are carefully kept up. The matter is one fit to be prominently held in view. A distinction is to be made between transfers under judicial decrees and by private bargains. The former are compulsory for debt which may have arisen from many causes—improvidence, struggles to meet a heavy Government assessment, or internal disputes in the communities. The last cause is habitually watched and obviated, as far as possible, by the revenue officers, who interpose constantly, by a friendly mediation, to bring about accommodations, and to frustrate the intrigues of parties wishing to profit through the ruin of the old owners. Private transfers are of course, only made when the property purchased or taken in pledge is profitable, and are, therefore, the index of a light assessment."

Why not order the turban of every purchaser to be measured, the number of times he spits in a day to be recorded, or the length of his beard to be compared with the mean ratio of other beards? Statistics are the eyes of a centralized Government; but the time of highly-paid officials should scarcely be wasted in collecting details such as these. The Lieut.-Governor admits that the transfers of land cannot be checked. Why then should they be watched, except in their aggregate results?

It is, however, in the matter of education that this report is most satisfactory. With a population who are to Bengalees what the Spartans were to the Athenians, the Government has attained at once the success only hoped for in Bengal. The village union schools established in every sillah have already upwards of twenty-three thousand scholars. The Tehseer or higher schools have 9,500 more. The normal school in one year turned out 136 efficient masters. Two more have been already sanctioned, and are by this time in operation. Ninety-five girls' schools have been established in two districts alone, and since the report was written, even the Mussulman prejudices against female education are said to have given way. The school cess, which as an official measure dropped through, has been revived in the shape of a general appeal to the population itself, and by an account later than this report, upwards of five thousand villages had voluntarily submitted to the tax. Two hundred and fifty school books have been prepared, edited, and published by native officers, one sub-inspector having completed twenty-five. In Mynpooree so completely has the objection to education been overcome, that the magistrate believes the Zemindars will never again allow the schools to languish. In short, education, under an officer whose single defect seems to be that he cannot write a readable report, has taken root. The masses begin to display an interest in the subject, the first and most important step towards success. The village Zemindars are little raised in position above our richer ryots. Yet it is they who by thousands have voluntarily imposed the educational cess. We are not of those who believe the North-West system per se better than that of Bengal. But it has at least this one recommendation. It does produce results, something which, good or evil, can be understood and appraised. We wish we could say as much for our efforts during the last few years to improve the judicial system of Bengal.—Friend of India.

THE LATE MR. C. E. BOILEAU.

In the last number of the Mail we alluded to the murder of Mr. Boileau. The following account, furnished by a correspondent of the Mofussilite, is supposed to be a true version of the affair:—

"Fuzl Ali had, for some time, succeeded in evading pursuit, by taking refuge in the Nepal territory, and an order from the Katmandoo durbar had at last been obtained, authorizing his capture within their boundaries. On receipt of this, Boileau at once set out, after warning a detachment of infantry to proceed to a certain point. But he and this detachment missed each other among the thick jungle, and coming upon Fuzl Ali and his dacoits, he, with rash valour, proceeded to attack them, although sheltered behind walls, with his small party of six irregular troopers, and some four or five men on foot. The latter showed no fight at all, and the natural consequence of an attempt so desperate was not long in coming. Poor Boileau was shot down and decapitated; his head was afterwards found suspended to a tree, and his body was not recovered for some days. The infantry arrived in time to fire a volley at his assassins, whose punishment has, however, yet to come.

"Sad it is, that a good officer and gallant gentlemen should thus heedlessly have cast away his life."

The following, on the same subject, is from a correspondent of the Friend of India:—

"You will have heard that poor Boileau, deputy-commissioner here, has been killed by Fuzl Ali. Boileau pressed after him into Nepaul, with five Sowars, on the 8th, and he and four of the Sowars were killed. L. Clarke, with a party of infantry, came up twenty minutes after, and heard the firing, but was misled by a report that it was at a marriage festival: hearing more firing, he and his men went forward, and found Fuzl Ali and his elephants and men going away. He pursued some distance, but Fuzl Ali got off. A Tusseldar, Jemedar, and two others, have entirely disappeared, and no doubt were killed, having been seen to fall with Boileau from their horses, but the bodies cannot be found of any of them. Boileau's head was brought in to-day to this place. I think he was not killed by the shot, as his head and face were all over sabre cuts, and he looked as if he died in pain. Daly's Sowars came up again with Fuzl Ali on the 9th, and cut up seven of his men, four of the heads came here this morning, and are gone to Baraitch for identification."

A reward of five thousand rupees has been offered for the apprehension of Fuzl Ali. Captain Boileau, commanding the 2nd Oude infantry, is at present in pursuit of the assassin.

DILETTANTE GOVERNMENT.

There is a period in every man's life when he is satisfied with getting, when further progress is uncongenial, if not positively hateful, when he requires an impulse from without to guide him in some new direction. This is for the moment the condition of the Indian world. Like men after some unwonted exertion, their muscles are neither collected for fresh effort nor under ordinary tension. From the highest to the lowest, from the Governor in Council to the newspaper reporter, there is the same flaccidity. The energetic and the slothful, the inspector of jails and the chief engineer in Bengal, alike remain, the one in unaccustomed and distasteful lassitude, the other in habitual and grateful torpor. A political lull is not an unfrequent phenomenon in India; but the present one has features of its own. We are pretending to do something. We essay to represent at one and the same moment energy and lassitude—Don Quixote engaged with the windmills, and the porter at the gate of the Castle of Indolence. It is not that there are no stirring events—no great truths to be enunciated—no great principles to be maintained. We simply refuse to move; or, if we slowly consent, it is to secure a triviality. The affairs in Persia and China, in Pegu, and in Afghanistan, cause us, lazily lifting up our hands, to drop a bayonet here, a soldier there; to pursue some petty robber chief in the one place, to subsidize a greater in the other. Flower shows are patronised, while public business is retarded. There is an attention to details whilst principles are neglected. Grave consultations are held upon the hygienic principle of "chicks," whilst troops are either refused or tardily sent to China. We are reforming a drain, and ignoring a half ruined province. We are arming an Afghan chief to resist a danger scarcely present, and suffer a colony to be destroyed by arsenic. The pence are being cared for, the pounds are taking care of themselves. With the sepoys in mutiny we report on soldiers' gardens as the one military reform. Even the missionaries and the indigo planters are at peace. The old Indians are regarding the new civil servants with indifference, if not with amenity, whilst the latter on their part have ceased to consider themselves destined to be the regenerators of Indian society.

We begin to weary of this dilettanteism; we would rather have a Spurgeon than a churchwarden, Sir Benjamin Hall than the London Board of Works. We must confess we would rather have even a "conversion of the five per cent. loan" than an inaction, varnished over with grants for museums and photographers.

That this is not the usual state of the governing world in India, we freely and gladly admit. The lull will not last long. But it has lasted long enough to prove how slight is the impulse Indian society receives from within. When the Government is in motion, initiating reforms, commencing conquests, breaking up old departments, society follows in its train. When, on the other hand, nothing is attempted but small things, when politics are abandoned for dilettante philanthropies, society sinks back into its apathy, will scarcely read the bulletins of a war, hardly grow anxious were it left for a month without a budget of European news.—Friend of India.

CASH BALANCES IN GOVERNMENT TREASURIES.

Saturday's Gazette contained the following notification:—

"Notification.—Fort William, Financial Department, 13th March. The following statement of cash balance in the Government Treasuries throughout India, at the expiration of the third quarter of 1856-57, is published for general information:—Amount of balance Co.'s Rs. 12,65,96,168. 31st January, 1857."

The value of this information may be estimated from the circumstance, that the 3½ per cent. loan and the conversion of the five per cent. loan, were based upon a similar statement. It is well known to all who have an insight into the mysteries of the financial department, that no balance is allowed to accumulate in the Mofussil treasuries, beyond what is actually in course of payment, or known to be required for local purposes. If the Government really wished to inform the public on this subject, it could be done by giving a correct periodical statement of the balances in the treasuries of Calcutta, Bombay, and Madras. All the rest is mere moonshine.—Englishman, March 17.

HOW ANNEXATION PAYS.

There is a class of thinkers, extinct in India but still existing in England, who deprecate annexation on account of its expense. No acquisition, they say, has paid except Bengal. Every extension of territory involves an increase of the army, an addition to the number of officials, new incentives to that increase of establishments which is the "tendency of the Indian Government." To such reasoners we venture to present the accompanying balance-sheet. The figures may, we believe, be implicitly relied on. They show in the simplest form the commercial results of the "costly operation" styled by borough members the annexation of the Punjab.

	Revenue.
1840-50	Rs. 1,99,83,934
1850-51	1,99,40,938
1851-52	2,07,79,646
1852-53	1,94,88,936
1853-54	1,91,98,815
1854-55	1,94,55,138
1855-56	1,92,53,879
Total	13,81,01,316
	Expenditure:—
1849-50	Rs. 1,04,14,142
1850-51	1,19,43,028
1851-52	1,38,81,068
1852-53	1,42,72,349
1853-54	1,40,29,674
1854-55	1,59,29,118
1855-56	1,52,71,715
Total	9,57,41,094

The expenditure, it will be remembered, includes the whole of the local military force, the extraordinary expenses, the million sterling laid out on public works. The conquest cost us perhaps, when every kind of loss is taken into consideration, two millions sterling. Thirty per cent. per annum is not a bad return on a great investment even in Manchester. We say nothing of the security of the empire, of the immense addition made to our strength by the presence of Sikhs in our ranks, of the prestige acquired by the extinction of the last great native power. Those whom we address would be as little moved by such arguments as a cotton lord by a description of the slavery his custom renders profitable. But they may understand that even in rupees, in silver exchangeable for piece goods, the first great annexation of the last reign—pays.—Friend of India

TORTURE IN INDIA.

To the Editor of the Englishman.

Sir,—I think it not out of place for me, at a time when it is proposed to place Englishmen in the power of sadder aumeens and moonsiffs, to publish the accompanying letter which I have received from a mercantile firm in Calcutta, and I therefore ask the favour of your inserting it in your paper.

Yours faithfully,

W. H. ABBOTT, JUN.,

Acting Secretary Indigo Planters' Association.

Calcutta, March 6, 1857.

To the Secretary of the Indigo Planters' Association.

Sir,—Permit us to lay before you the following facts, having reference to that matter which has lately attracted so much public attention both here and at home, viz., "Torture in India." We have every confidence in the truth of what we now mention.

We are proprietors of three grants in the Soonderbund, situated at a distance of some six hours' pull in a pansway from Khoolnah, a sub-division of Zillah Jessore, and these grants are under the constant personal supervision of our superintendent Mr. Fraser.

That gentleman, when engaged on business at the grant of another party of which he had also the charge, and at a considerable distance from our place, was informed by a messenger that the native omrah and servants attached to, with the whole of the ryots located on, one of our grants, No. 223, had been seized and taken up by the foudzary nazir and bucksy of Khoolnah Thannah, on a charge of dacoity. On arrival at the place he found the report correct, and also that his own property, guns, &c., which he always kept in every cutcherry, had been carried away to the deputy magistrate at Khoolnah.

It appears that in consequence of a petition made to the above deputy magistrate, stating that the ryots, &c., located on the grant No. 223, were dacoits, constantly in the habit of committing dacoity, and praying that the nazir of the court be deputed to proceed to the spot, where proof would be obtained of the truth of the petition, the deputy magistrate issued an order on the nazir and bucksy with some four peons to go to the grant and investigate. The nazir and bucksy, in accordance with this order, proceeded, not with some four peons only, but with a retinue of some sixty or seventy people, and on arrival at the grant surrounded the small village, and seized and bore off every soul on the place, not to his thannah, but across the river to the grant of Khamarcolla No. 224, where detaining the whole party for a day and night without food or drink of any kind, he endeavoured there, by the usual methods of tying up and severe beating, by application of iron pincers to fingers and bodies, and on the grant itself by dragging his prisoners' wives from their houses by the hair, and severely maltreating and beating them, to get what he wanted, and a sufficient douceur for himself and followers. Nothing was found to criminate our ryots as dacoits, and they were released, the head men on bail, and allowed to go across to their village.

Our superintendent having made careful inquiries, and tested the truth of what was told him as above stated, proceeded at once to Khoolnah, and on the 21st of February made a petition to the magistrate in English to the above purport, praying for an investigation personally on the spot by the magistrate, and for restitution of his property that had been seized, and an order was issued to return the property, and that an investigation personally by the magistrate would take place after the 15th March.

The release of the prisoners at once by the nazir, and the return by the deputy magistrate of a portion of the property seized, seem to bear proof of absence of guilt of the parties charged, and proof of illegal measures having been resorted to by the police. The cause of the complaint originally made, we believe, is really the free-will emigration of numbers of ryots to lot No. 223 from the adjoining zemindary, whose proprietor is presumed to be at the bottom of the matter.

We have thus succinctly stated the facts of the case, and leave it to you, sir, and others to comment on practices thus done in open day by the very people placed throughout the land as a protection from violence of every sort and description.

In addition allow us to crave reference to the time that will have elapsed between the nazir's investigation, which took place on the 6th February, and the magistrate's coming investigation, after the 15th instant—time sufficient to allow all marks and wounds to be effaced and healed up, and to give every chance to the party complained of to use his great influence to his own advantage. Speedy injustice were almost better than this most dilatory justice.

Yours faithfully,
&c. &c.

Calcutta, 5th March, 1857.

THE LONDON MAIL of Feb. 10 arrived at Madras Mar. 15, and Calcutta March 19 (per Ava). The mail of March 10 had left Aden March 31.

MR. W. H. SMOULT has published a second edition of Dr. Baikie's work on the Neilgherries, which the Hurkaru describes in high terms both in the mechanical getting up and in the matter.

CHRISTIAN MISSIONARIES.—A great conference of Christian missionaries has been lately held at Benares, at which one of the reverend gentlemen observed that the native Christians were far from having full confidence in missionaries, and to a wide extent look upon them as by no means their friends.

THE MUTLAH.—There are only two vessels now in the Mutlah; the Mary Anne Moore and the Shacka Maxton, both loading for Liverpool.

THE FLEET OF STEAM-TUGS IN THE HOOGHLY will be increased by eight or ten vessels in the course of the year.

BANK OF BENGAL.—Government are thinking of establishing a branch agency of the Bank of Bengal in the North-western Provinces, and have already issued circulars for the opinions of officials in various departments.

THE VICAR-APOSTOLIC FOR WESTERN BENGAL has enforced the observance of the "Index Librorum Prohibitorum" under penalty of sin. "Paradise Lost," "Wateley's Elements of Logic," &c., are among the prohibited books.

OUDE.—The Englishman informs us that the Government has directed the chief commissioner of Oude to make over charge to his majesty's agents of all the houses belonging to the king which were taken by the public officers, and to rebuild, at the expense of Government, those which were broken down or destroyed.

ONE OF THE EX-AMERS OF SCINDE has met with his death in a shooting-excursion in the Sunderbunds. He had wounded a tiger, and was preparing to finish him with a six-barrelled revolver, which accidentally went off when pointed towards himself, and he was killed on the spot.

PAY SERGEANTS.—Two officers have recently been punished for intrusting large sums of money to their pay sergeants. Gen. Anson has strictly prohibited more than two days' pay being left in the hands of the pay sergeant. Any officer who disobeys this order will be placed in arrest, and his case reported to the Commander-in-Chief. Moreover, commanding officers are now prohibited from exhibiting any charge against a pay sergeant for embezzlement, &c., of public money intrusted to him for the payment of the men of the company, for any sum exceeding in amount what is required "day by day for the subsistence of the non-commissioned officers and men."

MUTINY AT FORT WILLIAM.—There has been a rumour for some days past of an intended mutiny at Fort William. It appears to have arisen from the sulkiness and insolence of several sepoys who have been placed in arrest. The Hurkaru states that the sepoys put forth as the excuse for their discontent, the idea that the Governor-General has promised the Home Government to convert them all in three years. The garrison at Fort William has manifested considerable sympathy with the 19th and 34th regiments of native infantry, and there is a slight suspicion that if these regiments be punished severely, the sympathy may not only be that of feeling but of action. A severe example is all the more necessary, if the sepoys are to be obedient and cheerful for some time to come. The thorough Asiatic always likes to feel the strong hand of power on his neck.

THE GANGES CANAL.—A report of the working of the Ganges Canal has been published, which shows that the water now flows through 450 miles of main trunk and terminal branches of the canal, and the volume maintained during the season gave an average height of six feet on the gauge, or 3,000 cubic feet per second in the canal channel. The report adds, "there were no interruptions to the flow of this fine stream. There were scarcely even fluctuations in its surface-level, and there have consequently been entire contentment on the part of the zemindars with the supplies furnished to them, much confidence in their permanency created, and not a single instance of failure of contract by reason of deficiency of water delivered. The total length of the irrigating channels, in addition to the main trunk of 450 miles, now exceeds 1,250 miles completed, besides extensive channels for the same purpose being in progress. The revenue from the canal during the past year was above Rs. 60,000, while the area of land watered was about 100,000 begahs, or 55,000 acres; and 265,000 begahs, or 166,000 acres, in addition distributed among 1,134 villages, were placed beyond the risk of serious damage from drought."

SMALL POX being exceedingly prevalent, Government have converted the house No. 131, Bow Bazaar, into a temporary hospital for patients afflicted with this disease. Dr. Chuckerbutty has medical charge of the hospital, with two assistants.

DELHI, March 3.—"News has come in that Lieut. and Adj. Fisher, 30th N.I., while on the march from Agra to Nusseerabad, somehow had a fall from his horse, and so seriously fractured one of his legs, that amputation of the limb was necessary. (This officer had just obtained a staff appointment in the Irregular Cavalry, and would have joined soon had this calamity not befallen him.) Lieut. Donie, of the artillery, who, as I told you a few days ago, was accidentally shot while out sporting, and was brought into Delhi, is recovering rapidly, and is sufficiently well to go out for a drive in the cool of the evening. The coolie through whom the charge first passed, is believed to be dead, although nothing certain is known, as, in the excitement caused by an officer being wounded, he was entirely forgotten. The four companies of the 38th L.I., which have lately gone on treasure-escort duty, under command of Major Hollings, will not return as soon as they anticipated, as they cannot be relieved at Kurnaul, and will therefore go on to Umballa.—March 5. General Hewitt came in about 10 o'clock, A.M. on Tuesday, and inspected the 38th L.I. in heavy marching order in the evening, and again this morning in review order. He is a gentleman not easily pleased, and has evidently no opinion of his own, merely reciprocating the sentiments of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, and those about him. He was very precise in marking the number of paces when in going round the square in slow time, and remarked that in the whole distance the paces were out. The 54th are to be inspected to-morrow."

INCREASED TAXATION OF CASHMERE.—The Lahore Chronicle inserts a letter from Murree relative to the increased taxation of Cashmere. Gholab Singh has imposed a new tax upon every child that is born,—ten annas for a boy, and eight annas for a girl,—and demands for every buffalo two rupees eight annas, and two seers of ghee. On any joyful occasions, such as the birth of a child, Gholab Singh mulcts his servants and troops one month's pay.

THE CIRCULATION OF THE CHUPATTIES has extended to Oudh. The cause of their circulation is still a mystery, and to many observers an unpleasant one. It is inconceivable that the entire police of a presidency should turn out, and some ninety thousand lazy policemen incur trouble and expense without a reason, or an order, or an inquiry as to the cause.

AKYAB.—The Akyab Commercial Advertiser states that the place has become so expensive that government servants cannot live on their pay. It is difficult to find men to act as darogahs. A common coolie obtains four times as much as a moonsiff's sherishtadar.

THE CRIMINAL COURTS.—On March 13th a deputation of the merchants of Calcutta presented a petition to the Governor-General, praying that the existing Criminal Courts of the country might not by any act of the legislature receive jurisdiction over Europeans. They suggested, that if it were necessary to extend through the country Criminal Courts to which British subjects should be amenable, judges for such courts should be appointed qualified as in England, and not unqualified as in the East-India Company's courts. The Governor-General did not pledge himself to any line of action, but promised that the address should be carefully considered.

A TRIBUNAL OF COMMERCE is projected in Calcutta, before which all mercantile disputes shall be tried.

A BRANCH OF THE PUBLIC LIBRARY is about to be established in the heart of the native town.

A LETTER FROM GYAN mentions that the maharajah of Ramnagar has presented one lakh of rupees to the Goalties, or priests of Godadhar.

AT A MEETING OF THE LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL on the 21st March, Sir James Colville, on presenting the report of the Standing Orders Committee on the petition of British subjects resident in Calcutta and the Mofussil, not in the service of the East-India Company, against the new "Penal Code," moved that the report be printed; and gave notice that on Saturday next he should move that it be adopted by the Council, and that the prayer of the petitioners to be heard before the bar of the Council be granted. The first reading of the bill to establish and incorporate a university at Bombay, which stood in orders for that day, was postponed.

IMPORTANT APPOINTMENTS.—The Gazette contains several important appointments consequent upon the death of Mr. Bushby, and Sir Robert Hamilton's departure for Europe. During the absence of Sir Robert Hamilton, Colonel Durand is to act as agent to the Governor-General in Central India. Major Davidson is appointed Resident at Nagpore, and Sir Richard Shakespear to Baroda. Lieut. Monk Mason and Captain C. D. Showers are promoted to Joudpore and Meywar respectively. Sir James Outram is appointed to Rajpootana, and Sir Henry Lawrence to Oude. During the absence of Sir James Outram in Persia, Lieut.-Colonel G. St. P. Lawrence will perform the political duties at Rajpootana. Some of these appointments will take the public by surprise.

THE MAHARAJAH SCINDIA.—Various have been the reasons assigned for the visit of the Maharajah Scindia to Calcutta; but our contemporary, the Phoenix, gives the following statement, which has been supplied him, as authentic:—"The visit of the Maharajah Scindia to the presidency has a very important object in view. It is reported that he has come here to solicit from Lord Canning the support and interference of the British Government in his behalf against his rebellious subjects, who, at the instigation of his mother, have conspired against his throne. It is said that the Maharajah has for some reason or other made himself obnoxious to the queen-mother, who, with the assistance of a strong party formed against him, consisting of the most influential men of Gwalior, is endeavouring to dethrone the Maharajah. The Maharajah has, we understand, been promised the support of the British Government in the event of any demonstration being made against him by his disaffected subjects, who, it is said, are ripe for rebellion. As a preliminary step, we hear that his lordship has instructed the political agent at Gwalior to remonstrate with the insurgents, giving them clearly to understand that, in the event of an outbreak, the British Government will most certainly espouse the cause of the Maharajah, and interpose its authority in his favour. The Maharajah will leave this most probably a month hence, and, for his personal safety, will, we understand, be escorted to Gwalior by a party of British troops."

PATENTS FOR INVENTIONS.—The following notice has been issued:—"The Hon. Court of Directors having informed the Governor-General in Council that doubts are entertained as to the legality of an Act for granting exclusive privileges to inventors, it is hereby notified that no further petitioners will be authorized to file a specification of their inventions."

THE WESTERN JUMNA CANAL.—The net revenue derived from the Western Jumna Canal, under Captain Turnbull's administration, was, during 1853-54, Rs. 227,546-14-9; showing an increase of Rs. 56,790-11-10. The increase between 1847 and 1854 in irrigated pukka beegahs has been about 85,000, exclusive of the contract villages. These results appear to be satisfactory.

H.M.'s 29TH FOOT is to be retained for a fourth year in Burmah. They had received orders for Calcutta, and a wing had arrived at Rangoon. Their library, furniture, horses, &c. had been sold, when they were suddenly ordered to Thayatmyo. The case is only a hard one, if the second order was issued without sufficient reason.

THE GOVERNMENT AGENCY.—The following notice was published in the Government Gazette of March 7:—"Notice is hereby given, that the undermentioned balances of accounts in the Government agency, if not claimed from the Accountant-general to the Government of India by the parties entitled thereto, within six months from this date, will be carried to the credit of the Government as relinquished by the proprietors."—"We recognize the above notice as a threat indicating a strong desire on the part of Government to get rid of the unclaimed balances. To carry such a threat into execution would be simply impossible."

MUNICIPAL IMPROVEMENTS.—The Governor-General sent a message to the Legislative Council on Saturday, March 7, refusing his assent to the bill for the municipal improvement of the suburbs of Calcutta. The principal clauses of every bill must be published three months before the bill can pass. A clause for suppressing the beating of tom-toms, and the blowing of horns at untimely hours, had not been so published. Hence the veto.

KOHAT, MARCH 11.—Major Lumsden and his party are expected here daily from Peshawur, on their way to Cabool or Candahar, or to some place in Dost Mahomed's territories, as politicals, I hear. A great man with a great camp arrived here some days ago from Mooltan, and is gone on to Peshawur to meet Major Lumsden's party. He, I understood, proceeds with the major's camp, as Government vakeel at the Caboolie court. He is spoken of as a very distinguished personage, of high respectability, and one who, during the Mooltan campaign, performed great things for the Government. For his past pains he is of course receiving a very handsome allowance from Government, and will I doubt not for the future also—his name is Foujdur Khan. These gents had better take mighty great care of themselves; it is not over safe going where they are going, to almost certain death I fear. Brigadier Chamberlain is gone out again with a force to try and get a hold of the "Bouzdars"—some strange names here—who have been in the habit of molesting such as chanced to come in their way. As before, he will have led out the force, and bring them back again, having accomplished what?—nothing. Brigadier Chamberlain seems to be a mighty man in these parts, and carries on young wars to his own cheek.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDER.

FREIGHTS.

Quotations to London and Liverpool, 3l. to 3l. 17s.

IMPORTS (Calcutta, March 20).—The market continues in a favourable position as regards almost all Manchester goods, consequent on the favourable accounts from the Upper Provinces, and the improving aspect of the money market. In Metals, excepting Iron, the market continues without animation. Mule Twist.—A fair amount of business has been done without any material change in price, excepting Nos. 20 to 30, of which there is a very light stock in the hands of importers; and although the demand at present is not very great, arrivals might immediately be placed in the market. Coloured Yarns.—Turkey red, German and English dye, are rather neglected; prices, however, remain unaltered. Imperial red is in limited request. Orange and green are in good inquiry at previous prices. Chintzes and Prints of all descriptions have fallen both in demand and prices. A few sales of fancy style prints continue to be made for local requirements, at 0-3-9 to 0-4 annas per yard. Coloured Cottons.—The market for Turkey red goods was in a better position, but sales have been rather limited. Shirtings.—Grey 40-inch, low and middling qualities, have been sold freely, but at rather easier prices. Wider cloths are neglected, and prices have gone down about one to two annas per piece. White and figured are selling to a limited extent, at rather discouraging prices. Madapollams.—Grey, low and middling, continue in fair request; but they have barely maintained previous prices. Fine qualities are rather dull of sale, and white quite neglected. Cambrics.—Grey, 50-inch by 24 yards, continue in demand at former price. 61-inch have also been in demand at Rs. 3-14 to 6. Jaconets.—Grey low and middling continue to sell freely at rather improved prices. White have been in moderate request at full former prices. The reported sales are Grey at Rs. 1-11 to 2-6, and White at Rs. 1-10-6 to 3-2 per piece. Book Muslins.—There have been a few inquiries for the Burmese market, but without any improvement in price. The reported sales are at Rs. 1-2 to 4-12 per piece. Swiss Muslins have also been sold to a limited extent at Rs. 5-4 to 5-6 per piece. Lappets, of low and ordinary descriptions, continue selling for the Upper Provinces at Rs. 1-5 to 3-9 per piece, and Swiss Lappets at Rs. 6-8 per piece. Mull Mulls.—White also continue to sell to a fair extent at Rs. 1-13 to 2-5. Fine at Rs. 3-6 to Rs. 9 per piece. Mull Stripes at Rs. 2-4 to 2-8 per piece. Japan Spots are selling to a moderate extent at Rs. 2-5 to 3-8 per piece.

EXPORTS (Calcutta, March 20).—The Produce market has shown more animation since our last. There has been a desire to operate freely in almost all staples; but the continued absence of supplies, together with a general advance on prices of the principal articles of export, have restrained operation. Raw silk and silk piece goods have been in active demand, and prices are high. In consequence, Corahs have risen to Rs. 110 to 130 per corgé. Sugar.—The demand continues for Gurpatta (Date), principally for Great Britain; and as supplies are coming in slowly, prices have advanced about 0-2 per maund. Purchases since our last have been made at Rs. 8-12 to 9-5. In Benares, and other descriptions, there has not been much doing of late. Rice.—A fair amount of business in table sorts has continued for Great Britain. There is not much in the market, and the price has advanced about 0-4 to 0-5 per maund on our last quotations. Active operations in Ballum are going on for China at firm prices; but shipments for the Mauritius and Bombay have rather fallen off during the past week. Lac Dye.—In limited operation for Great Britain; but there has been some inquiry for known marks for America. Prices firm. Shell Lac.—The demand has been less active since our last; there is not much of fine qualities in the market, and prices particularly of known marks are firmly held. Oil Seeds.—Little of the new crop linseed is coming down, and supplies in the market are unequal to the requirement; purchases are principally for America, at about 3 annas per maund above our last quotations. Rape and Poppy Seed are being shipped moderately for Great Britain; and as supplies are light, prices have also improved about 1 to 1½ annas per maund. Oil.—Castor Oil continues to engage attention for Great Britain and America at Rs. 10-8 to 11-8 per maund. Nothing doing in other descriptions. Saltpetre.—The market has been, and still continues, rather dull. Little doing for all quarters. Supplies in the market are small, and may be estimated at 6,000 bags of all descriptions.

MADRAS.

MARCHING TROOPS.

We hear from all quarters that the dissatisfaction prevalent amongst officers and men at the present systematically frequent, long, arduous, and expensive marches, is loud and deep. The march is literally the road to ruin. The females of a native family are obliged to part with their jewels for the purpose of providing themselves with bandies. When the regiment has arrived at the new station, worn, poor, and wretched, the men are put under stoppages for tents, &c.; yet before two years have elapsed, and before they are well out of debt, they find themselves again upon the road. The discontent is not assuaged by a knowledge of the fact, that some corps in this respect are either more favoured or more fortunate than others. Jack Sepoy in the 103rd M.N.I. finds out that his fellow soldier in the 104th has not marched one mile to his two; and asks whether this when enjoined by no necessity is fair? Ahmed Khan, during his service in the 104th, has crossed the Kala Panee twice; whilst Gholam Khader, in the 105th, has never seen a wave. A striking instance of the inequality with which the demands of Government are made upon the services of different corps, appears in comparing the marches of the 17th and the 32nd M.N.I. The former, in 1850-51, marched from Secunderabad to Hoosingabad, 478 miles; in 1854-55 from Hoosingabad to Kamptee, 175 miles; in 1856 from Kamptee to Kurnool, 570 miles; and is now (1857) on its way to Madras, 300 miles. The total distance in this period will have been 1,523 miles. The 32nd M.N.I., after five years at Kamptee, marched thence in 1851 to Jubbulpore, 154 miles; thence in 1854-5 to Saugor, 109 miles, thence back again to Kamptee, 263 miles; the total distance during this period being 526 miles. It is not by any means sought to put the 32nd M.N.I. in any unfavourable light. We are certain that, as far as men and officers are concerned, their comrades throughout the army would congratulate them on their good fortune. Still the system which on the one hand metes out labour, privation, and danger, and on the other hand, ease, comfort, and batta, with such gross inequality, cannot be too severely condemned. The 17th M.N.I. will, on its arrival at Madras, embark for Burmah, from whence it returned in 1845.

But the 32nd, which has not been on foreign service for the last 20 years, and which has received full batta for the last 12 years, is en route now for a full batta station. It is in vain that we look for a reason why the 6th, 14th, 17th, and 37th Regiments should be sent on foreign service before the 22nd, 23rd, 32nd, and 33rd. The latter corps, with the 17th and 37th, were lately garrisoning the most northerly stations; but the 17th and 37th have been moved south, out of their tour, to be put on board ship, and sent away from their families to Burmah. Yet not the shadow of a reason appears for the choice having fallen upon them. But for an example of knocking about, perhaps a detail of the recent movements of the 34th M.N.I. during the last few years is the most remarkable. Since 1848, this regiment has marched as follows:—From Mangalore to Vellore; thence to Madras; thence back to Vellore; thence again to Madras; thence taken ship to Chittagong; thence to Dacca; thence to Moultmein; thence to the northern division; thence to Secunderabad; thence to Bellary; and thence to Trichinopoly.

In admitting the evils of our military system of dispersion, and deploring the policy which neglects to concentrate our troops, and thus afford a field for the development of a military spirit, the improvement of discipline, the diminution of mortality, the increase of the comforts and decrease of the labours and expenses of the sepoy—we must not blind ourselves to the fact that they may be greatly aggravated by neglect or partiality. He is a poor reformer who will not take such modicum of improvement as he can get; and we believe that earnestness combined with a little energy might even now effect much. What is to prevent the functionary who orders the movement of the various corps, satisfying, not himself but the Commander-in-Chief, that each corps has its due, and only its due, share of long marches and foreign service? Where practicable, why should not the limits of a march be confined to about 400 miles? In the instance of the 17th M.N.I., more than half of a private's pay has been swallowed up in cart hire during the last thirty months. We are informed that from Hoosingabad to Kamptee, thence to Kurnool, and thence to Madras, the cart hire alone for a sepoy's family amounts to no less than 120 rupees. On leaving Madras for Burmah, this richly remunerated nimmakuvalla of John Company must provide a bandy for his wife and family to his native village. Can we wonder if, in the face of such things, discontent will fester sometimes into mutiny?—Athenaeum, March 24.

THE MADRAS REFORM.

We ventured some months since to suggest a scheme by which the more patent objections to the ryotware tenure might possibly be removed. The local journals, forgetting the adage about lookers on, indignantly reprimanded our presumption. All that was sensible in our scheme, they said, had been anticipated by the Government of Madras. For the rest we were overwhelmed with parish vestry chatter about local experience. The final orders have at last been issued, and the principles so roughly set aside have become the fundamental laws of the entire Presidency.

Without any violent revolution, in phrases which suggest anything rather than a vast social change, the ryotwari tenure is abolished. In its stead, we have a system which, though it might fairly be denominated khet-war, must in the end produce the English tenure. The radical change we advocated, that the estate, and not the individual, should be liable for the revenue, is the guiding principle of the Madras reform.

The survey of the presidency has been sanctioned. This operation, which will extend over twenty years, and cost seventy-eight lacs, is to include all cultured and culturable land, but not the great spaces of jungle and waste which exist in the Madras presidency. Simultaneously with the survey, the resettlement of the districts will advance. The proposal of the Madras Government was to assess every holding at twenty-five per cent. of its gross produce, and fix this proportion unalterably for fifty years. The grain-rent was then to be commuted into a specie-rent by an average settled every seven years. The Court of Directors consider this system too minute and too troublesome. Moreover, by making the gross produce the basis of the assessment, the Government would, in their judgment, give an unfair advantage to the holders of the more fertile lands. The Court therefore direct that the assessment shall be calculated on the net produce, and fixed once for all for thirty years. This is the system of the North-West, and there seems no reason to believe that the fluctuations in price are more violent in the one presidency than the other. Even if from local causes there should be extreme variations, the cultivator with a really low assessment will be enabled to sustain a bad year by aid of the profits of a good one. The assessment thus rated is to be fixed, not upon the individual holding, but upon the survey block, which, whatever the sub-division of rights, will be invariably liable for its whole assessment. Any person sharing in such a block who falls into arrear will lose his right, which may be made over to any one willing to accept his liabilities. Of course while land retains no value this is no threat, but with a low assessment, land becomes a saleable and valuable commodity. Moreover, the Government is strongly urged to adopt the Bombay principle. In that presidency small estates are clubbed together into one survey block. No rights are impaired, but no sub-division is permitted, and in the event of any holder failing to pay, the remainder must take his bit or vacate their own. That is, in practice, the wealthy ryot buys out all holders of sub-divisions smaller than the survey block, and gradually each block will come to be held by at most one tenant.

This is the key to the entire reform. As the Court most justly observe, under the present system, infinite sub-division must at last kill the revenue. The population, clinging like Irish cottiers to bitlocks of land barely able to maintain a family and its pig, must lose altogether the power of paying revenue. Under this reformed system, the effect of sub-division will be simply to throw the land piece by piece into the hands of the capitalist, the pauper ryot becoming a paid labourer. The trade in land becomes absolutely free, and the most will belong to the richest as it does everywhere else. The Government has nothing to do with the status, the means, the fortunes, or the character of the proprietor. He may be a peasant, owning the tenth part of a third share in survey block. He may be a money-lender who has ousted the pauper yeomanry over 100 square miles. In either case the revenue must be paid inexorably under the penalty of the hammer. Property can then obey its natural tendency to accumulate in a few hands, and we may hope yet to see landholders in Madras vying in wealth with those of Bengal.

The process will be accelerated by that gradual but steady rise in value which is inevitable when land has once passed into the hands of capitalists. The rent which in 1800 crushed the holders of some large Bengal estates, is in 1857 scarcely felt by the proprietors. The consequence is that steady decrease in sales to which the zemindars point as their best argument against the new Sale Law. The Madras farmer, moreover, will enjoy one more advantage over his brother of Bengal. Like him, he is responsible only for himself. Like him, he is unfettered by any copartnership, or any doubt as to his title. But unlike him, he has for the present only one rent to pay. The Bengal ryot pays two. Doubtless, as property accumulates, and land aggregates itself into few hands, rent in its English sense will commence. But, for at least one generation, the rise of the frugal peasant will be unimpeded by any middleman between himself and the Government. We cannot doubt that the reform will be most beneficial. The boldest advocates of the ryotwar cannot deny that, however just and sound in principle, its results are these.

One-fifth of Madras only is cultivated. There is not in that Presidency a landholder who could pay down on demand ten thousand pounds. There is, therefore, no class gifted by the labour of others with that leisure which is the first necessity of civilization. Its boldest advocates can but argue that it establishes individual property in the soil. So does the new system, with this slight further advantage, that the individual property is worth having. As to the proprietary right, it is more complete than ever, the ryot being in fact a copyhold tenant, liable on certain renewals of his lease to fine.

There is but one feature in the reform which seems open to serious objection. The Government of Madras originally suggested that the rent should be fixed for fifty years. The home authorities have reduced the period to thirty. We cannot but regard this order as a mistake. It proceeds from the old and fatal desire to increase taxation with the profits of the land. It is dictated by the secret belief that the land-tax must always be the great source of Indian revenue; that one class must to all times continue to bear the burden of the empire. Under the influence of this idea a long settlement is dreaded almost as much as a perpetual one. The Government forgets that the land, as it bears all the taxation, already bears, ex necessitate rei, more than its share; that if in any emergency the aggregate of revenue must be increased, it would be easier, as well as fairer, to place the new burden on the unladen horse.

Lastly, as to the effect of these measures on the revenue of the empire. We need scarcely say we are not of those who believe that this ought to be a matter of indifference. Liberty in a state means usually either the expenditure of money not its own, or failure to perform some of the duties for the performance of which Governments exist. No reduction of taxation can justify an inadequate police. But the question in this particular seems to us scarcely open to argument. It is a proposition in arithmetic, not a political problem. The settlement in South Arcot has been reduced by thirty-three per cent. The revenue has increased thirty-four per cent. If then a reduction in one district produced eight lakhs, what will it produce, everything else being the same on twenty times that extent of territory. Even the time, which the process will require, may be deduced from the same returns. The assessment of the presidency is to be reduced twenty-five per cent., and the cultivated acreage must therefore increase one-fourth. In South Arcot it increased one-fourth in a year, and the recovery will therefore occupy in the worst case but one year. In practice the loss will never be perceived, the survey moving only at the rate of a district in a twelvemonth. This will, we hope, be accelerated, at least as soon as it becomes evident that the reform is not to produce insolvency.

The present Government of Madras deserves, and will, we hope, obtain, high credit for the care and determination with which it has prosecuted this reform. In public that Government is a little too apt to attach importance to museums, exhibitions, societies, and administrative frippery of different kinds. This reform, however, proves that it has not lost sight of its true function; that while introducing Merino sheep, petting photographers, and collecting valuable armour, it can still advance the millions, for whom it is responsible, one step nearer to prosperity.—Friend of India.

TRAVANCORE AS IT IS.

The annual reports contain the best account we have yet seen of the present condition of Travancore. This little kingdom, the last of the purely Hindoo states, the only section of India in which the social theory of Hindooism is still carried into practice, is slowly drifting to destruction. For years it has been given up to a minister execrated by every European familiar with his career, and to the only resident in India who holds it his duty to support abuses so that they be of native origin. The province, partly from its position, partly from the policy of General Cullen, almost escapes the memory of Europeans. It is forgotten save when a new wing is added to the observatory, or a request for reform is refused, when a new museum has been opened, or some one with a heart and a pen protests against the oppression of 100,000 slaves. Its judicial system occasionally attracts the attention of the Madras Athenæum, and some years ago that journal made a strong effort to break up the existing régime. It failed, and from that time forth the country has been a Paradis à la Rochefoucauld, a place where with good digestions and bad hearts men may lap themselves in luxury. The Government of Madras, which knows all this and a great deal more, wakes occasionally with a start, and talks of insolvency in the distance. Then assurances of retrenchment flow in soothingly, and the momentary energy once more evaporates. Or perhaps the merchants of Bombay are roused to attack the monopoly of pepper. Then the retrenching resident mournfully deprecates reform, on account of the disastrous condition of the revenue. A deficit, however, as Carlyle says, is a gulf that swallows shams, and there is a heavy deficit accumulating in Travancore.

The normal revenue of the state, with its area of 4,600 miles, and its population of 1,260,000, is about forty lacs of rupees. The taxation therefore is just twice as heavy as that of Bengal. That, however, was the average revenue from 1843 to 1853, and it is sufficient, with economy, for all the necessary expenses of even a carelessly-managed native state. The Nair brigade costs Rs. 1,28,000. The judicial police, revenue, pension, and other establishments cost about Rs. 6,50,000, and the remainder is sucked up by the palace and the priests. Their absorbent powers are, however, large and increasing. The palace, which in 1826 cost Rs. 3,87,000, cost in 1846 Rs. 9,52,000, and in 1854, after great efforts to effect retrenchment, Rs. 4,88,000. The latter expenditure might be borne, but the revenue is falling off. Like that of most native states it is principally derived from monopolies, and the new liberality of the British government is drying the stream up at its source. A quarter of the revenue is derived from the monopoly of tobacco, which is sinking fast. Salt and pepper, cardamums and teak, chillies and betel, are all state monopolies. Hunting General Cullen through his discursive report, in which cardamums and civil justice, hornblends and the pepper question, lignite and education, blackwood and the Nair brigade are all mixed up inextricably, we arrive at the following figures:—

Land Revenue	Rs. 15,26,427
Duties	1,95,144
Salt (country)	1,16,936
Salt Bombay	1,53,705
Cardamums	1,17,962
Tobacco	10,00,000
Pepper	1,75,744
Miscellaneous	1,52,211
Abkaree	56,899
Teak	41,450

Total 35,36,479

This is at least two lakhs in excess of the truth, as we have given the gross receipts for all the monopolies except tobacco, omitting all the charges which are not given. It is difficult to discover also, whether the figures under the head of duties represent customs or the total trade. We suspect the latter is the case, as the management would then be redolent of native finance, the expenditure on the preventive service being rather more than the receipts. All these monopolies are drying up. The tobacco revenue is in "serious danger," the free tobacco making its way, as it is the privilege of untaxed things to do, in spite of restrictive laws. The sale of cardamums has declined one-third in a single year. That of teak has declined one-half. The revenue derived from pepper has fallen forty per cent., and the production more than fifty per cent. Nor, with the exception of the last article, which has suffered from a bad season as much as from the taxation, can we see any prospect of revival. It is the tendency of a monopoly when once broken through to go down with a run, and the Travancore Government, with its half-paid agency and lax system, is powerless to maintain restrictions as the Government of India was to enforce the transit duties. So far, therefore, as General Cullen's figures may guide us, it would appear that Travancore is borrowing about seven lakhs a year. That is as if the Indian Government had to meet an annual deficit of seven millions sterling. There can be but one termination to such a career.

And yet the land is one which under decent administration might be made productive. There is scarcely a production of the tropics or of the temperate zone which will not flourish there luxuriantly. Coffee and pepper, indigo and cardamums, wheat and potatoes, nutmegs and cloves, betel-nut and tobacco, are all cultivated successfully. European fruits thrive in the higher country, and the province enjoys the incalculable benefit of three climates, each of which is for the purposes of cultivation absolutely distinct. There is iron and granite, teak and every variety of tropical wood. There is abundance of cheap labour, and though the means of transit are imperfect, the sea is always near. The country in truth wants nothing, save a government which, while it secures order and property, shall send the priests back to the beggary enjoined by the Shasters, and expend on roads the sums now wasted on the palace.—Friend of India.

THE MOPLAHS.—The Madras Spectator affirms that the Moplahs are in such a state of agitation as to require the serious attention of Government. An invitation issued by Government to visit the Exhibition in Calicut, has been construed by the clans as a trick intended to deprive them of their headmen. Most of the tribe who accepted service in the Malabar police corps have resigned.

THE MADRAS NATIVE ASSOCIATION and Bombay Native Association, have both petitioned against the amalgamation of the courts. They fear that the Supreme Court will be absorbed. The petitions indicate strongly the local character of these associations. The people of the interior whom they profess to represent, care nothing about the Supreme Court, and must in any case be benefited by the reform.

Mr. D. Elliot, member of the Legislative Council of India, has been granted leave of absence to England on medical certificate.

H.M.'s 43RD FOOT ON ROUTE FROM BANGALORE to the Presidency, have suffered greatly from cholera.

THE 6TH N.I. embarked on board the ship Cornwall, for Rangoon, on the 20th March.

PENSIONS.—The Madras Spectator mentions that pensions of all kinds to be given to the family and dependents of the late nawab of the Carnatic, will amount to Rs. 48,212 per mensem, or Rs. 5,78,552 per annum, namely:—

Immediate family	Rs. 35,097	5	4
Chief officers	3,300	0	3
Pensioners of the Carnatic Sircar	7,235	5	6
Hubshees	220	8	0
Hemmannees	13	2	0
Servants	2,346	6	0

Total per mensem Rs. 48,212 10 11

This amount, with the sum of Rs. 2,77,800 per annum, presently being paid to the old Carnatic stipendiaries and jagheerdars, raises the total disbursements to Rs. 8,56,322 per annum.

RAILWAY RECEIPTS AND DISBURSEMENTS.—The traffic receipts of the Madras Railway, during the week ending the 21st instant, amounted for passengers to Rs. 2,657-6-6; and for luggage, goods, &c., to Rs. 2,417-15-8; making in all Rs. 5,075-4-2. The whole distance open being sixty-five miles, the average receipt per mile is Rs. 78-1-4. The sums disbursed at this presidency, on account of the Madras Railway, in the month of December last, amounted to Rs. 5,08,558-6-7. The aggregate amount of disbursements, from the commencement of operations on the 1st October, 1850, to 31st December, 1856, amounted to Rs. 78,88,988-13-4. The amount of collections realized on account of traffic earnings, and paid into the general treasury, in December, amounted to Rs. 23,301-4. The total receipts thus made, commencing from July last, amount to Rs. 111,772-2.—Spectator, March 26.

THE 1ST FUSILIERS.—The 1st Fusiliers embarked for Bushire yesterday afternoon, having marched down to the beach soon after three o'clock. The men were in the highest spirits; and should the opportunity present itself, the regiment will, we have no doubt, gain fresh laurels in the land of the Shahs. The subjoined complimentary order was issued by the right honourable the commander of the garrison yesterday:—"The 1st Madras Fusiliers being under orders for embarkation this evening, are struck off the strength of the garrison from this date. The Right Honourable the Governor cannot allow the Fusiliers to leave Fort Saint George without recording his satisfaction with their conduct during the period they have been quartered within the garrison of Madras. While expressing his sincere wishes for their welfare, to Colonel Stevenson, the officers and the men of the regiment, Lord Harris feels it scarcely necessary to add his conviction, that the distinguished character which their corps has maintained on active service, will be upheld by them on the present occasion to the fullest extent."—Spectator, March 18.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

MOVEMENT OF CORPS.

Fort St. George, Mar. 20, 1857.—The movement of the 17th regiment N.I. from Kurnool to Burmah, to embark at Madras, ordered in G. G. O., 24th Feb., 1857, No. 52, is cancelled; the corps is to march to Madras, to be there stationed.

The following movements are ordered:—

BOMBAY.

MR. THOMAS THORNTON.

We have much pleasure in giving prominent insertion to the following graphic sketch of the career of Mr. Thomas Thornton, for which we are indebted to the Poona Observer :—

"We observe it is announced in the daily papers that Mr. Thomas Thornton, second magistrate of police at Bombay, is about to retire from the service of Government on a pension of 460l. per annum, to which he is now entitled. Mr. Thornton has been about thirty-three years in India, having, we believe, come out to Bombay in the year 1824, as a recruit for the artillery. He was at one time the best swordsman in this presidency,—perhaps, in all India,—and was specially selected by Sir Charles Colville, the then Commander-in-Chief, to teach Angelo's sword-drill to the Bombay army. After serving some years in a military capacity with much distinction, Mr. Thornton left the army to seek employment in the civil branch of the Government service, which he was not long in obtaining. He was for several years chief clerk of the Fort Police Office, from which situation he was promoted to the office of head uncovenanted assistant in the Judicial Department of the Secretariate; the duties of which he performed with great zeal and ability, and to the entire satisfaction of the secretaries under whom he served. His talents were of a very conspicuous order, and as a mark of the approval of Government of services the value of which could not be overrated, he was selected to succeed Mr. Benjamin Noton as coroner of Bombay from which post he was promoted to that of Junior Magistrate of Police, on the suspension of the late Mr. Danvers, who died at Alexandria on his way to England. Upon the death of Mr. Rivett, Mr. Thornton succeeded to the office of Second Magistrate of Police, which he now fills. It is not too much to say of this gentleman, that a more upright, painstaking, and impartial magistrate never adorned the Bench; he is thoroughly independent, and has always performed his duties to the satisfaction of the public. So much has this been the case, that we do not remember during his seven years' term of office as a magistrate that any decision of his was ever found fault with by the press. In private life, too, he is a man made to be loved, and it is on every account much to be regretted that the state of his health has rendered it imperatively necessary that he should retire and pass the remainder of his days in his native land. Mr. Thornton's whole career in India has been most honourable to him; and he has furnished in his life one of the brightest examples that we have ever met with to the young men of the present day, of what may be attained by sheer industry and integrity, unassisted by any adventitious aid whatever."—Telegraph and Courier.

THE LONDON MAIL of Feb. 26 arrived at Bombay March 23 (per Singapore). The mail of March 10 left Aden March 29 (per Bombay).

A SERIOUS ATTEMPT has been made against the lives of six officers of the 5th regiment N.I. including Captains Symonds and Scott, Lieut. Brown, Dr. Trestrail, and two others. Some poison was mixed with the soup prepared for and intended to be taken by them, and it was not until one of them vomited, and the others felt severe pain from the effects of what they had taken, that the treachery became apparent. Several persons have been taken up on suspicion, and the soup has been sent for medical examination. All the officers are doing well.

ALL NEWSPAPERS despatched from India by the post must in future be pre-paid.

THE OFFICERS who were placed under arrest on account of Lieut. Hand's death, have been released.

THE APPEAL SYSTEM.—The Bombay Guardian publishes the following story:—"A fisherman named Gopal, living in the village of Veshuve, in the Konkan, branded his wife on the stomach, for some trifling offence, with a hot iron, inflicting a wound both broad and deep. The cruelty became known, and the fisherman was sentenced by the Third Assistant Magistrate to three months' confinement, with seven days' solitary imprisonment. The First Assistant cancelled this sentence, thinking it too lenient, and ordered that the man should be imprisoned for one year, and receive thirty stripes. The judge found that it was illegal to give more than twenty-five stripes. The case eventually was brought before the Sudder Foudjaree Adawlut, who found the whole sentence illegal, and released the man." If guilty, the appeal system exempted this man from deserved punishment. If innocent, it protracted his misery three months.

SUPERSTITION.—An inquest, held upon the body of a lascar who died of tetanus, has been reported. It appears the lascar was accused of stealing a turban, and compelled, in order to prove his innocence, to thrust his hands into boiling oil. The wounds remained for some time undressed, tetanus supervened, and the man died. The lascar in his deposition before his death, stated that he trusted the ordeal would prove his innocence, and that one Chundoo threatened to have him punished, if he did not thrust his hand into the boiling oil. Men in England believe superstitions equally ridiculous. We have ourselves heard the screams of a pig roasted alive to remove a charm.

A DRAWING CLASS has been established at the Sir Jamssetjee School of Art and Design. It is primarily intended to instruct artisans and mechanics. All candidates for admission were subjected to an examination in geometry. About 100 presented themselves, and it appeared that the majority had gone through a regular course of mathematics.

THE HINDOOS OF BOMBAY are about to petition Parliament in the matter of adoptions. They are anxious that the Hindoo law should be preserved in all its integrity, and should extend to states as well as families. The petitioners gracefully declare that they are willing to go back no further than 1700 for the root of their genealogical trees. The memorialists will meet with little support in England. Those who understand the question know that they have not the shadow of right. Those who do not will never sympathise with a practice utterly repugnant to English feeling.

MR. H. L. ANDERSON will, it is rumoured, act as chief secretary during Mr. Young's absence in England.

SIR ROBERT HAMILTON is a passenger by the present steamer to Europe.

A FRIGHTFUL TRAGEDY.—The town of Bhownuggur, a few days ago, was made the scene of a most frightful tragedy. A native contemporary mentions, on the authority of a private letter, that a sepoy of the Purdese caste, having illicit intercourse with the wife of a Hindoo carpenter, the friends of the aggrieved husband took an opportunity of severely beating him. The man determined to be revenged, and having procured a sword, met the carpenter on the 12th instant on the public road, and cut him in two, at a stroke. A number of boys, who were playing by the road-side, observed the perpetration of this horrid deed, immediately pointed out the man, who at once fell with his deadly weapon upon the children, and killed six of them. The intelligence having spread, attempts were made to secure him, in which more than a dozen persons were wounded. The desperate villain finally destroyed himself. The collector of Ahmedabad was to proceed to the spot to cause the necessary investigation into the matter.

THE NEW FIVE PER CENT. LOAN.—We understand that the new five per cent. loan is being fast paid up, both here and in Calcutta. The amount received into the treasuries up to this time cannot be less than a crore of rupees. As we anticipated some time ago, the whole amount required by Government, 3 crores, will be supplied before two more months are over.—Bombay Times.

THE BANKS have reduced their rates 1 per cent. all round. CIVIL CHANGES.—We hear that Captain Cowper, the revenue commissioner for alienations, proceeds home shortly, on leave for six months. Mr. H. B. Ellis, of the civil service, at present acting as commissioner in Scinde, will act for Captain Cowper; Mr. Gibbs, the judicial assistant in Scinde, doing duty for Mr. Ellis until the arrival of Mr. Frere. The following appointments are made consequent on the return of Major Freedy to his regiment. Mr. E. L. Jenkins, of the Custom-house, proceeds to Kurrachee, to take acting charge of Major Freedy's appointment as collector of that district, and Mr. A. Gray is made acting deputy commissioner of customs, salt, and opium in the Bombay Custom-house.

COURT-MARTIAL.

LIEUT. E. N. B. MACREADY, 2ND EUROPEAN REGIMENT, L.I.

Head-quarters, Bombay, March 31, 1857.—At a European general court-martial, assembled at Kurrachee, on Wednesday, March 18, 1857, Lieut. E. N. B. Macready, 2nd Eur. reg. L.I., at present attached to the dépôt at Kurrachee, was arraigned on the following charge, viz. :—

Charge.—For having, at camp Kurrachee, on or about Dec. 17, 1856, been drunk on duty under arms, he being at the time line officer of the day.

The above being in breach of the articles of war.

Finding.—Not guilty of the charge, and most fully acquitted.

Confirmed.

(Signed) H. SOMERSET, Lieut.-Gen.

Remarks by the Commander-in-Chief.—By the prisoner's own statement, in his defence, he admits having remained at the billiard-table of the 1st Fusiliers until one o'clock in the morning when he was on line duty, and as such as responsible for the safety of the camp. The evidence of the non-commissioned officers and soldiers of the guard, whom he appears to have kept under arms for an unusual and unauthorized time, is clear and distinct as to his excited state and his violent and unbecoming language, for which there does not appear to have been the slightest cause or occasion.

I trust that the long arrest to which the prisoner has been subjected will be a caution to him, in the commencement of his career as an officer, to conduct his duties hereafter in an officerlike and becoming manner; nothing can warrant or justify violent and unbecoming language in an officer towards the soldiers under his orders.

The prisoner has had a narrow escape, and I hope it will be a warning to him.

Lieut. Macready will be released from his arrest, and return to his duty.

The Commander-in-Chief has observed that a system very generally prevails in this army of conveying censure to officers for omissions of duty and slight breaches of discipline by the medium of the Order Book. His Excellency much disapproves of this system, as tending to weaken the authority of commanding officers rather than uphold it. With a right-minded officer, cases of this kind can be best met by the commanding officer pointing out the error privately, or at orderly-room, in a kind and considerate manner, and with the careless and ill-disposed, personal reproof will be found more efficacious than a page of reprimand. Should personal reproof be of no avail, the offender on the next occasion should be reported to superior authority.

By order of His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief.

STEAM TRAFFIC ON THE INDUS.—The import returns of the steam traffic on the Indus for the quarter ending 1st January, 1857, give for freight on goods Rs. 11,783-12-6, and Rs. 3,082-3 for passengers. The estimated value of the goods carried was

Rs. 303,205-12-0. The export returns give Rs. 2,611-15-1 for freight, and Rs. 2,189-2-8 for passengers; and the estimated value of the goods carried is Rs. 469,577. Government stores and a great number of Government passengers have been conveyed, which do not appear in the above statement. Internal steam river-traffic just established returns 30 per cent. What will railways do for the shareholders?

A REPORT prevails in the town of Kurrachee, but from what source it has emanated we are unable to trace, that the Persians are advancing from Herat upon Kandahar. If the information be correct, it is what we all along expected would take place,—whether it be so or not, it behoves Government to take such preparatory measures as shall secure us from any sudden surprise. Private rumours have for some time past been in circulation to the effect that a European force will be assembled here so as to move onwards, in concert with a much stronger force from Peshawur, on the opening of the cold season, and this we announced in our columns some issues back,—the intention is daily gaining ground; and if it should be determined upon, we may hope, before the setting in of another cold season, to find a large army composed of Bombay and Bengal troops concentrated at Sukkur. Dost Mahomed is said to be quietly ensconced at Cabul, watching the turn of events, and up to last accounts was quite unsettled as to what part he should take in the approaching struggle.

COMMUNICATION WITH MOOLTAN.—As we were going to press we were gratified by receiving a notice (which will be found above) from the Government freight agent, intimating the resumption of the communication between this place and Mooltan. This will be gratifying intelligence to the many who have poured into our ears their grievous wrongs on the part of—we fear to say whom—in the recent sudden and summary suspension of the Government communication.—Sindian, March 18.

A MUTINY ON BOARD A SHIP.—The ship Asia, commander J. J. Woodcock, of 570 tons, from London, arrived off our harbour last Sunday evening, with the following cargo: 764 hogsheads ale, for the Bengal Government; 1,372 rails, 11,400 chairs, for Scinde Railway Company; and sixty-nine cases merchandise variously consigned. We understand that during the voyage a mutiny broke out on board of the above vessel, which, we believe, will shortly form subject for judicial inquiry.—Kossid, March 24.

BURMAH.

The following is from Rangoon, dated 13th March :—

"The Oriental steamer arrived here from Singapore on the afternoon of the 3rd instant empty, having deposited the 14th M.N.I. there. She left this on the 7th instant, with the whole of the 18th M.N.I., and a company of the 36th M.N.I. on board for Madras.

"A company of European artillery has arrived from Thayet-myo on its way to Bengal, and the 47th B.N.I. will be down here immediately. To enable them to be withdrawn, it is necessary to detach part of the 46th M.N.I. from Henzadah to Prome, the only corps besides H.M.'s 29th left at Thayet-myo being now the 25th B.N.I.

"The Bentinck arrived this morning with urgent orders to carry back to Calcutta H.M.'s 84th regt. The whole regiment, about 900 strong, proceed in her to-morrow. This is pretty sharp work, and the celerity used on the occasion reflects much credit on the authorities, the commissariat in particular. The well-known dacoit chief Goung-gee is again abroad, and a portion of the 45th M.N.I. here were held in readiness to proceed up to Henzadah at the shortest notice. Rangoon is now entirely denuded of European troops, with the exception of three companies of artillery.

THE STRAITS.

OUTBREAK OF THE CHINESE.

The schooner Good Luck, which arrived here (Sarawak) on the 10th of March, brought very unexpected intelligence of an outbreak at Sarawak on the part of some of the Chinese population, which had been attended with very serious consequences.

It appears that considerable discontent has existed for some time past on the part of the Chinese Kongs, who have long been engaged in working the gold mines situated some distance up the river. The yield of gold has latterly fallen off, and the strict administration of justice and prevention of smuggling, enforced by the Sarawak Government, have probably been found more distasteful at such a period than they would be in more prosperous circumstances. Whatever may have been the operating cause, certain it is that the illwill of these Chinese, who are chiefly of the Keh tribe, an unruly and turbulent class, has lately become more active towards the Sarawak Government, and we believe intimations of this reached Sir James Brooke, but unfortunately, it would seem, were not much heeded by him. For some days previous to the events we are about to relate, the Chinese had been noticed coming down the river to the town of Kuchin in greater numbers than usual, but no precautions were adopted in consequence. Such uninterrupted tranquillity has prevailed for a long time past, that little or no guard has been maintained, and the police consisted of only a few men. A considerable body of the Chinese probably dropped down the river on the evening of the 17th February, and being joined by the men who had previously reached the town, forming a body of about 200 men in all, a simultaneous attack was made by them at midnight at five points, by which they had the whole of the European residents at their mercy. They took possession of the stockaded posts called forts, in which were lodged the ammunition, treasure, opium, &c., and then attacked the three houses occupied by Sir James Brooke, Mr. Cruikshank, the magistrate, and Mr. Middleton, also in the service of the Sarawak Government. The surprise was so complete, and the Chinese had so effectually surrounded the houses before the alarm was given, that no resistance or stand could be made. Sir James Brooke, we understand, made his escape through his bathroom, and succeeded in reaching a creek on one side of his house, down which he swam until he reached a Malay village on the river near the entrance of the creek, where he was afterwards joined by Mr. Cruikshank, Mr. Middleton, and Mr. Crymble. On Mr. and Mrs. Cruikshank attempting to escape from their house, they were met by the Chinese, who immediately attacked them. In endeavouring to protect his wife, Mr. Cruikshank was very severely wounded, and Mrs. Cruikshank received such serious wounds on various parts of the body, that she lay apparently dead and covered with blood. Under the impression that she was really killed, and confused by his severe wounds, Mr. Cruikshank, who was unable to swim, must have retreated up the bank of the creek, and crossed it, as he ultimately was able to join Sir James Brooke; but such was his state of exhaustion and suffering, that he had no recollection of the manner in which he effected this. Mr. Nicoletts, who resided with Sir James Brooke, was murdered by the Chinese, under an impression that he was an officer of the Sarawak Government, which we believe was not the case. The same fate befell Mr. Wellington, a metallurgist, in the employment of the Borneo Company, who resided with Mr. Middleton. This gentleman's head was cut off by the Chinese, but it was given up next day when they found he was not in the service of Sir James Brooke. The Chinese then applied gunpowder to the three houses, and set them on fire, and they were completely destroyed. Sad to relate, two of Mr. Middleton's children perished in the fire, and the bodies of Messrs. Nicoletts and Wellington were also burned in the houses.

The other Europeans reached the Malay town on the opposite side of the river, and indeed no attempt was made to injure them, the fury of the Chinese being exclusively turned against those supposed to be connected with the Government. It appears that the Chinese having found that Mrs. Cruikshank was not dead, removed her to the edge of the jungle and covered her with a mat before setting fire to the house, and next morning they sent word to Bishop McDougall that she was still alive. They were requested to bring her to the bishop's house, which they did, and we are glad to learn that, although dangerously wounded, this lady was progressing favourably under the skilful treatment of Dr. McDougall.

On the 18th, the Chinese sent word to Bishop McDougall, Mr. Rupell, and Mr. Helms, that they had no intention of attacking them, and in fact requested these gentlemen to take upon themselves the government of the place. With a view to prevent the destruction of the town, negotiations were kept up with the Chinese, and it was at last arranged that they should be allowed to retire unmolested with their plunder. The Good Luck, which had been detained by the Chinese, was permitted to drop down the river.

On the 19th the Chinese proceeded up the river with their plunder, about four o'clock in the afternoon, and the Malays, who had then recovered from their surprise and were with difficulty restrained from attacking them, almost immediately set out in pursuit in large numbers in eight war boats, so that it is probable they would overtake the Chinese, and next accounts from Sarawak will likely bring us the result of the conflict. At one time on the 18th it was feared that an attack might be made upon the town by a fresh body of Chinese, about 100 strong, who came down the river that day, who were eager for plunder. After some debate, however, it would appear that they arranged matters with the party already in the field, and the whole went off on the following day, as above mentioned. The Chinese carried with them a large amount of spoil, consisting of some ten or twelve thousand dollars, which were in the Treasury, and eight or ten chests of opium, besides other property.

The European ladies and a number of Malay women and children were sent down to the mouth of the river under care of Mr. Helms, it being intended that the former should proceed to Singapore in the Good Luck; but this vessel was found so crowded with Chinese passengers that the plan was abandoned, and the ladies resolved to remain where they were until the arrival of the steamer Sir James Brooke, which was daily expected.

On finding that Sir James Brooke had escaped, the Chinese formed a cordon at some distance round his residence, and commenced an eager pursuit for him, but fortunately without success. Sir James and his companions, it would appear, having procured a boat, proceeded out of the Moratubas entrance of the river, and then gained the Samarahan river. From this he sent instructions in different directions ordering the Malays to join him at Simunjang on the Sadong river, where the Borneo Company have an establishment, and here he intended to concentrate his forces for future operations. Should it be found dangerous to remain at Kuchin, the rest of the Europeans would probably proceed to the same place. It was hoped, however, that the arrival of the steamer would assist in restoring confidence by insuring protection to the town. In the meantime, the bishop and other Europeans remained at Kuchin, and did not anticipate being annoyed.

Five of the Chinese were shot, and some of the native policemen lost their lives, the bodies of the latter being chopped into small pieces by the brutal Chinese.

The Chinese residing at Kuchin, as far as was known, did not join their countrymen in these proceedings. Indeed, they appear to have been completely panic-struck, and 108 of them, including some thirty women, took passage in the Good Luck for Singapore. It is probable that many of the native traders, Chinese, Klings, &c. will come to Singapore as soon as they have an opportunity, so that considerable injury to the trade of Sarawak, at least for a time, will be the result of this outbreak.

The above are the details we have been able to gather regarding this unfortunate affair since the arrival of the Good Luck. The next arrivals from Sarawak will furnish fuller and more precise intelligence. No time has been lost by Messrs. M'Ewen and Co. the agents of Sir James Brooke and the Borneo Company, in taking means for sending assistance. The schooner Water Lily was chartered, and proceeded to Sarawak on the 13th current with arms, ammunition, and other supplies, and as Capt. Sir William Hoste, the senior naval officer on this station, kindly permitted her to be towed some distance on her voyage by the Inflexible, the Water Lily would be able to reach Sarawak in a very few days.—Singapore Free Press, March 20.

[It will be seen by our Summary that, subsequently to the above date, the Governor, Sir J. Brooke, returned to Sarawak with a body of Malays and Dyaks, and inflicted terrible retribution on the insurgents, slaughtering, it is believed, more than 2,000 of them.]

OUTRAGES BY THE CHINESE.—The Penang Gazette teems with outrages committed by the Chinese in Penang. In one day eleven Chinese were brought before the police-court for various offences: there were ten convictions. The police are now permitted to carry loaded muskets, and have received orders to shoot any robbers who resist apprehension.

SINGAPORE, MARCH 9.—"Her Majesty's ship Inflexible has run on the Irene shoal in the Straits of Rhio. The steamer Zenobia has been despatched to assist her. The Inflexible has guns and gun-boats on board for China."

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON.

WEDNESDAY, April 29, 1857.

HOW WILL INDIAN RAILWAYS PAY?

WE observe, by the report of the Directors of the East-India Railway Company, which was yesterday submitted to the meeting of shareholders, that in March last the traffic receipts on the line to Raneeunge from Calcutta had reached 3,500*l.* per week. The receipts for the corresponding period last year amounted to about 2,000*l.*; and in the previous year they did not reach 1,000*l.* It thus appears that a steadily progressive increase has been maintained; and the shareholders have the gratification of knowing that the present rate of profits exceeds the amount of the guaranteed interest. There is no ground for presuming that the traffic has reached its maximum; but, supposing that the present rate only is maintained, the line to Raneeunge will yield a gross revenue of 182,000*l.* per annum. Deducting 82,000*l.* for working expenses, and calculating the capital expended upon the line in question at 1,500,000*l.*, a net profit of nearly 7 per cent. will be realized.

LORD ELGIN'S DEPARTURE FOR CHINA.

SEVERAL weeks have passed since it was duly announced that the Earl of Elgin had received the high appointment of Envoy Extraordinary to the Emperor of China; yet we only now learn that the noble lord has left England for Marseilles, there to embark on board the Caradoc for Alexandria, en route for his destination. Some surprise has been expressed at this apparently long delay; and the intelligence received by the present mail is not calculated to diminish the impatience of the public on the subject.

To our minds, the blame, if blame there be, rests rather with the authorities of our naval departments than with the ambassador. We know full well that diplomacy alone will avail but little at the court of Peking. If our envoy is to ascend the Pei-ho to deliver his credentials, it must be at the head of a goodly array of gun-boats. It is obvious, therefore, that without a considerable force, both naval and military, to back him on his arrival, it would have been useless for Lord Elgin to have precipitated his departure on so important a mission. We may be told that the military force in Persia is destined for this service. Be it so; even then Lord Elgin may be at Hong-kong quite as soon as the troops from the Persian Gulf. But gun-boats at all events must be despatched from this country; yet we learn that up to the present time great activity prevails in our dockyards in preparing and fitting out boats of this description, to reinforce the China squadron. When, however, it is remembered that at the close of the Russian war, everything was stated to be in readiness for naval operations upon a very extensive scale, we should have thought that the equipment necessary to make a suitable demonstration before our present foe, might have been completed in much less time.

CAN INDIA SUPPLY GREAT BRITAIN WITH COTTON?

IN a former article we have drawn attention to the lamentable consequences that would follow the suspension of the provision of raw material for our vast cotton manufacture; the necessity of enlarging the field of supply; and the expediency of investigating, with more seriousness and minuteness than have hitherto been devoted to the inquiry, whether India can furnish us with what we want. In that country cotton has long been produced; it was for ages the place where the manufacture of cotton goods was carried on to an extent and to a degree of perfection unrivalled elsewhere, until the local advantages of Great Britain, and the skill of its inventive mechanists, superseded the goods of India even upon its own soil. It remains to be seen whether the loss which the manufacturing industry of that country has sustained can be compensated by an increased development of her agricultural resources, thus at once benefiting the people vanquished in the race of competition and those to whom they have been forced to succumb.

Of the extent to which India might produce cotton, were the land suitable for its growth generally applied to its purpose, it is not necessary to say much. It is notorious that the soil and climate of a very large portion of the country bring it within the condition above specified. Of the British possessions, the Bengal districts are the least favourable; yet even within them cotton may be produced, and is produced largely. In many of the districts subject to the presidency of Madras, the cultivation of cotton might be carried on to a degree vastly exceeding its present amount; the extent of sea-coast within this presidency, coupled with the railroads now under construction, affording peculiar facilities for its transport. In the Bombay territories the extent of cotton-growing land is enormous, the major part enjoying great advantages for shipment. Such is the case in Guzerat; such will shortly be the case in the Southern Mahratta country, and in the sequestered district of Berar, both of which are about to be traversed by trunk or branch lines of railway. The recently-lapsed territories of Nagpore and those of the Nizam are as yet almost unexplored fields; and whoever looks at a map of India, and recollects that at no distant period that country, with little agricultural energy and no commercial enterprise, produced cotton enough to clothe its myriad population, of all classes and both sexes, with a surplus for exportation, need not entertain any misgivings as to its power, under favourable circumstances and with the stimulus of British capital and British mercantile knowledge, of administering fully to the demands even of the countless spindles of the north of England and the south of Scotland. Britain now clothes the masses in India with its manufactures; those masses can in return furnish the material required for their fabrication, which even now is sometimes difficult to be obtained elsewhere, and from a supply of which from other countries we may at some time be shut out.

No one, in fact, doubts that great advantage would accrue to both Great Britain and India from the latter becoming the cotton-garden of the former. No one doubts that India might furnish a much larger portion of the supply to England than is furnished at present by that country. India is the native soil of the plant, and from the days of Herodotus (probably long before) has been celebrated for its production. But the quality is in bad repute; not so much, however, on account of its natural inferiority, as of its alleged unsuitableness for the process of spinning as performed in this country. The staple is too short to be spun successfully except by hand, and probably, it might be added, by an Oriental hand. Other objections are made, but they rest on facts which are capable of change. The unfitness of the native Indian cotton for passing through the process to which it must be subjected here, though capable of being manipulated into the most beautiful fabrics in Asia, will, it is to be apprehended, remain an insuperable bar to its consumption, so long as a supply can be had from America. The American article is not absolutely better, it is perhaps not in fact so good; but it is capable of sustaining without injury a coarser and rougher treatment than its Indian rival.

When a trader finds one description of article unsaleable, he tries another; this must be the policy of India,—and there is abundant encouragement for pursuing it. The United States now supply the great demand of England for long-stapled cotton; yet in the United States the long-stapled cotton is an exotic, the cultivation of which began little more than three-quarters of a century back. The first arrival of cotton wool in Liverpool from the United States appears to have taken place in 1770, and to have consisted of only 2,000 lbs. In the ensuing six years the entire import of American cotton wool into Liverpool little exceeded that of 1770; and the supply was not only small but irregular. It subsequently began to increase; but so little was the trade regarded even in America, that Jefferson, the negotiator of the commercial treaty with Great Britain in 1794, did not, it is said, know that any cotton was exported from his country; and when, shortly afterwards, under that treaty which gave to the people of the United States the right to carry their own produce in their own ships to British ports, a shipment of cotton took place to England, the British custom-house authorities refused it the privileges of the treaty, on the ground that no cotton was produced in the United States,—so little importance was attached to the production, and so little was known of it.

Whether or not any species of the cotton plant be indigenous in the United States is a question open to discussion; but it is beyond doubt that the most valued descriptions were introduced at no distant period from the West Indies and South America. There is evidence to prove that the introduction of the long-stapled cotton into Georgia did not take place earlier than 1787; thence, according to Dr. Royle, the culture extended into the States abutting on the Gulf of Mexico. The keen perception of our transatlantic brethren, in regard to all matters affecting their pecuniary interest, and their “go-ahead” enterprise in the pursuit of wealth, pushed the culture of the stranger plant till it extended to nearly every spot suitable to its growth; and from very small beginnings it thus attained its present marvellous extent.

What has been done in America may be done in India.

By the cultivation of novel kinds of an article which certainly is indigenous there, India may create a fund of wealth for itself and provide an inexhaustible supply for the ever-craving demands of Great Britain for cotton. Happily the work has not now to be commenced. Experiments for some years have been in progress, and though at present they appear to have attained only partial success, the results are sufficient to warrant the most sanguine hopes for the future; the fulfilment of those hopes must, however, depend upon the measure of energy and judgment which may be brought to aid in their realization.

From the time that the cotton manufacture began to develop itself and to afford indications of its future extension, the Indian authorities appear to have been anxious that the country which they governed should participate in the custom of the British millowner. The efforts made were not for the most part upon a very large scale, but they were almost unceasing, as may be seen from various publications on the subject. The East-India Company, for a considerable period after the rise of the manufacturing system, enjoyed a monopoly of the trade with India, and they would naturally be desirous that its cotton should occupy a prominent place in the market, not only on account of the advantage to the people, but with a view to the profits of their exclusive commerce. Little, however, appears to have been effected until many years after the trading monopoly had ceased; when some persons conversant with the culture of cotton, as practised in the United States, were engaged to proceed to India, with a view to the application of their knowledge to the extension and improvement of production there.

Speaking generally, it may perhaps be affirmed that the result of the American experiments was to show that, as to mere culture, the people of India had not much to learn. Those accustomed to agricultural pursuits upon a larger scale and under a more elaborate system, may smile at the simple processes of India; but for the most part they answer the purpose intended, and no great or sweeping changes are required in regard to mere cultivation. The article produced is, however, for the most part, not that which is the most saleable in the English market; and there are sad mistakes, neglects, and frauds in its preparation and transmission. There are other circumstances to be taken into account in estimating the discouragements of the Indian producer, but before adverting to them, it will be well to glance very cursorily at the result of the American experiments, so far as they related to the fitness of soil and climate in different parts of India for the production of such cotton as the manufacturers of Manchester and Glasgow desire to obtain; and on this part of the subject we shall take an early opportunity of entering.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

SIR,—In acknowledging the readiness with which you have inserted my letter on the affairs of the Bengal Military Fund, and the candour with which you state your objections to the allegations put forth generally by the petitioners for redress, I beg permission once more to trespass upon your indulgence, whilst I endeavour to reply to such of your remarks as appear to me not to be in accordance with the known facts of our case. The inspiration under which you are thought to write renders it incumbent upon me to correct assertions, which, if allowed to pass unnoticed, might be taken in the light of admissions on our part. I shall, therefore, in the spirit of that full and impartial investigation which it is our earnest desire to obtain, do my best to point out such errors, as to fact or inference, as I consider you to have fallen into. You believe the engagement of the Company to have been “to make the advances for the purposes of the Fund in England at 2s. 4d. the sicca rupee." So far you are correct; but, in their letter originating the institution, there is not a word about those advances "being repayable with five per cent. interest." Six years afterwards, however—that is, in 1832—the Court wrote, "We cannot engage to continue to an indefinite extent, either as to time, or amount, a mode of assistance, which has so far exceeded what was contemplated when it was first granted." Now, even this intimation was unwarrantable—if not, under the circumstances, illegal—inasmuch as it struck directly at the very foundation upon which the institution, with all its calculations—past, present, and future—had been so systematically erected. After all the pledges given and liabilities incurred—after engagements extending far and wide had been deliberately entered into—the compact between the Hon. Court and the subscribers was, it seems, to be considered merely as an occasional or temporary "assistance," to be rescinded, or otherwise, as the Court thought expedient; as if one of the contracting parties were at liberty to annul the conditions of its agreement, whilst the other was compulsorily held bound to adhere to them. The alarm evinced by the Court was looked upon as a mere bugbear by all who understood the real nature of annuity transactions; but even granting there was a reasonable cause for it, surely it was the duty of the authorities to place matters upon a better, a sound footing at once, instead of allowing a scheme involving such weighty interests to continue in operation until half a million of money had been frittered away. In every point of view, such conduct is greatly to be regretted. Something they ought to have done, or endeavoured to do, but under no sense was their strength to sit still. To sit still, however, was all they could bring themselves to decide upon doing; and the despatch in question, erroneous as it was in principle, was intended to be rendered harmless, by an express declaration that "for the present" the stipulated rate of exchange should be continued, and that no "reduction of pensions," or "charge" in effecting remittances, should be adopted. Yet, as Colonel Henderson has shown in his able statement, the immediate result of the arrangement adverted to was, that whereas the institution had, up to that period, received 2s. 4d. per sicca rupee, deducting five per cent. interest from the date of advance to the day of payment [vide sub-committee's report]; it now, although ostensibly allowed the same terms, was charged an additional five per cent. interest "for the twelve months' usance," so that by an operation which was to have occasioned no present change, the institution lost five farthings upon each rupee; and, according to the report of our actuary, Mr. Neison, endorsed by Messrs. Finlayson and Lewis, incurred the principal part of the deficit under which it now labours. When, therefore, you inquire "What, then, has been the main causes of the Fund's unfortunate position?" I refer you at once to the above "statement," and to the reports of the eminent men whom I have named. But as you intimate that "errors of mismanagement, and the heavy loss which the Fund sustained by speculations on the part of persons employed by the managers," have contributed to the result, I beg to remark that you have inadvertently confounded two things that are totally distinct—the deficit arising from the waste of money actually paid into the treasury, and the loss of sums which never got there. And this leads me, in reply to your question—"Is it not possible that the subscriptions and donations of the higher ranks were fixed at too low a rate?"—to remind you that Mr. Neison has expressly reported those rates to be quite sufficient in the three junior grades, and from seven to twenty-nine per cent. too high in the three senior. It was the surplus which this excess was calculated to realise which supplied the speculations alluded to, as I think I explained in my last letter. Another error into which you have fallen is in confounding the question of the Honourable Court's exchange operations with that of our payment to the annuitants of the full amount for which their husbands had subscribed. When we consented to adopt the Court's recommendation to fix the life annuity of a widow at three-fourths of the British pay of her deceased husband, we considered ourselves bound in honour and good faith to pay that amount in full, notwithstanding the Court's declining to give our unfortunate incumbents the same exchange as that by which the pay of the service was remitted. The original agreement was for a certain specified sum of money, and if the Court were not liberal enough to allow us 2s. 6d. the sicca rupee, all we had to do was to raise our rates of contribution accordingly; and thus it was that the whole of the surplus above alluded to eventually disappeared. You say, "It is an easy course to throw blame on the East-India Company." We do not desire to do so; on the contrary, when we point out the despatch of 4th July, 1832, as the original cause of our embarrassment, and suggest that the Court's alarm at the amount of liabilities they had incurred was no more than the natural result of the want of knowledge then prevailing on the subject of vital statistics, and of life-annuity transactions in general, we are careful to note that "the authorities" of that day abstained from adopting any measure which would have the effect of impairing the integrity of the "benevolent institution" which they had in a manner compelled us to support, and of which they were the patrons and founders. All we desire to obtain, and that on the Court's behalf as well as on our own, is an impartial investigation into the origin and effect of the marginal note which was appended to that document, and which has so often been referred to in the course of this discussion as having occasioned a direct and ruinous counteraction of the Court's just and upright intentions. Before I conclude, however, allow me to bring to your notice the opinion expressed by Mr. Farr, of the Register-General's Office, after perusing the report of our actuary, submitted to him in March, 1844. "The fund was formed under the highest official sanction; unless they [the Directors of the Hon. E.I.C.] relieve it from its debt, the Supreme Government will have to continue to compel all the officers who enter the service to become members of an insolvent society; for it is certain that if the compulsion were withdrawn, new members would not voluntarily enter, and the downward course would be rapid." And, again, when Messrs. Finlayson and Lewis, actuaries of eminence, were asked: whether the view taken by Mr. Neison, and the directors of the fund, and others, that its losses are mainly to be attributed to the mode in which the exchange operations of the fund have for years been adjusted in the accounts, are substantially correct and well founded? and: whether the present balance of assets, or capital of the fund, has suffered materially or otherwise by the said losses on exchange? they state, "We have not much hesitation in replying in the affirmative. What loss there may have been—and it is plain that very serious damage has been sustained by the Fund—it is chiefly to be placed to the mode of adjustment made use of in respect of the transactions of exchange." Now, with these opinions of professional men before them, if hon. gentlemen were asked: when, in compliance with the 98th paragraph of the military letter to Bengal, dated 30th August, 1826, you have been requiring all chaplains, cadets, and assistant-surgeons, entering the service, to contribute to the Bengal Military Fund, were you aware that the Fund was insolvent? How could they extricate themselves from the dilemma, but by either conceding the investigation so earnestly prayed for, or by at once rendering the institution solvent in the manner recommended by the several actuaries above named, or by assimilating our scheme to that of the system of life annuities established by the Act 10 Geo. IV., cap. 24, upon the basis of the rate of interest allowed by the Company? as I have already had the honour to suggest.—I am, &c.,

G. SWINEY.

Cheltenham, April 8th, 1857.

EAST-INDIAN RAILWAY.

A report of the directors of this company, about to be laid before the shareholders, contains an interesting account of the progress made in the construction of the extensions of the railway.

Mr. Evans, acting chief engineer in the upper provinces, having recently inspected the works on the line from the River Kurumnassa to Delhi, furnishes the Board with particulars of the progress made to the 13th of February, of which the following is an abstract:—

Calcutta to Ranegunge, 121½ miles.—Opened for traffic on the 3rd of February, 1855.

South Beerbhoom District from the Junction near Burdwan to the north side of the River More, about 45 miles.—It is proposed to open the line up to the River Hadjai, a length of 21 miles, in December next.

From the River More to Colgong, with a branch to Rajmahal, about 134 miles, Nelson and Co., contractors.—67 miles are being constructed by the Company's officers, 33½ by Mr. Nelson, and 33½ by Messrs. Smith and Atkinson.

Colgong to Luckersera, about 80 miles, Mackintosh and Co., contractors.—In progress.

Luckersera to Phoolwarree, about 85 miles, Ward and Co., contractors.—In progress.

Phoolwarree to the River Kurumnassa, about 80 miles, Burn and Co., contractors.—There is every probability that the works will be completed simultaneously with those of the other contracts westward.

River Kurumnassa to Mogulserai, near Benares, about 50 miles, Burn and Co.—In progress.

Benares to Allahabad, about 95 miles, Hunt and Co.—In progress.

Allahabad to Cawnpore, about 126 miles, Norris and Co., contractors.—The works generally are progressing satisfactorily. The rails are laid for a distance of twenty-eight miles out of the Allahabad station.

Cawnpore District, 26 miles.—In progress.

Etawah District, 98 miles.—The earthwork, brickwork, and ballasting, are progressing fast towards completion.

Agra District, 66 miles.—The works on this district have just been commenced by the Company's engineers. For the first twenty-eight miles the earthwork is progressing rapidly, as well as the brickmaking and the collection of Kunker ballast.

From the twenty-eighth to the thirtieth mile the works are of a heavy character, and are being put in hand as fast as men can be engaged. At the thirty-sixth mile the line crosses the Jumna at Agra.

Delhi District, 91½ miles.—The works on this district have also been commenced.

With reference to the nature of the works on the line from Allahabad to Delhi, and their present state, there seems to be no reason why, if it be found practicable to get the permanent way materials up, the whole distance should not be opened by the end of 1858.

The steadily increasing traffic on the line from Calcutta to Ranegunge, is exhibited by the following facts:—The number of passengers carried between the 1st July and 31st December, 1856, was 465,121. A table of the numbers of first, second, and third class passengers for the months of July, August, September, October, November, and December, is given, showing an increase in this branch of the traffic, over the half-year ending June, 1856, of 32,800 passengers, or as compared with the corresponding half-year in 1855, of 107,486 passengers.

The tonnage in goods and minerals, exclusive of parcels, carriages, and live stock, from 1st July, 1856, to 31st December, 1856, was 44,695 tons, giving an increase of 11,685 tons over the half-year ending 30th June, 1856, or 24,675 tons over the corresponding half-year of 1855.

The traffic receipts for the year ending 31st December, 1856, amounted to 95,188*l.* 16*s.* 4*d.*, against 58,587*l.* 16*s.* 10*d.* for the year ending December, 1855; and in March last they had reached 3,500*l.* per week.

The payments made to the East-India Company, being the balances of receipts over expenditure on account of revenue, and in diminution of their advances for interest, will further illustrate the satisfactory progress of the working of the opened line. They have been as follows:—

For the half-year ending 30th June, 1855	£10,631	1	7
"	31st Dec., "	20,621	11	2
"	30th June, 1856	27,791	3	3

The working expenses for the half-year ending 30th June, 1856, had been brought down to 40·56 per cent. of the receipts.

The Board have appointed Mr. Edward Palmer, late of the Great Western and Great Northern Railway Companies, the agent to succeed Sir R. M. Stephenson, at Calcutta. Mr. Palmer leaves this country for India by the mail of the 4th of May.

Since the Board last met the proprietors, they have had to deplore the loss of the respected consulting engineer of the Company, the late James Meadows Rendel. The Board have made an arrangement with his sons, Messrs. M. and G. Rendel, for their services in this department.

EUPHRATES VALLEY RAILWAY.

Sir John Macneill has furnished the directors of the Euphrates Valley Railway Company with a description of the line of railway he recommends as the best between the harbour of Seleucia Bay, in Syria, and the Euphrates.

As the result of his own personal inspection of the country, Sir John supplies the directors with information, which we proceed to notice by making extracts of the more interesting and succinct parts of the report. In introducing his plans, Sir J. Macneill observes:—

"The country through which the line will pass being very different in its physical character as regards facility of construction in different localities, I think it is desirable to divide the whole line into seven divisions, and to estimate the cost of each separately; by which means a more correct mileage average of the cost of construction will be obtained than would otherwise be possible.

"These divisions will comprehend—

1. From the harbour to Antioch, a distance of ..	20 miles.
2. Antioch to Sansarin, a distance of	30 "
3. Sansarin to Dana, a distance of	7 "
4. Dana to Terrib, a distance of	8 "
5. Terrib to Chan Taman	13 "
6. Chan Tuman to Aleppo	12 "
7. Aleppo to the Euphrates	60 "

In all 150 miles.

"The most expensive part of the line will be from the harbour to Antioch, a distance of twenty miles, and from Sansarin to Terrib, a distance of fifteen miles, making together thirty-five miles. The remaining portion of the line, through the plains of Antioch, Dana, Terrib, and the valley of the Chalcis, making in all a length of sixty-five miles, can be executed at a very moderate rate."

Allowing a moderate compensation—say 20,000*l.*—for the private property that may be injured by the work, Sir J. Macneill estimates the expense of the construction of the railway, exclusive of land now in possession of the Turkish Government, which is to be granted to the company free of charge, and not calculating on any outlay for the construction of the harbour, which will cost 250,000*l.*, as the Turkish Government have determined to construct it themselves, and with their own funds.

"Assuming that the line from Aleppo to the Euphrates can be constructed at an average cost of 6,000*l.* per mile—which, in the absence of a detailed survey, I believe will be found ample for the purpose—the cost of the division No. 7 will be 300,000*l.*; and, this added to the cost of the line from the harbour to Aleppo—viz. 797,750*l.*, the total amount will be 1,097,750*l.*; which will leave a balance of 302,250*l.* for the purchase of rolling stock, engines, interest to shareholders during the construction of the line, damage done to private property, and other incidental expenses. It is not certain what this latter item may be, but I do not think it can exceed from 20,000*l.* to 30,000*l.*; the large margin, however, of 302,250*l.* is more than ample for all the above purposes.

"The line from the harbour to Antioch, and from Sansarin to Terrib—comprehending the 1st, 3rd, and 4th divisions—will take the longest time to complete. I would, therefore, recommend that the works should be commenced between the harbour and Antioch; and as many of the native population as can be procured should be employed on the easiest description of the work, and removed by degrees to that which is more difficult, as they become accustomed to such labour. In a few months they will become expert and efficient workmen, and may then be transferred to the 3rd and 4th divisions, between Sansarin and Terrib.

"The works between the harbour and Antioch, and between Sansarin and Terrib, could easily be executed in two years in this country; and the fifty-five miles through the plains of Antioch, Dana, and Terrib, and the sixty miles to the Euphrates, could be executed in one year: but it will be safer to reckon upon four years as the period for completing the works to Aleppo—that is, double the time that similar works would take in England.

"The returns that may be expected from the traffic over the line, when it is completed, will be very considerable. Reckoning on the present existing traffic alone, exclusive of passengers, it will pay a dividend of eight per cent."

GREAT INDIAN PENINSULAR RAILWAY.

The directors have just issued their half-yearly report, in which they state that they continue to receive from Bombay gratifying information as to the progress of the affairs of the company. The reports received from the chief resident engineer, as to the proceedings of the contractors in the three sections of the line between Campoollee and Sholapoor, now under construction, are such as to confirm the expectations held out in the last half-yearly report, that they were making every possible effort to finish their several works in a creditable and satisfactory manner, and within the time fixed for their completion. While the average of miles open during the last half-year has only increased from sixty to eighty-eight, the receipts have increased from 16,572*l.* 9*s.* 10*d.* to 24,555*l.* 9*s.* 1*d.* At the same time the percentage of working expenses has been diminished from 46·8 per cent. to 39·3 per cent.; while the nett profits, during the same period, have been raised from 8,810*l.* 3*s.* 3*d.* to 14,918*l.* 12*s.*; subject, however, to some items of expenditure, which there was not time to adjust before closing the accounts in India.

Since the last meeting of the shareholders, a further amount of 2,000,000*l.* capital has been issued, guaranteed 5 per cent. interest. In consequence of the retirement of Mr. Nicholson from the office of superintending director, and the resignation of his seat as a director of the company, the Board have resolved to appoint Mr. Watt, hitherto secretary to the committee at Bombay, to be the secretary of the company in England.

DIRECT CADETS.—The following gentlemen passed their examination for appointments as direct Cadets in the Indian service on the 21st inst. —Messrs. A. Griffin, F. Kilgour, H. W. Marshall, A. H. Messiter, H. W. Pitcher, W. S. Daniell, C. J. Durand, N. Lewis, C. B. Neill, and E. G. Wace.

THE AMEER ALI MORAD.—Papers relating to the confiscation of the territories of the Ameer Ali Morad have been published on the motion of Mr. Isaac Butt, the member for Youghall in the last parliament. They include a mass of correspondence. It appears that the Ameer fraudulently altered the treaty of Nownahur, concluded between himself and Meer Rooston and Meer Nusseer Khan, so as to substitute among the possessions to him ceded, instead of the village of Mathelah, the pargannahs of Meerpoor, Mathele, and Mehurkee. This flagrant offence was held by a special commission appointed to investigate the matter to be fully proved.—Times.

THE CHINA MISSION.—The following is a list of the diplomatic staff appointed to accompany Lord Elgin in his commission to China:—Hon. F. Bruce, Secretary; Mr. D. Cameron, first attaché; Mr. Lawrence Oliphant, private secretary; Mr. Lock, Mr. Fitzroy, and Mr. Morison, attachés. Mr. Morison is the son of Dr. Morison, the author of the well known Chinese Dictionary.

ROADS IN THE EAST INDIES.—A bulky parliamentary paper has been published, containing minutes and correspondence in reference to the project of the Hindostan and Thibet road, with reports of Major Kennedy and Lieut. Briggs, relating thereto, and an account of the expenditure incurred in the construction of a new road between Kalka and Dugshai.

LING v. CROKER.—A rule has been granted by the Court of Common Pleas to set aside the verdict of £1,000 damages obtained in the action Ling v. Croker for crim. con. The application for a new trial was, however, refused by the Judges, the Chief Justice saying the Court would grant a rule, but the affidavits produced would not warrant the granting a new trial. The Court decided that there must be an affidavit of surprise at the plea of certain of the plaintiff's letters to his wife being forgeries, furnished. These letters showed the husband and wife to be in collusion, and that the adultery committed by Mrs. Ling with the defendant Major Croker was with the connivance of the husband.

COLONEL WAUGH.—An adjudication of bankruptcy was made on April 15, against Colonel W. P. Waugh, described as formerly a director in the London and Eastern Banking Corporation of Branksea Island, in the parish of Shedland, in the county of Dorset, and of Little Abington Street, in the county of Middlesex, and trading there under the style or description of the "Branksea Clay and Pottery Company," and lately residing at No. 10, Upper Grosvenor Street, in the county of Middlesex, brick and tile-maker, lime-burner, dealer and chapman. The petitioning creditor is Mr. Samuel Price Hughes, of the city of Worcester, a creditor for £500.

CRIM. CON.—BARING v. GORDON.—In the Sheriff's Court, on the 23rd inst. The damages against the defendant were assessed in an action brought in one of the Superior Courts, for having had criminal conversation with the plaintiff's wife. Judgement had been allowed to go by default, and the defendant did not appear. The plaintiff was a son of Mr. Henry Baring, brother of Lord Ashburton; and in November, 1845, he was married to the daughter of Sir Richard Jenkins. The defendant was Captain Gordon, of the Nottinghamshire militia, who, with Mrs. Gordon, his wife, became acquainted with Mr. and Mrs. Baring, in 1852, when the family went to reside at Eton Hall, near Retford, in Nottinghamshire. In March of the present year the plaintiff found that Captain Gordon, who had been so long on terms of intimacy and friendship with his family, had, whilst enjoying his hospitality, seduced his wife. This action was brought, and the damages laid at £3,000. The verdict of the jury was sought with a view to ulterior proceedings.—Verdict £3,000.

A Bonus of Twenty per cent. from realised profits has been declared for the present year to all policy-holders on the profit scale who have paid five years' premium.

The advantages of this Society are as follow:—

Low Rates of Premium, calculated on the best and most recent investigations of mortality in India.

Annual participation in the profits after payment of premium for five years, by parties assured on the profit scale.

Immediate reduction of premium to the English rates in the case of a party assured proceeding to Europe for a permanency, and reduction after one year in the case of the party visiting Europe for a short period.

The civil rate only charged on the lives of parties in the military service, holding civil offices, as long as they continue in such office.

The Society also grants Deferred Annuities and Endowments payable at any given period.

Tables and full information may be had at the Office in Chatham Place; or on application to the Secretaries at Calcutta, Messrs. GORDON, STUART, and Co.; or to the Agents of the Agra and United Service Bank, at the other Indian Presidencies.

The Corporation grant DRAFTS, and negotiate or collect BILLS payable at Bombay, Calcutta, Colombo, Hong-Kong, Madras, Mauritius, Melbourne, Singapore, and Sydney, on terms which may be ascertained at their Office. They also issue Circular Notes and Letters of Credit for the use of Travellers by the Overland Route. They undertake the Agency of parties connected with India, the purchase and sale of Indian Securities, the safe custody of Indian Government Paper, the receipt of Interest, Dividends, Pay, Pensions, &c., and the effecting of Remittances between the above-named dependencies. The rate of Interest at present allowed on Deposits, repayable at 10 days' notice, is 54 per cent.; and at six months' notice, 6 per cent.

Office hours from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m., and on Saturdays 10 to 2.

Threadneedle Street, London, January, 1857.

ESTABLISHED 1841.

MEDICAL, INVALID, and GENERAL LIFE OFFICE, 25, Pall Mall, London.

EMPOWERED BY SPECIAL ACT OF PARLIAMENT.

At the FIFTEENTH ANNUAL MEETING, held on 27th November, 1856, it was shown that on the 30th June last—

The number of Policies in force was 5,738

The Amount Insured was £2,752,197 7s. 2d.

The Annual Income was £118,557 16s. 2d.

Two Bonuses have been declared (in 1848 and 1853), adding nearly two per cent. per annum on the average to sums assured, and by which a Policy of £1,000 issued in 1842 on a healthy life, is now increased to £1,260.

Since the last division of Profits in 1853, the accumulated funds have increased by more than £105,000, offering considerable advantages to present assureds.

Profits divided every five years—next division in 1858.

The Society, since its establishment, has paid claims on 651 Policies, amounting to £254,008.

Assurances are effected at home or abroad on healthy lives at as moderate rates as the most recent data will allow.

Indian Assurances at very moderate rates, and great facilities given to assureds.

Invalid Lives assured on scientifically-constructed tables.

Policies issued free of stamp-duty, and every charge but the Premiums.

Agents wanted for vacant places.

Prospectuses, Forms of Proposals, and every other information, may be obtained of the Secretary, at the Chief Office, or on application to any of the Society's Agents in the country.

THE BEST AND CHEAPEST NEWSPAPER PUBLISHED IN LONDON FOR DESPATCH TO INDIA AND THE EAST.

Thirty-two pages folio, with Supplements when necessary,
PRICE SIXPENCE.

THACKER'S OVERLAND NEWS,
FOR INDIA AND THE COLONIES;

A fortnightly Summary of British and Foreign Intelligence, published on the 10th and 26th of each month, in time for despatch to India via Marseilles.

One uniform system is preserved throughout the Paper, and the information is so epitomized and arranged as to present a perfect and comprehensive view of the history of the fortnight, with special reference to those subjects most interesting to Anglo-Indians.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

THE CALCUTTA "ENGLISHMAN."

"Pains have been taken with the arrangement. It is evidently got up with a knowledge of what information Indian readers require, and will therefore, we expect, soon attain a considerable circulation."

THE CALCUTTA "DAILY NEWS."

"Fully bears out the assurance given in the prospectus that it should 'be all that the Overland Papers are, and something more.' We do not think that a single item of news or fact of interest which had transpired during the fortnight can possibly have been omitted, and the power of condensation displayed in this Paper is much beyond what we had expected."

"THE MOFUSSILITE."

"It is well written, and carefully compiled. It is not so diffuse in its information as the 'Home News,' and does not reprint long articles from the London journals; but it will probably not be the less acceptable on this account to a large portion of the public."

"BENGAL HURKARU."

"We gladly pronounce this first number an extremely good one, and we think the periodical is full of promise of something still better. The Editor has contrived to condense into a comparatively small space a vast quantity of miscellaneous information, of a character interesting to his readers here. This superior condensation of his materials is perhaps the leading character of the Newspaper,—and a very important one it is, especially for those Indian readers who may receive this one London Paper only."

Orders to be addressed to Messrs. W. THACKER and Co., 87, Newgate Street, London; Messrs. THACKER, SPINK, and Co., St. Andrew's Library, Calcutta; Messrs. THACKER and Co., St. Andrew's Library, Bombay; and Mr. JAMES HILL, Lucknow.

SHAKESPEAR'S HINDUSTANI WORKS.

Just published, in 1 vol. royal 8vo., price 12s., the Sixth Edition of

A GRAMMAR of the HINDUSTANI LANGUAGE;

TO WHICH IS ADDED,

A GRAMMAR of the DAKHNI.

BY JOHN SHAKESPEAR.

. The First Part of this Work has been the class-book at Addiscombe for more than forty years past; and the Second Part, which explains the principles of the most prevalent language of the South of India, being the only systematic Grammar now to be obtained on that extensive dialect, will prove of especial advantage to Gentlemen proceeding to the Madras or Bombay Presidency.

By the same Author,

SHAKESPEAR'S DICTIONARY, HINDUSTANI and ENGLISH, as well as ENGLISH and HINDUSTANI. Fourth Edition, 1 vol. 4 o., price £3. 5s.

. The First Part of this book comprises many thousand more words explained than does any other work of similar description.

SHAKESPEAR'S INTRODUCTION to the HINDUSTANI—designed especially for those who have no Instructor. 1 vol. royal 8vo., price £1. 10s.

. This single volume contains a HINDUSTANI GRAMMAR—a copious Vocabulary of the most useful Hindustani words—SHORT SENTENCES of common use—DIALOGUES—SHORT STORIES, in both Persian and Nagari characters, with Grammatical Analysis—HINDUSTANI COMPOSITION—FORMS of LETTERS and NOTES—GRAMMATICAL TERMS—MILITARY WORDS of COMMAND, English and Hindustani, in both Nagari and Roman characters.

SHAKESPEAR'S MUNTAKHABAT-I-HINDI; or, SELECTIONS in HINDUSTANI, with Verbal Translation and Grammatical Analysis, for the use of Students of that language. 2 vols. 4to., price £1. 10s.

. This work, which has passed through several large editions, has continued in constant use as the class-book at Addiscombe and elsewhere during the last forty years.

Allen's Maps of India & China.

MAP OF INDIA;

Showing the British Territories subdivided into Collectories, and the position and boundary of each Native State; chiefly compiled from Trigonometrical Surveys, executed by order of the Honourable Court of Directors of the East-India Company. On six sheets—Size, 5 ft. 6 in. high; 5 ft. 8 in. wide. £2; or on cloth, in a case, £2. 12s. 6d.; or with rollers, and varnished, £3. 3s.

The object kept in view in compiling this Map has been to render it available to the greatest possible extent for popular use. For this purpose the names of all stations, civil and military, are inserted, as well as those of all towns and places of note likely to be looked for. To make clear the subdivisions of the whole of the country, both British and native, the limits of the various districts and collectories, with their names, are distinctly indicated. The railways are laid down, and the trunk roads conspicuously coloured. The newly-acquired district in Burmah is included. To avoid, however, the confusion consequent upon over-crowding, and make the Map clear and easy for reference, the names of many small villages, and places of no present importance, have been omitted, and thus a very wide measure of comprehensiveness has been attained, while needless diffusiveness has been avoided.

A GENERAL MAP OF INDIA;

Compiled chiefly from Surveys executed by Order of the Honourable East-India Company. On six sheets—Size, 5 ft. 3 in. wide; 5 ft. 4 in. high. £2; or on cloth, in a case, £2. 12s. 6d.; or with rollers, and varnished, £3. 3s.

MAP OF INDIA:

From the most recent Authorities. On two sheets—Size, 2 ft. 10 in. wide 3 ft. 3 in. high. 10s.; or on cloth, in a case, £1. 1s.

MAP OF THE ROUTES IN INDIA;

With Tables of Distances between the principal Towns and Military Stations. On one sheet—Size, 2 ft. 3 in. wide; 2 ft. 9 in. high. 9s.; or on cloth, in a case, 12s.

In this Map are given the whole of the military and civil stations, together with the principal towns, the villages being omitted, so as to make the stations more prominent. The colouring defines the boundaries of the three Presidencies.

A MAP OF THE WESTERN PROVINCES OF HINDOOSTAN; THE PUNJAB, CABOOL, SINDE, BHAWULPORE, &c. INCLUDING ALL THE STATES BETWEEN CANDAHAR AND ALLAHABAD.

On four sheets—Size, 4 ft. 4 in. wide; 4 ft. 2 in. high. 30s.; or on cloth, in a case, £2; or on rollers, and varnished, £2. 10s.

MAP OF INDIA AND CHINA,

BURMAN, SIAM,

THE MALAY PENINSULA, AND THE EMPIRE OF ANAM.

On two sheets—Size, 4 ft. 3 in. wide; 3 ft. 4 in. high. 10s.; or on cloth, in a case, £1. 5s.

MAP OF THE STEAM COMMUNICATION AND OVERLAND ROUTES BETWEEN ENGLAND, INDIA, CHINA, AND AUSTRALIA.

In a case, 14s.; on rollers, and varnished, 18s.

MAP OF THE PUNJAB AND SIKH TERRITORY.

On one sheet, 5s.; or on cloth, in a case, 6s.

MAP OF AFFGHANISTAN, AND THE ADJACENT COUNTRIES.

On one sheet—Size, 2 ft. 3 in. wide; 2 ft. 9 in. high. 9s.; or on cloth, in a case, 12s.

MAP OF CHINA,

From the most Authentic Sources of Information. One large sheet—Size, 2 ft. 7 in. wide; 2 ft. 9 in. high. 8s.; or on cloth, in a case, 11s.

MAP OF THE BURMAN EMPIRE,

Showing the Annexed District of Pegu. One sheet, 3s. 6d.; or on cloth, in a case, 5s.

MAP OF ARABIA,

From all the most recent Authorities, by Order of the Court of Directors of the East-India Company. Size, 3 ft. 3 in. high; 4 ft. 3 in. wide. On cloth, in a case, £1. 4s.

"INDIAN BAEL," for Diarrhoea, Dysentery, whether acute or chronic.

J. G. GOULD begs to inform Invalids and others suffering from the above complaints, that he has just received a large importation of the above article. It is now being recommended by many of the first medical practitioners in town and country, and the benefit derived from it has been truly astonishing. Pamphlets descriptive of its use, post-free, on application to the Importer.—J. G. GOULD, 198, Oxford Street, corner of Orchard Street, Portman Square, London.

UNDER THE PATRONAGE OF ROYALTY AND THE ARISTOCRACY THROUGHOUT EUROPE.

ROWLAND'S KALYDOR, an Oriental botanical preparation, for improving and beautifying the Complexion. It eradicates all redness, tan, pimples, spots, freckles, discolourations, and other cutaneous visitations. The radiant bloom it imparts to the cheek, and the softness and delicacy which it induces of the hands and arms, render it indispensable to every toilet. During the heat and dust of summer, or frost and bleak winds of winter, and in cases of sunburn, stings of insects, chubblains, chapped skin, or incidental inflammation, its virtues have long and extensively been acknowledged.—Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle.

SOUND AND WHITE TEETH are not only indispensably requisite to a pleasing exterior in both sexes, but they are peculiarly appreciated through life as highly conducive to health and longevity by the proper mastication of food. ROWLAND'S ODONTO; or, Pearl Dentifrice, compounded of Oriental ingredients, imported by the Proprietors at a great expense. This Powder is of inestimable value in preserving and beautifying the teeth, imparting to them a pearl-like whiteness, strengthening the gums, and in rendering the breath sweet and pure.—Price 2s. 9d. per box.

CAUTION.—The words "ROWLAND'S ODONTO" are on the label, and "A. ROWLAND and SONS, 20, Hatton-garden," engraved on the Government stamp, affixed on each box. Sold by them, and by Chemists and Perfumers.

WATCH, CLOCK, AND CHRONOMETER MANUFACTORY, 33 AND 34, LUDGATE HILL, LONDON. ESTABLISHED 1749.

J. W. BENSON, MANUFACTURER of GOLD and SILVER WATCHES of every description, construction, and pattern, invites attention to his magnificent and unprecedented display of Watches, which is admitted to be the largest and best selected Stock in London. It consists of Chronometer, Duplex, Patent Detached Lever, Horizontal, and Vertical Movements, engine-turned and engraved Gold and Silver Cases. The designs engraved upon many of the cases are by eminent artists, and can only be obtained at this manufactory. If the important requisites, superiority of finish, combined with accuracy of performance, elegance, durability, and reasonableness of price, are wished for, the intending purchaser should visit this Manufactory, or send for the ILLUSTRATED PAMPHLET, published by J. W. BENSON (and sent post-free on application), which contains sketches, prices, and directions as to what Watch to buy, where to buy it, and how to use it. Several hundred letters have been received from persons who have bought Watches at this Manufactory, bearing testimony to the correct performance of the same. The following extracts from the opinions of the Press will, it is hoped, be a sufficient guarantee to the public that they may secure at this House a good Watch at a reasonable price:—

Ladies' Long Cloth Chemises, 1s. 6d., 2s., 2s. 6d.; Frilled Night Dresses, 2s. 6d., 3s., 3s. 6d.; Long Cloth Drawers, 1s. 6d., 1s. 9d., 2s.; Petticoats, 1s. 6d., 2s. 6d., 3s. 6d.; Dressing-gowns, 7s. 6d., 8s. 6d., 10s. each. A detailed Priced List of every article may be ordered by post. The Outfit Department is entirely superintended by young women of competent skill, aided by dressmakers of taste and experience.

All the Under-clothing is made up by selected classes of carefully-trained private hands, needlewomen, who receive constant employment throughout the year, at a liberal and fixed rate of wages. This system, ORIGINATED BY THIS THE OLDEST ESTABLISHMENT OF THE KIND IN LONDON, has effectually redeemed the character of Ready-made Linen for strength and neatness, while its admitted usefulness and economy for garments for family and general home use, have placed it among the successful manufactures of the day.

To the Merchant exporting to Australia and other settlements, these goods, from the high character they bear, are very attractive, and rank among the safest shipments to those parts.

Ready-made Linen Warehouses, 61, 62, 63, and 64, HOUNDSDITCH, London.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

OUR readers will have been gratified to learn that the treaty of peace between Persia and England, which was signed at Paris on the 4th March, had been ratified at Teheran on the 14th April. The restoration of amicable relations between the two countries was not, however, destined to take place until another opportunity had been afforded for the display of British valour in the Persian Gulf, by an attack upon the fortress of Mohammerah. This stronghold was captured on the 26th March, with trifling loss on the part of the victors. The force destined for the attack amounted to 4,896 men, under the personal command of Lieutenant-General Sir James Outram, and consisted of a detachment of H.M.'s 14th light dragoons and the Soinde horse, H.M.'s 64th and the 78th Highlanders, the 23rd and 26th Bombay Native infantry, the light battalion, parties of Bombay and Madras Sappers and Miners, 3rd troop Bombay horse-artillery, and No. 2 light field-battery. Sir James quitted Bushire on the 19th March on the steamer Feroze. On the 21st he arrived at the mouth of the Shatt-el-Arab, the appointed place of rendezvous, whither the troops had been previously despatched; and on the 24th the steamers, with the transports in tow, commenced an advance up the river. During the passage, the British troops were greeted with shouts of welcome from the Arabs, who flocked down to the Persian side of the river. No interruption was experienced from the enemy during the progress up the stream. A battery which the Persians were known to have constructed at Buerdeh, eight miles below Mohammerah, had, from some cause, been removed, and the fleet anchored without opposition before the Arab village of Hurteh, three miles below the southern battery of Mohammerah. The fort was found to be one of great strength, defended by a Persian force, ascertained from credible report to amount to 13,000 men, under the command of the Shahzada Prince Khania Mirza. Batteries had been erected of solid earth twenty feet in thickness, and eighteen feet in height, with casemated embrasures on the northern and southern points of the banks of the Karoon and Shatt-el-Arab, where the two rivers join. These with other earthworks, armed with heavy ordnance, commanded the entire passage of the latter river, and were so skilfully placed as to sweep the whole stream. At daybreak on the 26th, fire was opened against the fortress from a well-protected mortar-battery, supported upon a strong raft, which had been towed into the river on the previous night, and planted in position unobserved by the enemy. At 7 o'clock, the war steamers, taking the Clive and Falkland sloops of war in tow, moved up towards the fort, and as they came within range received a raking fire from the batteries. This was not returned until the vessels had taken up a commanding position, when a heavy and well-directed fire was opened upon the defences from the whole fleet. The resistance made by the enemy, though brave, was of but brief duration. In about two hours the fire from the batteries began to slacken, and upon this being observed, a signal was hoisted from the ship of Commodore Young for the advance of the troop-ships. These vessels having passed the forts, anchored close to the bank of the river, above the northern batteries, where the debarkation of the troops was effected without a single casualty. At half-past one, the British force having formed, advanced without delay upon the intrenched camp of the enemy. Standing camps full of public and private property were passed, but, strange to say, the foe was nowhere to be found. At length, a small detachment of Scinde horse, which had been sent to reconnoitre, returned with the intelligence that they had come up with the rear-guard of the Persians in rapid retreat, and that the ground was literally covered with castaway property of all kinds. There being no cavalry at hand to pursue the enemy, the British troops bivouacked for the night on the banks of the Karoon, and on the following day took possession of the enemy's deserted encampment. The loss of the Persians amounted to 200 killed and wounded. Among the former was Agha Jan Khan, a serteeep or brigadier, whose death seems to have caused a panic among the Persian soldiers. A large quantity of ammunition, stores, camp equipage, and seventeen pieces of artillery, fell into the hands of the captors. The total loss of the British in this splendid achievement was insignificant, amounting to five or six killed, and about twenty wounded. Among the latter is Lieutenant Harris, of the Semiramis. The intrenched camp of the enemy being secured, preparations were immediately set on foot for the despatch of an armed flotilla to track the enemy along the banks of the Karoon river. This expedition left Mohammerah on the 29th of March. It consisted of three small river steamers, viz. the Comet, Planet, and Assyria, and three gun-boats, under the command of Commodore Rennie, of the Indian navy, and 300 men from her Majesty's 64th and 78th, under the command of Captain Hunt, of the latter corps. On approaching Ahwaz, on the morning of the 1st of April, the enemy were discovered occupying a strong position on the right bank of the river. Here the gun-boats no sooner opened fire upon the enemy, than the large host, consisting of about 8,000 men, took to flight, and retreated hurriedly in the direction of Dizful, while hordes of Arabs were observed hanging on their rear ready for plunder. The expedition remained two days at Ahwaz, communicating with the Arab tribes, and securing or destroying large heaps of grain which had been stored there by the Persians. A number of mules and sheep were also captured and brought down by the steamers, and 150 new stands of muskets in cases. This done, the little band returned to Mohammerah, which they reached on the 4th ult. The British commander being shortly afterwards apprised that a treaty of peace had been concluded, ordered a suspension of hostilities.

The news of this brilliant success is chequered by the melancholy intelligence of the untimely end of two popular officers, holding high commands in the Persian expedition. Major-General F. Stalker, the second in command of the forces, and Capt. R. Ethersey, the commodore of the squadron, both committed suicide while suffering under mental derangement. General Stalker shot himself in camp at Bushire, on the 14th March; and on the 17th Commodore Ethersey terminated his existence by similar means. For the particulars of the catastrophe, we refer our readers to the inquest, which will be found elsewhere. The distressing event in each instance is attributed to excessive anxiety, arising from an exaggerated view of the onerous nature of the duties to be performed. Both officers, indeed, appear to have been overwhelmed by the weight, real or imaginary, of the responsibility attached to their respective commands. The verdict on General Stalker's body was, that he came by his death from a pistol-shot inflicted by his own hand in a fit of temporary insanity. The verdict on Commodore Ethersey was, that he destroyed himself with his own hand while suffering under mental aberration, brought about by long-continued anxiety connected with the duties of his command. "General Stalker," says the Bombay Times, "was universally esteemed: the soldiers loved him; and his many acts of kindness had endeared him to every officer of the army. His bravery was unquestionable, and had been proved on many fields. As a general and tactician, he had few equals on this side of India; and his loss, at a period like the present, will be severely felt by the army and the State. He was interred with all the honours of war; and the tears on many a bronzed cheek told how dearly he was loved. The circumstances attending the suicide of Commodore Ethersey are even of a more painful nature than those which we have just related. For months past it seems this unfortunate officer's nervous system had been daily becoming weaker and more depressed. From the report of the inquest, he appears to have had disputes both with Government and the naval authorities of Bombay. His fancied grievances preyed upon his mind, and continued irritability and sleepless nights at length reduced him to the verge of madness. General Stalker's death hurried on the climax; and on the 17th ultimo, he put a period to his existence in a similar manner. The untimely deaths of two such distinguished officers shed a gloom over the whole camp, and shaded the glory which attended the capture of Mahummeerah."

The 19th regiment Bengal Native infantry, which we noticed in our last had been ordered down from Berhampore to Barrackpore in consequence of the display of a mutinous feeling among the men, has been disbanded. A bad spirit, it is said, still prevails in a portion of the Bengal army, especially in the 34th Native infantry. A sepoy of that regiment attacked and wounded Lieutenant Baugh, the adjutant. The man was tried and condemned to death, and the sentence was carried out under the protection of shotted guns and two European regiments.

From China the advices are to the 30th March, but nothing of importance had transpired since the departure of the previous mail on the 15th. The Zenobia had arrived from Madras with eight officers and 415 rank-and-file of the 12th Native infantry, Brevet-Major Cooper commanding. Sir Michael Seymour was at Hongkong. A pirate fleet, consisting of seventeen armed junks, had been destroyed by a daring attack made upon them by the boats of her Majesty's ship Hornet, Captain Forsyth commander, while cruising off St. John's Island. The details will be found in another column, in a despatch from Captain Forsyth to Sir Michael Seymour.

EXTRACT FROM THE LOG OF THE "VICTORIA REGIA."

—The following is an extract from the log of the ship Victoria Regia, from Swansea to Calcutta:—

"Tuesday, December 16, 1856, A.M. Fresh breezes from N.E., with hazy weather; and at 10:30 A.M. observed an ice-island on the lee bow; bore away to view it, the weather clearing up at noon. It bore W. by S. $\frac{1}{2}$ mile, and appeared to be about 250 feet in height at the east end, and inclining away towards the west, and between two of the largest peaks was a large stream of water flowing down. The island appeared to be about three miles in circumference, and, from good observation, it was in latitude $40^{\circ} 16' S.$; longitude, $61^{\circ} 1' E.$; barometer, 30.17 inches; thermometer, 64° ; water, 62° ; wind N.E. On passing it there appeared a line of detached pieces, extending about one mile to the eastward, with the water breaking over them."

BENGAL. THE MUTINIES.

The temper of the native army is becoming the question of the day. Three mutinies in as many weeks might try the nerve even of a Government which, unlike ours, could rely on the national spirit of its soldiery. The last affair, at Vizianagram, appears to us even more important than the similar occurrences in Bengal. The Bengal sepoy is a high-caste man. His caste is his point of honour. The blunder about the pig's-fat affected him as an order introducing the lash would affect an army of Frenchmen. It was easy therefore to believe that discontent arose from temporary and exceptional causes, that the storm once faced would speedily pass away. The mutiny at Vizianagram will give a shock to many of these pleasant theories. The Madrassepes have no caste. They have apparently no dread of being turned into Christians, no under-current of religious fanaticism to impel them. Yet the conduct of the 1st M.N.I. was at least as much opposed to the first principles of military discipline as that of the 19th. The 1st M.N.I. were ordered to relieve another regiment at Kurnool. Sufficient carriage for their wives and families was not forthcoming, and it was proposed to leave them behind. The men distinctly refused to march without their families. The colonel's harangue was met with shouts of derision, and a sepoy placed under arrest was released to avoid a rescue. The brigadier immediately proceeded to the parade, and the men with much difficulty were persuaded to march for a mile beyond the station. There they wait till carriage can be obtained.

In other words, the men of the 1st Regiment M.N.I. have succeeded in dictating at what hour, and in what manner, and with what amount of impediments they shall march on service. A more distinct and overt act of mutiny was never committed. The Madras Athenæum, admitting the magnitude of the offence, still attempts to extenuate it by saying the sepoys would have marched cheerfully against a foe. They knew the order was not emergent. We refuse absolutely to recognize a distinction which would turn every regiment in the army into a debating club. Every order is an order on service, whether the command be to charge an enemy or to pipeclay trousers, and the one is as little open to remonstrance as the other. "To compel them to march without their baggage and families was an arbitrary stretch of power, as oppressive as uncalled for." That statement deserves only a flat denial. The women and children were not left unguarded. They were not left to starve, like the wives of our own countrymen at Hyderabad. They were not even left for any length of time. The hardship was no greater than that to which every European officer submits over and over again without a murmur. Even if it had been, it is not necessary to remonstrate, even in civil life, with "shouts of derision." The act was one of simple mutiny, and should have been punished as such on the spot. The Athenæum says that there were only six officers present, and no force at hand sufficient to compel obedience. There is force in the Presidency, we presume, and the clear duty of the officers was to apply for that force, desist from their orders without withdrawing them, and on the arrival of assistance employ it unrelentingly. We do not blame them individually. We have pointed out below a cause for their hesitation other than ignorance of their duty, but we do blame those who, even in philanthropy, attempt to spread false ideas of their responsibility among our officers. Immediate obedience or instant death is the only rule by which armies of aliens are or can be held together.

The Athenæum says, "It will now be pretty well known in the native ranks, that they have only to refuse en masse, to go where or when they are ordered, to insure their wishes being complied with." Not so, if one trace of the nerve which built the empire remains in its Government. The time for concession to soldiers is nearly passed away, and regiments in mutiny en masse must find, instead of "compliance," cannon. We are no advocates for a brutal violence which is more frequently produced by panic than by that calm severity by which alone armies can be ruled. We have approved the delay which has occurred in terminating the Berhampore affair. But none the less do we recognize the fact that the implicit obedience of sepoys is our necessity, that it must be secured even though we are compelled to resort to a more than Roman discipline. We do not believe our present Government, cautious and even slow as it has been, will shrink from that sad necessity, or that it will permit disobedience to assume the character of an epidemic. There is no measure, however terrible, in which they will not now be supported by the opinion of the public.

We alluded last week to the effect of our system of staff employ so strongly manifested in these émutes. The disturbance at Vizianagram furnishes another illustration. The complement of officers, nominally twenty-two, was in reality only six. Of these only four were in the ranks, and of them one was a lad who had not passed his drill. The regiment was in fact a regiment of irregulars with these important differences:—The commandant was not a young man. He possessed no power in the regiment. He was not supported by his native officers. And this, too, in a presidency where the discipline of a native corps approaches in strictness to that of a European regiment.

The occurrence, like that at Berhampore, has brought out one more fact, which ought to be recognized and removed at once. Our officers do not know how far their responsibility extends. They cannot be certain whether in insuring obedience by force they will receive an earnest support. They are afraid of responsibility, of stepping even for an instant over the routine. They know perfectly well that discipline is to be maintained.

Col. Mitchell knew it when he ordered out the artillery at Berhampore. They shrink from no personal danger, but they dread the civil risk, the disfavour of Government, the possible loss of promotion or command. This doubt ought at once to be removed by a formal order to the troops. Such an order, announcing distinctly the duty as well as the right of every officer to compel obedience, would not be without its effect on the sepoys. They have no especial grievances. There is no trace in all these movements of a leader, or a cause, or a combined plan. They are simply obeying one of those capricious impulses which spring up among idle men, conscious that the control over them has relaxed, and craving for excitement of any kind. It is only weakness which can make that impulse dangerous, and an order such as we have suggested would be accepted as evidence of strength. No measure of this kind, we are well aware, will remove the true source of the difficulty. But it will at least enable us to make full use of the strength we have, and relieve our officers of an indecision which is almost as injurious as actual weakness. For the rest, if we would retain our army as a body of men competent for other than police duties, the staff system must be reformed.

A correspondent last week objected to the assertion that the best officers are selected for staff employ. He says they are selected from interest—one because he lived next door to a governor-general's aunt, another because he killed quail by the dozen for a commander-in-chief's third course. Very good. Let us allow in the teeth of facts that the best men are all left. That merely shows that the best men in the army are the most discontented. Our correspondent will not venture to deny that every officer hungry for staff employ, thinks he ought to obtain it, regards his residence with his regiment as a grievance rather than a privilege. That is the effect of which we complain, not an imaginary paucity of intellect in the ranks. While the highest object of a soldier's ambition is to cease to be a soldier, there can be no true soldiery.—Friend of India.

The 19th N.I. have been disbanded. With a cold confidence which of itself indicated strength, the Government of India had resolved that the sentence should be inflicted in the presence of the very men suspected of disaffection. The regiment was accordingly ordered to Barrackpore, where it arrived on the 31st March. Meanwhile every precaution that prudence could suggest to strengthen the hands of the general in command had been adopted. H.M.'s 84th had been brought up from Burmah. A wing of H.M.'s 53rd had been marched up from Calcutta. A troop of Madras Artillery on its way to its own Presidency was detained at the station. A second troop had been ordered from Dum-Dum. The body guard was also on the spot, and in fact every soldier in the Presidency, who could be spared from actual duty, was present on the parade. The Europeans and native artillery were drawn up on one side, the four native regiments opposite, and the 19th marched into the centre. Then, amidst a general silence of expectation, General Hearsey read aloud the following order:—

"The 19th regiment N.I. has been brought to the head-quarters of the Presidency Division, to receive, in the presence of the troops there assembled, the decision of the Governor-General in Council upon the offence of which it has been guilty.

"On the 26th of February, the 19th regiment N.I. was ordered to parade on the following morning for exercise, with fifteen rounds of blank ammunition for each man.

"The only blank ammunition in store was some which had been made up by the 7th N.I., the regiment preceding the 19th regiment at Berhampore, and which had been left at that station on the departure of the 7th regiment. This ammunition had been used by the recruits of the 19th regiment up to the date above mentioned.

"When the quantity of ammunition required for the following morning was taken to the lines, it appears that the men objected to the paper of which the cartridges were made, as being of two colours; and when the Pay Havildars assembled the men to issue the percussion caps, they refused to receive them, saying that they had doubts about the cartridges.

"The men have since stated, in a petition addressed to the major-general commanding the presidency division, that, for more than two months, they had heard rumours of new cartridges having been made at Calcutta, on the paper of which the fat of bullocks and pigs had been spread, and of its being the intention of the Government to coerce the men to bite these cartridges; and that therefore they were afraid for their religion. They admit that assurance given to them by the colonel of their regiment satisfied them that this would not be the case; adding, nevertheless, that when on the 26th of February, they perceived the cartridges to be of two kinds, they were convinced that one kind was greased, and therefore refused them.

"The commanding officer, on hearing of the refusal, went to the lines, assembled the native commissioned and non-commissioned officers, and explained that the cartridges were unobjectionable, and had been left at Berhampore by the 7th regiment. He instructed them to inform their men, that the cartridges would be served out in the morning by the officers commanding companies, and that any man who refused to take them would be tried by a court martial and punished.

"This occurred at 8 o'clock in the evening.

"Between 10 and 11 o'clock a rush was made by the sepoys to the bells of arms; the doors were forced open; the men took possession of their arms and accoutrements, and carried them to their lines.

"On learning what had occurred, Lieut.-Colonel Mitchell ordered out the 11th regiment of irregular cavalry, and the post guns.

"When the cavalry reached the parade, the men of the 19th regiment rushed out of their lines with their arms, shouting, and assembled near to the bells of arms, where many loaded their muskets.

"Upon Lieut.-Colonel Mitchell and the European officers approaching the men, they were warned not to go on, or the men would fire.

"The native officers were assembled, and Lieut.-Colonel Mitchell, after addressing the men, directed the officers to separate the companies, and to require them to give up their arms.

"The men hesitated at first, but eventually gave up their arms and retired to their lines.

"These are the principal features of the outbreak at Berhampore on the 26th of February.

"The men of the 19th regiment have refused obedience to their European officers. They have seized arms with violence; they have assembled in a body to resist the authority of their commander.

"The regiment has been guilty of open and defiant mutiny.

"It is no excuse for this offence to say, as has been said in the before-mentioned petition of the native officers and men of the regiment, that they were afraid for their religion, and that they apprehended violence to themselves.

"It is no atonement of it to declare, as they have therein declared, that they are ready to fight for their Government in the field, when they have disobeyed and insulted that Government in the persons of its officers, and have expressed no contrition for their heavy offences.

"Neither the 19th regiment, nor any regiment in the service of the Government of India, nor any Sepoy, Hindoo, or Mussulman, has reason to pretend that the Government has shown, directly or indirectly, a desire to interfere with the religion of its troops.

"It has been the unvarying rule of the Government of India to treat the religious feelings of all its servants, of every creed, with careful respect; and to representations or complaints put forward in a dutiful and becoming spirit, whether upon this or upon any other subject, it has never turned a deaf ear.

"But the Government of India expects to receive, in return for this treatment, the confidence of those who serve it.

"From its soldiers, of every rank and race, it will, at all times and in all circumstances, enforce unhesitating obedience. They have sworn to give it, and the Governor-General in Council will never cease to exact it. To no men who prefer complaints with arms in their hands will he ever listen.

"Had the sepoys of the 19th regiment confided in their Government, and believed their commanding officer, instead of crediting the idle stories with which false and evil-minded men have deceived them; their religious scruples would still have remained inviolate, and themselves would still be, as they have hitherto been, faithful soldiers, trusted by the state, and laying up for future years all the rewards of a long and honourable service.

"But the Governor-General in Council can no longer have any confidence in this regiment, which has disgraced its name, and has lost all claim to consideration and indulgence.

"It is therefore the order of the Governor-General in Council, that the 19th Regiment N.I. be now disbanded; that the native commissioned and non-commissioned officers and privates be discharged from the army of Bengal; that this be done at the headquarters of the presidency division in the presence of every available corps within two days' march of the station; that the regiment be paraded for the purpose; and that each man, after being deprived of his arms, shall receive his arrears of pay, and be required to withdraw from the cantonment.

"The European officers of the regiment will remain at Barrackpore until orders for their disposal shall be received from his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief.

"This order is to be read at the head of every regiment, troop, and company in the service."

The arms were piled, and the colours were deposited with them, but the uniforms were not stripped off. Government while punishing mutiny with sternness refrained even from the appearance of vindictive feeling. Their pay was then delivered, while the major-general addressed the men of the brigade. The 19th were then enveloped by cavalry and marched to Chinsurah, where they will remain until the arrival of their wives and families. The regiment was most submissive, and the lesson is believed to have been severely felt by the remainder of the troops.

We cannot believe that the warning so public and so impressive will be disregarded by the Native Army. Throughout, the policy of Government has been clear, temperate, and decided. There has been no panic, no haste to punish, no descent from severity to bloodthirstiness. The men were fairly heard, fairly tried, fairly condemned. They were marched at once into the only station where they could hope for active sympathy, and there subjected to the highest secondary punishment known to our military law. Those who talk lightly of disbandment forget what it implies to native soldiers. To the native officers and the older sepoys it means immediate and total ruin. The labours of a life are thrown away. From a position which gives them among their own countrymen sufficient wealth and high social status, they sink into tillers of the soil. The younger sepoys may possibly re-enlist, but even they have lost years of service, all the position they had previously earned. Even they must cross India without means, enter an army in which caste is lightly regarded, and in which men achieve commissions not by seniority, but success. It is however the manner rather than the extent of the sentence which lends it its peculiar force. The men were punished in the centre of their comrades. The Government, with wise forbearance, spared their lives. But every sepoy there knew that a movement, a shout, any one overt sign of sympathy, would call down a terrible retribution, that General Hearsey had his orders in his pocket, and that General Hearsey is accustomed to carry out his instructions. They were taught that the Government which passed over their offences could crush as well as spare, that even in physical force, the last resort of mutineers, they were outmatched by the defenders of the law. The order read at the head of every regiment will convince the sepoys, that if "their obedience is our necessity" it is also theirs.

To the officers of the Indian Armies it may read a somewhat different lesson. The whole action of Government the trial at Berhampore, the three weeks' delay, the calm preparation, the abstinence from blood, indicate their determined policy. It is not one of mere violence. Their officers are openly and decisively supported. Every colonel is enabled to secure from his soldiers that obedience which is his due, and which they have sworn to afford. No mercy, for instance, will be shown to those who on Sunday last refused to assist their officers in the arrest of an assassin. But he is none the less forbidden to mistake hurry for vigour, to consider that bloodshed is the first corrective for discontent, to believe that physical force can compensate in the eyes of his superiors for the absence of force of character. He must secure obedience, but he is not to forget that to employ one arm against another, Europeans against natives, is a course only to be justified when the circumstances are extreme. There is perhaps at this moment in the army too great a tendency to distrust, to believe that there is a "bad spirit" in the men only to be exorcised with blood. That is not the belief or the policy of the Government of India. It may be that a severe example may yet be demanded, and the preparations at Barrackpore show that the Governor-General will shrink from no necessity however stern. But it must be proved to be a necessity. Commanding officers must remember that the tact which averts a mutiny is as commendable as the energy which crushes it, that their first duty is to enforce, not coerce obedience; that premature menaces may produce outbreaks which spring not of mutiny, but despair. In all cases, even the worst, a calm, well-weighed severity will be more efficacious, as it will be better received, than a hasty impulsive "vigour."

We hope that some extra precautions will be adopted to compel the disbanded to return northward. Once across the Kurumanas the population can defend itself. If left in Bengal, we shall probably have the average of dacoities doubled.—Friend of India.

Mr. TAYLOR proposes to establish an Industrial Institution in Behar, for which purpose he has already collected Rs. 1,50,000.

THE COMMISSARIAT DEPARTMENT.—The Englishman publishes an address to Lieut.-Col. James Ramsay, the Commissary-General, from the Commissariat Department. The burden of the address is, that whilst the Commissary-General has carried out radical reforms, he has not injured any subordinate. A snuff-box was presented at the close of the address. The Commissary-General in reply said that "if the department had laboured hard, yet their exertions had been crowned with success." Are such addresses consistent with the duties and nature of a Military Department?

THE RATE OF EXCHANGE in the Mofussil is 15 annas to the rupee. That is, every servant in the Mofussil who nominally received 5 rupees a month, in reality receives only Rs. 4-11. How long this state of affairs will last we cannot tell, but certainly a remedy must be applied shortly. The Calcutta mint is unable to meet the demand for copper coinage, and our financiers will not import pice from England.

CAPT. HOLLAND.—The Englishman states that Capt. Holland of the Nagpore Irregular Force has been seriously wounded by a tiger. His life was saved by the gallantry of an old native servant, who beat the tiger about the head with the butt end of his gun. The tiger after quitting his hold of Capt. Holland, pursued and killed a native who was working near. The man who rescued Capt. Holland, strangely enough, does not appear to have been hurt.

THE NEW FIVE PER CENT. LOAN.—The amount subscribed to the new five per cent. loan, which was opened some months ago on the failure of the attempt to raise money at 4½, has not yet, it is said reached £170,000, while two millions are required.

BANK OF BENGAL RATES are gradually falling, but discount still continues high, unexceptionable private paper being charged nine per cent., and Government acceptances over fifteen days, seven per cent.

RESPONSIBILITY.—The Delhi Gazette says that as a theory the principle of responsibility is perfect. Every public servant should be held responsible for all his deeds, and bound to make good any loss which the public may sustain at his hands. But in practice responsibility crushes men. It tends to paralyse all effort. A public man, knowing that the best scheme may fail, and that its failure will be visited on his own head, will do nothing. The answer to this is simple. The pusillanimous have no business to enter the public service, and will not when the principle of responsibility is recognized. Perhaps, after-mercantile fraud, the next evil of the age is the intrusion into place of men who are not fit for its duties. When we recognize the responsibilities of office, we shall not have Deputy Commissioners refusing to send in reports upon the new sale law.

PORT DUES OF CALCUTTA.—The Calcutta Gazette contains a bill revising the port dues of Calcutta. For all vessels above 20 tons, a duty of 4 annas a ton for every voyage must be paid. Dhonies will pay two annas per ton, not oftener than every sixty days; if they enter the port so often, a duty of 12 annas per ton per annum will be charged. Tug steamers and river steamers are to pay four annas per ton every half-year.

CHOLERA IS RAGING AT GYA; the daily deaths are about fifty. In many of the dispensaries there is a great discrepancy between the amount of relief afforded and the amount of money disbursed. The people from their fear of contagion will not supply the market at Gya, and provisions are becoming dear. The cholera is also raging at Indore, not a single family being free from it in its incipient stage. The Maharajah uses every means to avert the scourge.

SEPOYS OF THE LATE 19TH N.I.—The following interesting narrative is extracted from a letter which we received on Sunday from Chandernagore:—"Many of the disbanded sepoys of the late 19th N.I.—perhaps some hundreds—marched through this little station yesterday on their way, no doubt, to their respective homes. As they passed near my house, which opens on the Dak road, on being questioned by some of my servants as to whether they were the men whose names had been cut out (kāta gaya) from the military list at Barrackpore, they replied indignantly, 'No such thing; we are only absent on leave; and will return after a time.' This was one proof, at least, that they were ashamed of the circumstances that led to their dismissal! Others, on being asked where they were bound, said, 'We are going from Lyhar to Sarrat,' which signifies, as my servants explained to me, 'from the dwelling of our father and mother to that of strangers.' No doubt the remembrance of the kind treatment they had experienced from their officers induced them to use these expressions. Many others went on their way, ejaculating, in a most desponding tone, 'Khoda! Khoda! Khoda!' and wringing their hands, or clasping them together, with other gestures, indicative (as it seemed to me) of regret and remorse."—Hurkaru.

THE LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR has ordered all the holidays of the Civil Courts, including the Sudler, to be abolished. The twelve days of the Dourgah Poojah will alone still be retained. The Mohurram holidays are to be discontinued.

MORTALITY IN THE N.W. PROVINCES.—The Delhi Gazette publishes a statement of the mortality in the North-West Provinces during the last year. From cholera alone there died 32,139 persons, a clear third of whom perished in the district of Allyghur. The ravages of cholera have however been far outdone by fever and ague. In the same district, until within the last year, ague was unknown. Now, in one year we find no less than 31,857 death from remittent fevers and ague. In Kheyr one of the Tehseeldars of the same district, the per-centage of deaths to the population was 13. The heaviest mortality is ordinarily on the banks of the Kurwan. This fact appears decisive as to the effect of opening the Kurwan Nudd-e. The drainage at Chundous is exceedingly defective, and consequently ague abounds.

THE SARDINIAN FRIGATE Beraldo from Genoa has anchored in the Hooghly off the Esplanade. She has come for a cargo of saltpetre for the Sardinian navy. She is the first Sardinian man-of-war seen in the Indian seas.

THE LAUNCH OF A STEAM-TUG AT ROORKEE is announced. She is 73 feet long, and 8 feet broad. She has two engines of twelve horse power, which were constructed at the Roorkee factory. The steamer is to be employed as a tug on the Roorkee Canal.

THE DISAFFECTION OF THE NATIVE TROOPS.—The Hurkaru states that the disaffection of the native troops at Barrackpore has taken a serious form. Numerous meetings of the mutineers have been held in the barrack-yard to discuss how they are to oppose the European troops, and pickets have been posted to keep watch for their arrival. Several native officers who appear to have instigated the troops to mutiny, are now under arrest: the condign punishment which the sepoys will receive doubtless has its influence upon their movements.

LIEUTENANT RAVERTY.—The Lahore Chronicle states that Lieut. Raverty, the officer accused of corruption at Mooltan, has been suspended for seven months. No decision has been announced, and it may yet be postponed for an indefinite period. The delay is said to have occurred in Calcutta. The case appears to be a somewhat hard one.

CAPTAIN D. L. RICHARDSON has obtained leave of absence to visit Europe for one year on medical certificate.

THE CANTONMENT OF WUZERABAD is abolished.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS.—The Hurkaru understands that on the retirement of Lieutenant-Colonel Baker, it is arranged that Major Strachey shall officiate as secretary to the Government of India in the department of Public Works, until the return from England of Captain Yule, who, according to his authority, is to be the permanent incumbent of the office.

MURDEROUS ATTACK ON LIEUT. BAUGH.—The Hurkaru informs us that a sepoy of the 34th regiment, at Barrackpore, drugged himself, ran a muck, and shot at Lieutenant and Adjutant Baugh as he was riding near the guard-house. The shot struck the horse, which immediately fell, and before Lieutenant Baugh could disengage himself, the sepoy inflicted some severe wounds on him with his bayonet. A sergeant-major who happened to come up, defended Lieutenant Baugh with a stick, and was himself wounded severely. The native guard refused to arrest the offender. On the approach of a guard of the 43rd N.I. under Lieutenant Corbett, the sepoy shot himself through the head.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDER.

PRIVILEGE LEAVE.

Fort William, March 26; 1857.—Under the authority of the Hon. the Court of Directors, the Right Hon. the Governor-General in Council is pleased to extend to officers generally, at the three Presidencies, the privilege granted to officers at Mooltan and Peshawar, of being allowed, when the demands of the service will permit, temporary leave, without pecuniary loss or loss of service, for sixty days consecutively, in the course of each year, or of thirty days consecutively in each half-year, as may be preferred by them.

MADRAS.

The official account of the court-martial on Lieut. Borradaile, of the Madras army, has been published. He was found guilty of having been drunk on duty under arms. The Court sentenced him to be cashiered, but accompanied the sentence with a strong recommendation to mercy.

THE MADRAS MINT is now turning out two lakhs of coin a day. Three lakhs will shortly be turned out in the same time. Last year the average output was about a lakh of pieces a week.

DEATH OF CAPTAIN ROLSTON.—We regret to announce the death of Captain Rolston, of the 14th regiment N.I., from cholera, while travelling from Madras to Bangalore. He had recently come to the presidency to accompany his regiment to Singapore, but was directed to return to Cannanore and resume his appointment of deputy-assistant commissary-general, when he fell a victim to that terrible and mysterious scourge, which "like the pestilence that walketh in darkness, and the destruction that wasteth at noonday," has lately prevailed to such a fearful extent on the Bangalore road.—Spectator, April 3.

DEATH FROM CHOLERA.—We record with sentiments of no ordinary regret, the death from cholera, while travelling to Bangalore by transit, of a very excellent and amiable lady, the wife of Col. Stevenson, commanding the 1st fusiliers. Her loss will not only be deeply deplored by those whose privilege it was to have enjoyed her friendship, but by the whole regiment which her bereaved husband commands.—Spectator, April 2.

ORCHARD TAXATION.—Mr. Thomas, the collector of Coimbatore, has importuned the Madras Government for a remission of the double taxation upon orchard-land. Mr. Thomas states that orchards have not increased in his district, owing to the pressure of taxation. The Government in reply state that though orchard cultivation, inasmuch as it is not liable to destruction from drought, is more valuable than rice, yet they consider that each ryot should have his choice of crops entirely unfettered. But the ryots will commence the plantation of orchards on land where wells can be sunk. Sinking such wells of itself gives them the benefit of irrigation without payment of water. Therefore Government will not take off the tax.

BRIGADIER COLIN MACKENZIE has applied for blood-money for the wounds received in the affair at Bolarum. The Court of Directors, bearing in mind the comments of the Government of India on the affair, refused the request. For the future, therefore, an officer wounded in a mutiny will not be considered wounded on service.

The 1st Madras Fusiliers have embarked for the seat of war.

MADRAS SEPOYS.—The Madras Athenæum inserts a long letter from a correspondent addressed to the Commander-in-Chief. The writer states, that the Madras sepoys enter the army simply to support their families, that as soon as their interests and their duties clash, the latter will succumb to the former. The sepoy does not think it his first duty to obey, but to protect and advance his own interests. Possibly; but he is paid for obedience, and must accept the penalties of a breach of contract.

THE 40TH N.I., one thousand strong, is marching to Cuttack with one major commanding, one captain, one ensign, one adjutant, one quartermaster, and one assistant surgeon.

MELANCHOLY DEATHS.

COURT OF INQUEST ON THE BODY OF GENERAL STALKER.

The following are the proceedings placed by Government at the disposal of the press on Saturday afternoon, of a Court of Inquest assembled on the 14th March last, by order of Lieut.-Gen. Sir J. Outram, K.C.B., to investigate the cause of the sudden death of Maj.-Gen. F. Stalker, C.B., commanding the 1st div. Persian expeditionary force. The Court consisted of Brig. Honner, commanding 2nd inf. brig., 1st div., president; Maj. Baynes, commanding 20th N.I., and Asst. surg. J. Mills, staff surg., 1st div., members.

The Court having assembled, proceed to view the body in the late Maj.-Gen. Stalker's tent, and find it lying on a cot, as if he had sat down on the cot, and had then fallen back upon the pillow, rather on his left side,—his head resting on the end of the pillow against the musquito curtains and kanaut of the tent—his legs hanging down—a pistol apparently recently discharged, lying on his left side—he was quite dead; a large quantity of blood and brains stained the musquito curtains and rug with which the bed was covered. Under the foot of the mattress, the Court found a pistol capped and loaded (the fellow to the one found on the bed), in a flannel bag, and a second bag empty.

Comm. F. Jones, I.N., political resident at Bushire, stated:—I was requested this morning by a note from General Stalker to come to camp, and met him walking outside his tent with Colonel Lugard, at about 8 A.M. He shook hands with me, and appeared in his ordinary manner; asked me to remain to breakfast, and sent the necessary articles to the mess-tent. I then took leave for the time, he knowing what business I had come upon, and proceeded to Sir J. Outram's tent, where I remained until breakfast was announced. Sir James and myself walked over to the mess-tent together. Gen. Stalker preceded us, and our entering, offered me a seat between himself and Sir James. He did not speak much at breakfast, but behaved in his usual quiet manner. We all three left the mess-tent together after breakfast, and after taking leave of Sir James, I went to Gen. Stalker's tent. I asked him if he had got any of the late papers from Bombay, regarding the Borasjoon affair. He himself selected from among others on his table, two Bombay papers of March 3, and while doing so he said, "They won't give me the 3rd cavalry," alluding to the squadron recently arrived and then in the harbour. I said, "Indeed," and proceeded to read the papers. Nothing else passed between us, but I observed him immediately throw his legs upon the table and lean on one side, with his head against the tent-pole. His whole manner at this time appeared enervated, and it struck me that the relaxing effect of the southerly wind oppressed him. Soon after this, observing that he had no more to say to me, I left the tent, he rising at the time and shaking hands with me in his usual hearty manner, and raising the door-chick for me to pass out.

Questioned by the Court.—Have you had any intercourse lately, personally or by letter, with Gen. Stalker, from which you could judge of his state of mind?

Answer.—Often personally, and constantly by means of notes; at all times he expressed the greatest anxiety with reference to getting his men under cover before the hot weather set in. This formed the chief topic of all his notes, as he was impressed with the idea that should they not be sheltered in time, all the blame would attach personally to him. At breakfast this morning he alluded to the subject, inquiring if materials had arrived yesterday, as he had heard so. I replied, "Some have;" and he added, "We have done all we can in the affair, have we not?" to which I responded, "Yes—even to taking up special boats, in the absence of ships, and despatching them with letters to all quarters." This appeared to please him, and he seemed satisfied, that he had done all in his power. In his notes and conversation, he seemed to be impressed with the weight of general responsibility attaching to him in his separate command. He always spoke with satisfaction of being associated in the service with Sir James Outram, not only from his long-standing friendship for him, but because his arrival had relieved him from all political responsibility. On this subject we had several conversations, and all of the same tenour. He spoke at all times with great attachment towards Sir James Outram. Upon leaving the tent, I went immediately to Capt. Dunsterville's. I had been there between five and ten minutes, when I heard a rumour of Gen. Stalker's death. At this moment Capt. Hunter summoned me to Sir James Outram's tent.

Lieut.-Col. Younghusband, dep. adj. gen., deposed:—I was with the general at about a quarter to eight A.M. He was then in very good spirits. I did not see him again until breakfast-time, when leaving the mess-tent, he spoke a few words in his usual cheerful way, and these were the last I heard him utter. He had sent me a batch of newspapers within a few minutes of its being reported to me by his havildar orderly that a shot had been fired in his tent. I then went towards his tent, when I was told by Maj. Christie and most intimate communication, both officially and privately, with the late major-general, it seemed to me so impossible that it could have been otherwise than the result of accident, that I felt quite surprised, on being told a few minutes afterwards that he was sitting upon his bed; and knowing that Sir J. Outram and Col. Lugard were in the tent, I did not think that I should be warranted in intruding. Gen. Stalker has frequently expressed the greatest anxiety in regard to shelter for the European troops during the approaching hot weather. He felt most uncomfortable on this subject, and thought that he was the person who would be held accountable for it. The last conversation on the subject was, I think, three days ago; and while we were speaking, Dr. Stovell, the superintending surgeon 1st div., came in, and the major-general's anxiety was not at all lessened by what Dr. Stovell said on the same subject. With the exception of this, I know nothing else that preyed on the general's mind. This is all I have to state.

Col. Lugard, C.B., chief of the staff, stated as follows:—I was sitting with Sir J. Outram in his tent this morning, after breakfast. I heard the report of a pistol. I took no notice of it, as I thought it was some one cleansing his arms. A few moments after, a native called through the door of the tent—"The general has shot himself." I immediately rushed into Gen. Stalker's tent, followed by Sir J. Outram. He was lying on his bed, on his back, with his feet hanging down, the right hand grasping a pistol by his side. I immediately requested those at the door to run for a medical man. He appeared to be dying. There was blood on the mosquito curtain on the right side of his head, and on the kanaut on the opposite side of the tent. Sir J. Outram and myself searched the table for any document that might explain the catastrophe, but found none. When I entered the tent, Gen. Stalker was gasping, but appeared to be dying. Soon after the staff surgeon arrived, and I left the tent with Sir J. Outram.

Questioned by the Court.—Have you had any intercourse personally, or by letter, with the late Maj.-Gen. Stalker, from which you could judge of the state of his mind?

Answer.—I have been in constant, I might almost say hourly, intercourse with Gen. Stalker since my arrival here in January last. I held half an hour's conversation with him to-day, immediately before breakfast. He was then in good spirits, cheerful, and talked over with me his arrangements for the defence of his position, the town, &c. I did think that the dread of the responsibility of getting the European troops under cover weighed somewhat on his mind, but last evening Maj. Hill, the commanding engineer, addressed a strong letter to me, absolving Gen. Stalker and himself from all responsibility, explaining his reasons. I have since been made aware of Maj. Hill having shown this letter to Gen. Stalker, and I have read the general's reply. My full impression is, from all I know and all I have learned, that the act which has terminated Gen. Stalker's life was accidental. I am further strengthened in this opinion by the maj.-gen. having entered his name in the mess-book, noting that Maj. Taylor would be his guest at dinner this evening. He was on the most intimate and cordial terms with Sir J. Outram, and over and over again expressed the joy he felt at Sir James coming up here.

Capt. Hunter, A.D.C. to Gen. Stalker, deposed:—This morning, about half-past eight, while I was dressing, Gen. Stalker came into my tent and said, "Hunter, I wish you would load my pistols for me, as I can then carry them about in my belt." I said, "I will when I am dressed." On going out of my tent, I met Gen. Stalker walking up and down before it. I walked with him for some time, he then said, "Let us come into my tent;" and doing so, he called his dressing-boy to get the pistols. Having on a former occasion, when going to Borasjoon, loaded a revolver for the general, I thought nothing of the request. A pair of pistols were produced which I had never seen before. I loaded them, and whilst in the act of doing so, Capt. Dunsterville, asst. com.-gen., came in, but made no remark, and left again almost immediately. Having loaded them, I placed them on the table and left the general in his tent, and went to breakfast. After breakfast I was lying down on my cot in my own tent (which is next to the general's) reading, when I heard the report of a shot. I got up, the sound coming from the direction of the general's tent; and was going there, when I met one of his servants coming to me. He said that the general was shot. I ran to the tent, and found Gen. Stalker lying back on his bed gasping. He was lying on his back, his head on the end of the pillow turned to the right, his right hand by his side, firmly grasping a pistol, and his legs hanging down from the edge of the bed. The pistol was one of those I had loaded before breakfast. I immediately ran for Dr. Mills, and not finding him in his tent, I went to Dr. Stovell, and brought him up to the general's tent.

Questioned by Court.—In your intercourse with Gen. Stalker, has anything come to your knowledge which would lead you to suppose that he was disturbed or depressed in his mind?

Answer.—He has lately appeared to be deeply impressed with the responsibility devolving on him, arising both from his position here, and also from other causes of a private nature. He has complained several times of sleeplessness: he has spoken to me frequently of his disappointment at the squadron of light cavalry, part of which has lately arrived here, not being landed, and he mentioned it again this morning. He was anxious about this, and seemed much annoyed at not getting it. He appeared to me to be excited to-day, to a degree that was quite unusual with him.

Sheik Ali, dressing-boy to the late Maj.-Gen. Stalker, stated as follows:—The general rose at six A.M., drank his congee as usual, ordered hot water, and washed. Having dressed, he wrote a chit, and told me to have a tattoo saddled, and send the chit to Capt. Jones, at the Residency. The chit was sent; Capt. Jones came out from the fort, and spoke to the general. The general ordered me to send plates, &c. to the mess from Capt. Jones. After I had given the orders for this, he again called me, and ordered me to bring his old pistols. I asked him "Why?" He said—"I am going to call Capt. Hunter; he will load both the pistols." The general called Capt. Hunter. We gave him the pistols, and Capt. Hunter loaded them, and put them on the table. The general told me to put them under his pillow, but the butler said, "No, you had better have them put at your feet." I put them under the foot of the mattress, and the general went to breakfast. Capt. Jones and the general returned together after breakfast, shortly after Capt. Jones left, and in about ten minutes we heard the report of a pistol. The butler and I ran to the tent; the general was lying on the bed, with a pistol in his right hand, his arm by his side. Blood was flowing from his head. We instantly gave the information to Sir J. Outram, Col. Younghusband, and Capt. Hunter.

Jumall, the late General Stalker's butler, stated as follows:—The general rose as usual, seemed well, and spoke cheerfully. Wrote a note to Capt. Jones. About half an hour before breakfast he ordered me to take out his old pistols, which were in my charge; I did so, and whilst I was getting them, he called Capt. Hunter. I gave them into Capt. Hunter's hands. He loaded them and gave them to Sheik Ali, and the general told him to put them under the pillow. I said—"Do not put them under the pillow, but under the foot of the bed." He put them there. Then the general went to breakfast. He returned from breakfast, walking with Capt. Jones, and went with him into the tent; about a quarter of an hour after Capt. Jones left, and when he had gone about the distance of two or three tents, we, the servants, who were standing outside the routee, heard the report of a pistol. We ran to the tent, and I went in first, and saw the general fallen on his couch on his back, a pistol in his right hand, and the muzzle of the pistol close to his right temple, from which blood was flowing. I ran immediately to Capt. Hunter, and he returned with me. I have been in the general's service for twenty years. I have lately seen no change in my master's behaviour or temper, and he was in the same temper as usual to this morning. I have never known him in the habit of examining his pistols, or keeping them about him, or using them in any way.

Asst.-Surgeon J. Mills, staff surgeon 1st division, stated:—At about a quarter past ten A.M. I was sitting in the staff mess-tent, when a lascar came in and said that Gen. Stalker had shot himself. I immediately ran to Gen. Stalker's tent, at the door of which I saw Col. Lugard, who called to me to come immediately. I went in and found the general lying on his bed, his head resting between the end of his pillow and the mosquito curtains and kanaut,—his legs hanging over the edge of his bed; his right hand was by his side grasping a pistol. He was gasping deeply. I raised his head to examine the nature of the injury, and, when doing so, removed the pistol from his right hand to prevent its falling, and laid it by his left side. Immediately, I saw that there was no hope of saving life. There was a very extensive wound on the right temple, about 1½ inches above and in front of the ear; the bones were much shattered and blown inwards, and a large quantity of blood and brains issued from the wound. The hair was drenched with blood. On the left side of the head, opposite to, but rather above the position of the wound on the right side, was a large swelling,—the whole of the frontal bone appeared to be detached, the fracture of the bones passing through the base as well as through the upper part of the skull. Blood was issuing from both ears. The wound had evidently been inflicted by some fire-arm, the muzzle of which must have been placed close to the head. Near the muzzle of the pistol in the general's hand were one or two gray hairs, and about the head was the smell of burnt powder; and when I first entered the tent there was a smell of gunpowder-smoke in it. When I had been in the tent about five minutes, Superintending Surgeon Stovell came in and remained with me until the general ceased to breathe, which was in about twenty minutes after my first arrival.

The following is copy of a letter from Maj.-Gen. Stalker, c.b., commanding 1st div. Persian expeditionary force, to Maj. Hill, commanding engineers, Persian expeditionary force.

"My dear Hill,—I have just seen the copy of your letter to Col. Lugard. I am glad you have sent it in. Now can you arrange for any temporary covering? I think you might find some of the carpenters in the town that would assist you, and I really think you ought not to stick at any rate they require. The lives of the men are at stake.—Ever yours truly,

(Signed) "FOSTER STALKER."

"March 14th, 1857."

The following is copy of a letter from Maj.-Gen. Stalker to Lieut.-Gen. Sir James Outram, k.c.b., commanding the Persian expeditionary force.

"My dear Outram,—I hope you will kindly excuse the liberty I (as an old friend) am about to take in begging of you not to go in one of the leading steamers or war-vessels which have to pound the enemy's works. I know well your anxiety to be to the front. This is all very well, if you were only commanding a force or division; but recollect the settlement of the dispute with Persia is entirely in your hands, and should anything happen to you, everything will be brought to a stand-still. There is no one to supply your place. The naval officers should be left to knock down the works, and you, as commander-in-chief, could then direct the landing of the troops and operations on land. We all look to you to bring us through with flying colour.—It is entirely the business of the navy to knock down the enemy's works, and they will like to have the credit of it. Now, my dear Outram, do take the advice of an old friend, who feels most anxious on your account. It is for the good of the force, &c. &c. I suggest the above.—You have Gen. Havelock and other old and experienced officers, if it is necessary to send any of them in the leading steamers. Believe me, my dear Outram, ever yours truly,

"Bushire, March 4th, 1857."

VERDICT.—The Court having maturely weighed and considered the whole of the evidence before them, and viewed the body, come to the opinion that the late Maj. Gen. Stalker came by his death from a pistol-shot inflicted by his own hand in a fit of temporary insanity.

COURT OF INQUEST ON THE BODY OF COMMODORE ETHERSEY.

At a Court of Inquest assembled by order of Lieut.-Gen. Sir James Outram, k.c.b., commanding Persian expeditionary force, on the requisition of Capt. Felix Jones, resident and political agent, at the town of Bushire, on Tuesday, the 17th March, 1857.—President, Major W. F. Curtis; members, Major A. R. Manson, 4th N.I.; Assist.-Surg. J. McAlister, civil surgeon at Bushire; and Assist.-Surg. E. Burrows, 4th N.I.

The Court proceeded to view the body of Commodore Richard Ethersey, which was lying at the residence of the deceased in the town of Bushire. The body was found in the bed-room of the deceased lying across the room on its back, with the head partially under the side of the bed, and the feet close to the dressing-table; the hands resting on the chest, the right hand slightly open, and its thumb raised; the left hand in the position superior to the right, clenched, and forefinger and thumb slightly blackened with powder; the body was clothed with a flannel banian and shirt, and there were slippers on the feet; the body was generally slightly curved towards the left, the eyes opened, mouth slightly opened, and the face wearing an appearance of anxiety; an extensive wound was visible on the upper part of the head, a pool of blood under the head extended in a narrow stream and circular direction to about a foot to the left of the left elbow: this pool extended in a heavier stream to the right under an utensil which was lying close by the right side of the deceased's head; the upper part of the shirt was stained with pinkish marks, as if from bloody serum. On looking along the left margin of the bed which was towards the middle of the room, the whole of the head and right shoulder of the deceased were hidden by the bedstead; a single-barrelled percussion pistol of large bore was lying on the left side of the deceased, about six inches from the elbow, with the muzzle towards the body; a leaden bullet, which corresponded with the bore of the pistol, was found lying on the floor about four feet to the right of the right hip, which was slightly flattened, and half its circumference whitened as if it had struck chunam. On the chunam wall, a little more than a yard left of the body, and about 2 feet 6 inches from the floor, there was an indentation into which the bullet fits to a depth corresponding with the white mark on it. Several pieces of brain were scattered over and attached to the same wall higher up, one piece close to the ceiling. The looking-glass on the dressing-table, were several marked with spots of blood. On a wash-hand table, about 2 feet to the left of the lower part of the body, in a soup-plate in which a kooja was placed, there was red discoloured water and a piece of brain lying in it, about 2½ inches long, 1½ broad, and five-eighths of an inch thick. On the dressing-table, besides the usual articles of the toilet, there was a flat candlestick, having in the socket a wick apparently burnt out; a box containing lucifer matches, two of which had apparently not ignited, was lying on the table; a pair of spectacles lying open, as if lately taken off. The following official papers and covers were also found lying on the dressing-table, viz.:—1. A letter from Commodore R. Ethersey, I.N., commanding Persian Gulf squadron, to Rear-Admiral Sir H. Leeke, k.h., R.N., commander-in-chief Indian navy; No. 162 of 1857, dated Bushire, 16th March, 1857.—2. A letter, No. 741, dated Bombay, 20th February, 1857, from Henry J. Leeke, commander-in-chief of the Indian navy, to Commodore R. Ethersey, commanding the squadron in the Persian Gulf, with correspondence attached.—3. A paper written in pencil under the initials R. E., entitled "The Memorial of Richard Ethersey, Captain in the Indian navy, and Commodore in the Persian Gulf," without date, and addressed to the Right Honorable the Governor and Council of the presidency of Bombay.—4. A large envelope addressed to Capt. F. Jones, &c. &c., broken open.—5. A large envelope broken open and thus addressed: "No. 162 of 1857, on the public service only; To Rear-Admiral Sir H. Leeke, k.h., R.N., Commander-in-chief Indian navy." This envelope is signed by R. Ethersey, Commodore Indian navy, commanding Persian Gulf squadron.—6. A demi-official note bearing an illegible signature is also found on the dressing-table. [This note was destroyed, being a private note from Capt. Rennie, irrelevant to the subject.] Besides the above, three private letters were on the table, set on one side, and apparently not lately opened.

The Court was of opinion that the probable age of the deceased was forty-nine years. He was a man of about five feet ten inches high, well proportioned, no peculiar mark was visible on the body; the hair of the deceased was brown, turning to grey towards the front, on the whiskers and under the chin; the head was bald from the forehead to the crown; there were no jewels or ornaments on the person of the deceased.

The following witnesses were then called and examined:—

Capt. F. Jones, I.N., resident in the Persian Gulf, stated:—Sir J. Outram and myself had been pacing the verandah before daylight this morning; the subject of our conversation was the boisterous state of the weather, the fears entertained on account of the little river steamer Napier, which quitted yesterday before the breeze set in, and the anxiety which Commodore Ethersey must be in with respect to her. Sir James remarked, that it was very probable that this and other previous anxieties might occasion Commodore Ethersey a sleepless night, for we had observed his altered condition and the depressed state of his spirits on the previous day. Sir James was particularly anxious to relieve him of these anxieties as much as possible. With this view he asked me to go over to the commodore's, and, should he express any alarm on the subject of the Napier, to give him hope by saying she must be at anchor under the island of Karrack; and with respect to the attack on Mohamra, I was to assure him in Sir James' name, that he had every confidence in his arrangements; that he would entirely leave him to adopt his own plans, merely being desirous himself to be at hand to co-operate with him at a fitting time. Shortly after day-break, I proceeded to the commodore's, and went directly up to the sitting-room which he used as an office. On arriving there, the bedroom door leading from the office was closed. I called out "Good morning, Ethersey;"—there was, however, no reply. I imagined he was asleep, and being desirous to allow him to continue so, knowing his past restlessness at nights, I sat in a chair reading a paper for about half an hour; his servant Antone entered with a cup of tea and a rusk; I told him not to disturb his master if he was asleep. He replied it was customary to do so at that hour, and entered the bed-room. He started back, crying, "Sahab murgaya, murgaya!" I then rushed into the room, and found him extended on the floor, cold, with his hands on his chest, his eyes wide open, and his head lying in a pool of blood: he was quite dead, apparently from a pistol-shot through his forehead. The pistol was lying about a foot from his left side. I wrote a hurried note of the fact to Sir J. Outram, who sent over Col.

Lugard. He was accompanied by Brig.-Gen. Jacob. Mr. Beaumont, of the Indian navy, residing in the commodore's house, had been previously summoned from his room at my request; Capt. Rigby and Dr. McAlister attended shortly after. On glancing round the apartment in which the deceased's body lay, it struck me that he had been reading official letters lying on the table apart from their envelopes; spots of blood were on these, his spectacles were burnt out in the socket. A portion of paper-wadding was on the table; he had been in bed, from the appearances upon the floor. I did not read the official letters which were lying on the table. From the signature and address, they were from the commander-in-chief of the Indian navy. I was fully acquainted with the deceased's state of mind previous to the occurrence. I have also memoranda which sufficiently show the depression he was labouring under. It arose from various causes, the chief of which was his disappointment at Sir Henry Lecke's arrival to take command of the naval part of the expedition to this gulf. This was the original source of his disquietude; it was added to by being left to conduct the duties of the fleet, while, as he supposed, he was virtually divested of his command by his instructions. This and the harassing nature of his duties, without the assistance of any staff, pressed sorely upon him. I could observe his failing spirits from day to day; in fact, he communicated them to me. I endeavoured all in my power to rally him, and sometimes succeeded, but it was only to fall again into greater depression on a reaction taking place. Latterly a great sense of responsibility attaching to him in the coming expedition, coupled with a presentiment that he was not equal to it, from his diminished mental and physical powers, weighed heavily upon him. He had a restless night, and was evidently suffering from great nervous irritability. To allay this he resorted the night before last to opium, and according to his own account, was rendered more miserable by it. I hold a note to prove this. I was a personal observer to the fact. I mentioned to Sir J. Outram yesterday evening the commodore's condition, and his anxieties with respect to the expedition to Mohamrah. Sir J. Outram told me to offer him every assurance on his part—in short, to say anything that would give him confidence. I wrote a hasty note as dinner was announced, with the above intention, inviting the commodore also to dinner, thinking our party might enliven him. I found this note on the commodore's table this morning; it is here with his reply [the notes were then handed into court by Capt. Jones, and are marked A and B, and attached to the proceedings.] The first will show that immediately Sir James became aware that the commodore had anxieties on the score of Sir James's probable interference, that Sir James endeavoured at once to dissipate them; and from the reply it may be presumed that Sir James's response, as conveyed in my note to the commodore, had a good effect. It will be seen, too, from the commodore's reply, the sad state he was in, for I never remember him to have written in so low a strain. The late melancholy occurrence in the camp affected him greatly; he told me he was frequently haunted by similar visions in respect to himself. I endeavoured to dispel these, but without effect. These memoranda in his diary, which I now produce, will go far to show the Court the oppression he was suffering under. This was at the moment of the little Napier; and it would appear to me that these accumulated anxieties, coupled with the receipt of unpalatable letters from India, hastened the result we have seen. The memoranda alluded to are these:—

Dated January 22nd, 1857, Thursday.

"My poor head is sadly confused, I have frequent dreadful nervous attacks at times."

Dated 11th March, 1857, Wednesday.

"Had a bad night last night."

Dated 12th March, 1857, Thursday.

"I feel more and more my unfitness to command. I am broken down—my head gone, and the terrible responsibility, I shall make men of it." (Sic in orig.)

Dated 14th March, 1857, Saturday.

"Heard of poor Stalker's melancholy death. His case is similar to my own. He felt he was unequal to the responsibility imposed on him—[a blank line intervenes then]. I have had a wretched night."

Dated 16th March, 1857, Monday.

"A bad night—took opium, but the dose was too large—it made me very ill for some hours. Hugh Lindsay and Napier started for river; it promised to be calm, but three hours after she left it set in furious from the southward and south-eastward. I feel for the little vessel, and that it will be the first mishap of this wearisome expedition."

These extracts end his diary. An unfinished paper sufficiently exhibits his failing condition. This was found in his diary. As that paper is in pencil, the Court embodies it in its proceedings, viz.: "I feel that I am unequal to the responsibility of conducting the present large fleet. My head is gone. I have no longer any confidence in my own judgment; have lost all energy, and act entirely upon the suggestions of those around me. I am dreadfully nervous, and the slightest occurrence agitates me, more especially [sic in orig.] to a degree that renders me incapable of acting, or of prompt action. Anything that goes wrong for which I am responsible, quite unnerves me for a time."

Capt. Jones added:—Before closing my evidence, I may state the commodore spoke to me personally on his altered condition; said that he would be invalid, but was unable to do so on the eve of going into action.

Mr. W. C. Beaumont, Indian navy, clerk to the commodore, in the Persian Gulf, deposed:—Last night, about the hour of ten, I went to Commodore Ethersey for some orders to carry out in the morning. I found him in bed. There was no light in the room leading into that; there was an oil-lamp burning. He gave me his orders, wished me good night, and I retired to another part of the house.

Question by the Court:—What room leads into that in which you found the commodore in bed?

Answer.—A room used as an office.

Question.—Did you observe anything unusual in the manner of Commodore Ethersey when you saw him on that occasion?

Answer.—No; but at dinner, a short time before, he appeared rather more nervous than I had observed him of late. There was one occasion, about the evening of the 14th, when I was waiting dinner for him, that he came out of his sitting-room where he was writing and said, "Pray don't wait dinner for me, that old man will drive me mad." He was alluding then, I believe, to the charges that were constantly made in despatching the ships. He appeared very anxious on the afternoon of the 16th to have a letter ready to send to the Commander-in-Chief, Indian Navy. That was the same letter which was found this morning on his table: No. 162 of 1857.

Question by Court.—When did you see Commodore Ethersey?

Answer.—This morning about half-past six o'clock, I was writing a letter for the commodore, when I received a message from Captain Jones, that he wished to see me. I immediately went over to the room generally occupied by the commodore, saw Captain Jones, who informed me that the commodore was dead. On looking into his sleeping-room, I was very much horrified on seeing him lying on the ground apparently quite dead. The back of his head was lying in a pool of blood.

Question by Court.—Did you see any firearms in the room?

Answer.—Yes. In the room where he was lying dead, there was a single-barrelled pistol lying on the floor about two feet from the commodore, on his left side. I identify the pistol lying on the Court's table.

Question by Court.—Had you previously seen that pistol anywhere?

Answer.—No, not to identify it to any degree of certainty; but on the evening of the 16th, one of his servants, by name Ally, was getting his gun and pistol ready, as he thought, for the commodore to take up the river. He put powder, balls, and caps into the case with the pistol; the pistol-case was in the office. During the afternoon of the 16th January, I may add, the commodore was employed in memoranda relative to the expedition to Mohamrah. The document alluded to is in my possession.

Question by Court.—Have you seen or do you know that the commodore took opium during the last few days?

Answer.—No, I was not aware that he had taken opium until informed on the subject this morning.

Lieut. M. A. Sweeny, Indian navy, was then called and examined.

Question by Court.—When and under what circumstances did you last see the commodore alive?

Answer.—At four o'clock yesterday afternoon, I had been writing for him orders relative to the coming expedition, during the course of the day; in the morning the commodore was very nervous, and told me he was not well. When I asked him the reason, he informed me that he attributed his sickness to too large a dose of opium that he had taken the night before; he seemed to rally towards noon, and when I left him, was apparently much better.

Asst.-Surg. E. Burrows, a member of the Court, stated:—I examined the body of the late Commodore Ethersey at about eight o'clock this morning: from the general appearance of the body, he must have been dead at least six hours. There was a large wound of the head, extending from about an inch above the root of the nose in the mesial line upwards and backwards over the top of the head in a curved direction. The convexity being towards the right ear, the skull was completely opened the whole length of the extreme wound, leaving an aperture at least four inches wide, exposing the brain, which was much lacerated, parts of it hanging out of the wound. The whole of the skull was much fractured; at the edge of the wound on the right side, about two inches above the right ear, the skin was discoloured and singed as if by gunpowder. From the nature and extent of the injury, death must have been instantaneous, the ball having entered the skull on the right side about two inches above the ear, passing through the brain, and making its exit at the crown of the head. He must have been sitting on the ground with his back to the bed, his feet towards the dressing-table, and discharged the pistol with his right hand, supporting the muzzle with his left. He must have fallen on his left side, and afterwards have stretched out in death, bringing his head into the position under the bed in which it was found. [This statement corresponded with the mark of the ball made in the wall at the end of the room.]

Ally, servant to the late Commodore Ethersey, is called into court. In answer to questions from the Court, he made the following statements—I know the pistol lying on the Court's table; it is the commodore's. I was employed yesterday in getting the commodore's firearms ready to go on board ship. The commodore has three guns, a five-barrelled pistol in a case, and another which has no case. He desired me to get one double-barrelled gun, the five-barrelled pistol, and this pistol ready to go with him; and leave the others behind, which I did. I put this pistol into a leather case, with shot, cap, and powder, and tied up the case, and placed it on the gun-case on a chair in the office. That was after dinner, after nine o'clock. Before dinner, I showed Capt. Ethersey that I had put everything away properly. He sat on a chair, and I put away the caps and powder and some balls. I do not know how many, in his presence. This morning, about seven o'clock, I saw the leather bag on the chair, and cloth bag of the pistol lying on the ground close by—several gentlemen had gone into the room before me.

[The certificate of the medical member of the Court is marked C. and attached to the proceedings.]

My dear Ethersey.—I really beg pardon, but I went over to you expressly to say Sir James was going to dine, and to ask you to come too, if inclined. I however forgot it, and did not remember it until now. If you have not sat down, there is yet time, if it is convenient to you. I have had a long jaw with him, and he says—may tell me to say to you, he will leave everything to your arrangements for the attack on Mohumrah. In short, he will not bother you; and that is something. I will see you in the morning if you will not come to-night, a thing I hardly expect, though should be delighted.—Yours ever,
FELIX JONES.

My dear Jones.—Had I felt inclined, I should not hesitated (sic in orig.) in inviting, or send to say that I should dine with you, a privilege your kindness and hospitality always allowed the unsocial old man; had I been well, I should have been gratified to have dined with you on the eve of departure; but I was very unwell this morning, and not quite right now, otherwise you should not have asked in vain. If Sir James would not stay away, or down at the mouth of the river, or let me do my own work, there is no fear but the thing would be nicely done. We have good hearts and good heads in our vessels, depend on it.—Yours sincerely,
R. ETHERSEY.
March 16, 1857.

Excuse my keeping your man waiting; I was investigating a case of robbery.

I hereby certify that the death of the late Commodore Ethersey, I.N., commanding the squadron in the Persian Gulf, was caused by violence.

(Signed) E. P. BURROWS,
Assistant-Surgeon 4th Rifles, and Member.

March 17th, 1857.

Verdict.—The Court, after deliberation, is of opinion that the late Commodore Ethersey destroyed himself with his own hand whilst suffering under mental aberration, brought about by long-continued anxieties connected with the duties of his command.

DEATH OF MAJOR OTTLEY.—We regret to announce the death of Major Ottley, of the Bombay Invalids, which melancholy event occurred at the Presidency on the 9th inst. The remains of the deceased were interred the same evening with military honours.

THE RESIDENT AT JEDDA.—The Bombay Times mentions that Mr. Page, the British Resident at Jedda, has embroiled himself with the Arabs. Mr. Page threatened to haul down his flag, and called for ships of war and a force; fortunately, neither the one nor the other could be spared. It is not very creditable to our diplomacy that we cannot conciliate these tribes. Scarcely a month passes at Aden without some demonstration of dislike.

MR. ELLIS, of Sind, is to be appointed Revenue Commissioner for Alienations, in succession to Captain Cowper, proceeding to Europe on six months' furlough.

THE OUTBREAK OF A FIRE in the refreshment-rooms adjoining the railway station at Tanna is reported. Nearly the whole of the station has been destroyed; no water could be procured for some hours after the outbreak of the fire. The men of the 9th regiment took an active part in extinguishing the flames. No goods appear to have been removed.

WANT OF TROOPS.—The Bombay Times states that the garrison is so small, that the accustomed guards at the pay-office and at the residences of the members of Council have been withdrawn. At Ahmedabad, the police are doing garrison duty, whilst at Poona, the head-quarters of the Mahratta country, there are less than one thousand troops. The usual number is five thousand. The 15th regiment N.I. has but three European officers with it, as also has the 29th, now stationed at Belgaum. We understand that the 3rd Europeans, to their disgust, have been ordered back to Poona.

SINDE.—The Sindian affirms that in fourteen days sixteen families, amounting in all to sixty persons, have settled in Sindh. The country of the refugees was Mekran. The Khan of Khe-lat's army is at Kedge, collecting the annual tribute, which is, it is said, five times greater than last year.

OFFICIAL DESPATCH.

CAPTURE OF PIRATICAL FLEET.

No. 8 of 1857.

H.M.S.S. Hornet, at Hong-Kong, March 21, 1857.

Sir,—In obedience to your orders of the 18th instant, I sailed in search of the piratical fleet therein mentioned, in the first place sighting the Macao roads, in order to communicate with the H.E.I. Co.'s stram-frigate Auckland, which ship you had placed under my orders; but not finding her in that vicinity, I proceeded alone.

On the 19th I anchored in Sandy Bay, St. John's Island, and left the ship with the boats named in the margin,* to search the neighbouring bays, when, on rounding a point three miles from the ship, we suddenly found ourselves in the presence of the pirate fleet, consisting of large lorchas and junks, seventeen in number, which immediately opened fire upon us, their shot falling thickly round the boats.

As they were in such number in comparison to our small force, and their position being a very strong one, I thought a diversion might be made in our favour by landing. I immediately pushed for the shore with the gig, second cutter, and a portion of the marines, and scaled the heights on the right of the bay commanding their anchorage, and opened a brisk fire with rifles, whilst the gun and rocket boats, under the orders of Lieutenant A. M. Brock, engaged them in flank. After a sharp fire of about twenty minutes, the pirates began to jump overboard, and run for the hills, when the boats dashed in and boarded them. Two of the enemy were found dead; and from the appearance of the blood on their decks, many must have been wounded.

These vessels I found were a division of the main fleet commanded by the notorious Appoo; they mounted 73 guns of various calibre, with gingals and percussion muskets; their crews amounted to 350 men.

We found one Portuguese and a native of Goa on board. These men appeared most active during the attack, and were observed to fire the last gun which was discharged at us from the pirate fleet. The Portuguese states as his reason for being on board the junk, his being detained by the pirates after the capture of his vessel three months since. I was informed that six other Europeans were with the pirates.

Finding that the whole of the junks were ashore, and after making several ineffectual efforts, working the whole night and part of the following day to get them off, and there being nothing of value on board, I burnt them and destroyed the guns, giving the Chinaman (who had been robbed, and who accompanied Mr. Caldwell) his vessel.

On our way to Hong-Kong, we communicated with Lingting, where the villagers informed us that a fleet of Mandarin junks had been seen cruising yesterday between Lingting and the Lama Islands, directly in the tracks of vessels bound to this port. I immediately stood over in that direction, but could hear nothing of them.

In our engagement with the pirate fleet, they, as usual, fired high, which accounts for the trifling casualty in the boats (namely, one man seriously burnt by a stink-pot).

It gives me much pleasure to report to your Excellency the excellent conduct of both officers and men in and after the engagement, the latter having had great temptations thrown in their way from the quantity of spirits found on board the junks, which they voluntarily destroyed.—I have, &c.,

CHARLES C. FORSYTH, Commander.

ACTING versus DOING.

The number of acting appointments in Bengal has increased, is increasing, and ought to be diminished. The practice, originally a convenience alike to the State and individuals, threatens to degenerate into an abuse. The list published on 27th January, is very large, and if we are not mistaken, it has since been greatly increased. We will say nothing of exceptional appointments, though there are three "acting" Judges of the Sudder three acting Secretaries, and one acting Remembrancer, but confine ourselves to the regular line of the service. On that date there were, filled up by officers only temporarily appointed:—

In other words, one-half of the judgeships, one-half of the collectorates, and more than one-half of the magistracies of Bengal, are filled up by officers who only came yesterday, and who are going away to-morrow. We do not wish to attribute to this system more mischief than it really produces. We know that the rapid rate of promotion has recently compelled Government to give officers acting appointments to which their standing does not entitle them. We know that it is often a great convenience to the State to be able to allow an officer with a specialty an adequate salary without removing him from his special duties. But with all these concessions there remains a large amount of evil. The average duration of Indian appointments is always too short. It is reduced by this system till local experience is impossible. There is not in Bengal, at this moment, one magistrate who has been three years in his appointment. The consequence is universal ignorance; and its result, universal inefficiency. The new arrival must, for a time, be in his Amlah's hands. He has no great wish to free himself, for he is only "acting," and the moment he is freed, he has again to remove, to repeat the old process till energy and care alike disappear. It is useless to argue that one man is as good as another. He is not. Who improves a house he is just going to leave? The permanent tenant may be stupid, but he will do more for his mansion than a man with twice his architectural skill, but always on the wing. The abuse needs only exposure to be remedied, and we rely on the Lieut. Governor to check these movements with a somewhat strong expression of disapproval.—Friend of India.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON.

TUESDAY, May 19, 1857.

MR. WILLOUGHBY, M.P., AND THE NAPIERS.

Our readers will find, in another column, a correspondence between Mr. J. P. Willoughby, M.P., and Lieutenant-General Sir William Napier, relative to certain imputations which were cast upon the conduct of the former by Sir Charles Napier, and which have been adopted by Sir William in the recently published Memoirs of his late brother. The conviction which a bare perusal of this correspondence leaves upon the mind as to the false and scandalous character of the attack upon Mr. Willoughby is stronger than any observations of ours can make it. Mr. Willoughby is abundantly competent to defend himself, and we allude to the subject merely to add an expression of admiration at the high and dignified tone assumed by that gentleman in dealing with one whose conduct is so utterly irreconcilable with the ordinary courtesies of civilized society.

THE LECTURE AT THE INSTITUTION OF THE SOCIETY OF ARTS.

It is always gratifying to those who are interested in the welfare of India to see questions affecting its progress fairly and dispassionately discussed at meetings in this country. It was with much satisfaction, therefore, that we learned that the subject of the growth of cotton in India was to be brought forward at a meeting of the Society of Arts, in a paper drawn up by Mr. J. B. Smith, M.P. for Stockport. The discussion upon this interesting question took place at the rooms of the Institution, on Wednesday last, and it is only to be regretted that among the members and visitors who attended on the occasion, there were not more of those present who, by local experience and an intimate knowledge of the country, might have added to the information elicited, and who at the same time could have corrected the errors fallen into by some of the speakers. We fully participate in the disappointment which is felt at the comparatively small amount of cotton provided by India for the British manufacturer, and cordially join in the cry for a fuller development of the resources of that country, not only in the produce of cotton, but in many other commodities, including, above all, the article iron. But we cannot join in the conclusion arrived at in some quarters as to the cause of the hitherto scanty supply of these products. We cannot, for instance, subscribe to the deduction made by Sir Erskine Perry, who, in a bitterness of spirit for which we are unable to account, attributes the impediments which retard the development of the resources of our Eastern dominions to the government of that empire "being confided to a monopolizing Company, whose policy is to keep down British enterprise, and British colonization." Is Sir Erskine Perry so ignorant of the position and constitution of the Court of Directors, or so deaf to the dictates of common sense, as to believe that a body of men whose duty and interest it is to promote the prosperity of India, and whose acquaintance with its social and physical condition surpasses that of most other men in the country, should be capable, in administering its affairs, of wilfully throwing impediments in the way of improvement? By what contortion of argument can Sir E. Perry show that it is the policy of the East-India Company to keep down British enterprise? Is he not aware that this same body, which he represents to be not only indifferent, but opposed to the advancement of India, has guaranteed capital for railway-works to the extent of thirty millions sterling? and does he suppose that so gigantic a boon would have been granted by the Government of this country, if the direction of Indian affairs had been placed exclusively in its hands? Sir Erskine Perry must be fully satisfied of the contrary; but disappointment needs a vent somewhere, and upon the devoted head of the East-India Company is thrown all the blame for a state of things for which they are about as responsible as the Government of this country could be held to be for the famine of Ireland. Mr. Smith states that railways will not reach the cotton districts for ten or fifteen years to come; he will therefore be rejoiced to hear that contracts have been entered into under which the railway through Guzerat will be finished in less than two years; that the year 1861 will see the completion of the line from Bombay into the heart of the cotton district of Candeish, and that in five years from this time three thousand miles of railway will be open in India. Already the portion of railway under traffic appears to have had an effect upon the export of cotton, for we find that in 1854-55 the imports of this article into Great Britain from India amounted to 119,000,000 lbs., while in the year 1855-56 they rose to 170,000,000 lbs. It might have been presumed that Lord Stanley was a man of too much sound sense, and too well acquainted with the constitution of the government of India, to have followed in the wake of Sir E. Perry, and to attribute the poverty of the inhabitants and the short supply of cotton to the extortion and depravity of the East-India Company. He should have stated, what he must be fully aware of, that the East-India Company for years past have made strenuous efforts to promote the cultivation of the cotton plant, and to introduce better methods of cleaning the fibre. He might also have alluded to the great public works which are now in progress or have been completed, for the acceleration of internal communication and for increasing the fertility of the soil by means of irrigation. If works of this description are so remunerative,—and we firmly believe that in carefully-selected localities and under proper management they would prove so,—why is not the wealth of Lancashire and other manufacturing districts available for the purpose? It is the application of British capital and enterprise to sources of Indian wealth that the Court of Directors so earnestly desire, and we believe that ready and cordial encouragement has been offered and promised to undertakings which have been projected for the advancement of the country. Let those, therefore, who ignorantly denounce the acts and intentions of the ruling authorities, come forward for the benefit of India, for the benefit of this country, and for the benefit of themselves, and embark in schemes of usefulness in that part of the British empire; and we undertake to say that they will find a Government there both able and ready to assist and promote the execution of their designs by every means in their power. In alluding to the question of railways in India, Lord Stanley made use of the plausible argument that the works "should be of rough construction, little cost, and low speed; and when the first returns of the original line enabled them to do so, they might lay down a more perfect scheme." Lord Stanley has been in India, and has travelled, we believe, through the length, or rather through the breadth of the land. It was, however, in one season only, and that the best season of the year, and he had not the opportunity of witnessing the effects of climate during the rainy months. But he must know enough of tropical latitudes to be aware of the injurious influence of the monsoons upon the scorched surface of the country. America is not subject to these causes of decay and destruction; works therefore can, in that country, be of a lighter construction, so far as the effects of climate (though not, perhaps, the safety of the public) are concerned. But in India it is essentially different. To have an established communication throughout the year, the works must be solid and permanent; and those of the present railways are not more permanently constructed than would be necessary for tramways or light railways. If heavy rails are used, it is only because it is necessary to support the traffic, which on the Bengal line now reaches about 25,000 passengers per week. We think, therefore, that it is an erroneous view of Indian railway-works to consider that they should be made after the model of American lines. A single season of heavy rains and their consequent floods might sweep away the line; and we doubt whether any body of shareholders in this country would be disposed to try the experiment.

THE VACANCY IN THE EAST-INDIA DIRECTION.

SINCE the date of our last publication a vacancy has occurred in the Court of Directors by the retirement of Colonel Oliphant. Elected a Director in January, 1844, after an Indian service, as a Madras engineer officer, of nearly five-and-twenty years, he devoted himself assiduously to his new duties, and gained the esteem of his colleagues by the independent exercise of his judgment and by a frank and courteous manner combined with great kindness of heart. In April, 1854, he was elected Chairman of the East-India Company, in which capacity he exhibited great aptitude for business, and commanded attention by the clearness and precision with which he introduced subjects brought forward for discussion. It remains for the Government to add a fifth nominee to the Court in succession to the retiring Director. Many names have already been mentioned; but it would be idle to repeat them, as all at present rests upon conjecture. It may, however, be presumed that either a Bengal military officer or a Madras civilian will be selected on this occasion.

THE MADRAS IRRIGATION COMPANY AND THE GREAT SOUTHERN OF INDIA RAILWAY COMPANY.

A DEPUTATION from the Madras Irrigation and Canal Company waited upon the Chairman and Deputy Chairman of the Court of Directors on Friday last. A deputation also from the Great Southern of India Railway Company had an interview with the Chairs on the same day. The object of both deputations was, we believe, to endeavour to ascertain the feeling of the authorities with respect to the grant of a guarantee to the capital of their respective undertakings. We understand that in neither case was hope held out that such assistance would be conceded; but that encouragement in every other shape would be readily afforded.

STATUE TO THE FIRST LORD CLIVE.

WE understand that a subscription has been set on foot for the erection of a statue to the memory of the first Lord Clive, and that the East-India Company have headed the subscription-list with the grant of 500*l*. So distinguished a hero is entitled to a national monument in a conspicuous part of the metropolis, and we trust that instead of erecting it, as proposed, in Shrewsbury, a more appropriate site will be accorded to it in Trafalgar Square, London.

THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF OF THE INDIAN NAVY.

CAPTAIN GEORGE G. WELLESLEY, C.B., whose appointment to the office of Commander-in-Chief of the Indian Navy we announced in our impression of the 3rd April, was sworn into office at the East-India House on Wednesday, the 13th instant, before the Court of Directors of the East-India Company.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

SIR,—In these days of enterprise and commercial speculations, when British capitalists compass sea and land to realize a large rate of interest, and when money is furnished to foreign states for very doubtful purposes, it is somewhat remarkable that their energies are not turned to India. We have there within our reach and dominion one of the most fertile spots on the globe's surface.

There are rivers waiting to be rendered navigable by a moderate outlay, and vast tracts of country only wanting proper irrigation to make them second only to Kent in productiveness. Tea might be grown to a great extent on the slopes of the Himalayahs, and coffee on the Neilgherry hills, of a better quality than what is obtained from Ceylon; and as to the cotton districts of Berar and Guzerat, they might be made to yield a hundred-fold what they now do. In fact, we might, if we wanted, be independent of the United States for this commodity. The province of Candeish contains five million acres of land capable of growing cotton in as large quantities as on the other side of the Atlantic, but by statistics it is shown that eighty-seven per cent. of the land lies wasted for want of culture and irrigation. One of your articles draws attention to our supply of cotton from India. There you have only to plant, and reap the fruit thereof in due course. What can possibly be richer than the alluvial Concan, or the Deccan, where vegetation is so rapid that many crops might be cleared in the year. We do not want British officers to set an example of exhibiting the natural capabilities of the soil, or to turn their swords into pruning-hooks, and illustrate in their own persons a combination of soldier and farmer; but we would like to see private enterprise encouraged, in order to develop the immense resources of our Eastern possessions. The Neilgherries would form an admirable place to try experiments. It possesses a delightful climate—an eternal spring—and is healthier than most of our colonies. Vegetables grow there for the mere planting, requiring no care. A brother officer of mine who has lately resided there for his health, describes the hills as a perfect paradise. English fruits of all kinds grow in abundance, second only to Covent Garden. The Mabbleshwur Hills, near Sattara, are likewise remarkable for their productiveness. But, unfortunately, India is a sealed book to most men. Beyond its geographical position nothing is known except what has been gleaned from the speeches and florid nonsense uttered by a certain eloquent Irishman. The continent of Europe has been traversed by roving Englishmen until every city, mountain, and river have become hackneyed, and many sit down and (like Alexander) sigh that they have no more countries to conquer! But from St. Mary Axe to the western shores of India is but a step, and would well repay any man's time to snatch a few months from the busy care and toil of life to go and visit that glorious country.

Your obedient servant,

15th May, 1857.

J. W. B.

TO LIEUT.-GENERAL SIR WILLIAM NAPIER, K.C.B.

SIR,—I am reluctantly compelled to notice some of the misstatements contained in the life you have just published of General Sir Charles Napier, in which I am personally concerned.

In his journal, on the 2nd of September, 1842, Sir Charles Napier records as follows:—"Sir G. Arthur seems to have a good head, so has Willoughby, but the first has only just arrived; the last is not chief, and cannot change a bad system." To which you add,—"The nature of Mr. Willoughby's head and heart will be shown hereafter."—Vol. ii., page 188.

Thus, it appears, notwithstanding your commentary, the first impressions of me formed by this remarkable man were not unfavourable; they were founded on official and personal intercourse, and continued until shortly after the battle of Meeanee, when Sir Charles Napier became aware that I entertained an opinion, in common with many others, that his proceedings in Scinde were indefensible, and that the war which terminated in the conquest of Scinde was not, as at first supposed, defensive, but aggressive. No doubt his opinion of me then changed, and I became the object of his animadversions; but I am not the only instance which could be cited from your works, of your brother having, under similar circumstances, retracted his previously expressed opinions of those with whom he came in contact.

One of the most vehement and oft-repeated accusations preferred against me by your brother is, that I was a proprietor of the Bombay Times, that this newspaper was entirely under my control, and that, taking advantage of the circumstance, I was in reality the author of the strong condemnation of Sir Charles Napier's proceedings published in that paper. Thus, in vol. iii., page 302, on the 4th of June, 1845, your brother writes:—"The Bombay Times bullies about it, and Willoughby writes for the Bombay Times, and, as he is Outram's bosom friend, is likely to be the author of most of the attacks on me. I detected him in one, though he does not think so." Again, in the same volume, page 306, on the 12th of July, 1845, he reiterates the charge:—"The Bombay Times is dependent on the Bombay Government. It is Willoughby's paper, and was set on me headlong." But, as a climax, in a letter addressed to yourself, dated the 11th of July, 1851, which is published in your 4th volume, page 332, your brother writes:—"All Bombay knew Willoughby was a proprietor of the Bombay Times: there can neither be doubt nor proof of it. Many times I was told that Buist attended Willoughby's house daily for orders, and for Willoughby's own articles. All Bombay said so, and his brother-in-law, Dr. Kennedy, was certainly a proprietor, and a frequent contributor. I do not think they dare deny this."

I do, however, and in the most emphatic manner, dare to deny this, and in your own language (vol. iii., p. 305) to declare that "this is simply a fabrication, and without a shadow of foundation in truth." I never was a proprietor of the Bombay Times. I was never peculiarly or in any other manner interested in or connected with the Bombay Times. Nay, more, though the disclaimer is scarcely due to one who himself so freely resorts to the press, I can assert, without fear of contradiction, that I never wrote or procured to be written a single line in condemnation of Sir Charles Napier's proceedings in India, either in the Bombay Times or in any other newspaper. Under great provocation (for I was frequently myself attacked), I studiously avoided all anonymous controversy in the public press, and I challenge you to show to the contrary.

But I should not, perhaps, have deemed this charge worthy of notice were it not for the far more serious imputation made against me by Sir Charles Napier in another letter addressed to yourself, dated the 4th of August, 1845. This will be found at page 323, vol. iii., and is to the following effect:—

"I will now speak more of the things in a letter which may be, and which I hope will be, read by the respectable Bombay clique.

I can prove that a letter of 70 pages from Lord Ellenborough was picked up after the Shannon was wrecked, and a person, seeing it contained important matter, for the cover was gone, brought it to Willoughby, who said—"Give it me;" and then put it into his pocket, instead of instantly sealing it up."

It is painful to war against the dead, but you leave me no alternative. There is not a shadow of foundation for this dishonourable imputation. I deny it in toto. The Shannon was not wrecked, but is still in use as a light vessel in the harbour of Bombay. Having no desire, however, to shelter myself under this inaccuracy, I will assume that it is a misprint, and that Sir C. Napier referred to the Hon. Company's steam-frigate Memoon, which was wrecked and totally lost, near Cape Guardafui, on the 1st of August, 1843, when conveying the public mails from Bombay to Aden and Suez.

But no letter from Lord Ellenborough "of 70 pages," or of any other number of pages, was ever brought to me, and much less pocketed by me. I repel the slander with indignation. I am not apprehensive that any statement published to my prejudice by the author of the "Conquest of Scinde" will injure me in India, where I spent the best years of my life; but in this country, where I am but little known, I think it right to refute such an accusation with all the publicity in my power, and with this object I shall send a copy of this letter to The Times, in the hope that it will there obtain the wide-spread circulation I desire.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

Hyde Park, April 28.

J. P. WILLOUGHBY.

"Scinde House, April 30.

"SIR,—Your letter has just reached me. Coming from any other person I would have attended to the denials contained in that letter; coming from you, they pass as the idle wind. Your connection with the Bombay Minute of Council concocted about the transit duties in Scinde, and your own special minute as to the alleged delinquency of Meer Ali Moorad, present, together, such a tissue of falseness towards Sir C. Napier, that I can only offer you contempt.

"Perhaps you will join this to your letter in The Times.

"I remain,

"W. NAPIER, Lieutenant General."

"J. P. Willoughby, Esq., M.P."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES.

SIR,—I observe that Lieutenant-General Sir William Napier has published in your paper of yesterday his reply to my communication to him of the 28th ult. Its purport is, that in consequence of my "connexion with the Bombay Minute of Council, concocted about the transit duties in Scinde, and my own special minute as to the alleged delinquency of Meer Ali Morad" he treats my denials of his unfounded aspersions "as the idle wind."

With a person who thus ignores the rules of civilized society I can, of course, hold no further communication. A court of law is the only arena in which I can, if so disposed and advised, contend with one who is thus regardless of what is due from one gentleman to another.

But it may not be known to the generality of your readers that the minute referred to will be found at page 353 of the papers relating to the case of Meer Ali Morad, printed by order of Parliament as far back as 1852. It is dated the 14th of December, 1850, and was never noticed, to my knowledge, by Sir Charles Napier, or by the author of his Life, except at page 347, vol. iv., where, in characteristic language, it is described "from the beginning to end as one long, laboured, and flagitious lie against Sir C. Napier."

Under these circumstances, therefore, I hope I may be permitted to cite the opinion pronounced at the time on this document by one of the most eminent and distinguished statesmen of the present age. In a minute, dated the 27th of February, 1852 (Parliamentary Papers, page 341), the Marquis of Dalhousie, the late Governor-General of India, thus expressed himself:—

Par. 5. "The evidence has been so clearly and accurately summed up in the report of the commission, and the whole subject in all its bearings and in every branch of it has been so minutely and elaborately discussed by the Hon. Mr. Willoughby, that I should only waste the time of others if I were again to review it in detail.

"It is enough that I express my full assent to the view which has been taken of the evidence both by the commission and by the hon. gentleman.

Par. 2. "In urging the claims of the Ameers Mr. Willoughby enters at great length into the circumstances connected with the commencement of the war in Scinde in 1842, with the cession of the Turban by Meer Roostum to Meer Ali Morad, and with the subsequent annexation of Scinde to the British empire in India.

"His discussion of this subject is marked by all that research, extensive knowledge of public affairs, and distinguished ability which are the characteristics of every important document that issues from Mr. Willoughby's hands."

I will only add my thanks for the opportunity you have afforded me of vindicating myself in your columns, and am, Sir,

Your obedient humble servant,

J. P. WILLOUGHBY.

OFFICIAL DESPATCHES.

THE WAR IN PERSIA.

India Board, May 13.

The following despatches have been received this day:—

"Lieutenant-General Sir James Outram, K.C.B., Commanding Expeditionary Force in Persia, to His Excellency Lieutenant-General Sir H. Somerset, K.C.B. and K.H., Commander-in-Chief, Bombay.

"Camp near Mohammerah, March 27, 1857.

"Sir,—I have the honour to report, for your Excellency's information, the successful result of the operations against Mohammerah. The Persian army evacuated their entrenched position and camp yesterday, about mid-day, leaving behind all their tents standing, with nearly the whole of their property, public and private, all their ammunition, and 17 guns. As far as I am able to learn, only five* guns and a portion of the personal effects of the Shahzadeh have been carried away.

"2. It was my intention to have proceeded against this place immediately upon my return from the Borazjoon expedition last month; but owing to the non-arrival of the requisite reinforcements, caused by the tempestuous weather in the Gulf, together with unforeseen causes of delay, I was not able to leave Bushire until the 18th inst. In the meantime, however, I had despatched the transports into the Shat-ool-Arab, from Bushire, as the troops were embarked, so that, upon my arrival in the steamer Ferroz, no further delay occurred beyond what was necessarily caused by the tides, and by towing so many large vessels up the river.

"3. For some months past the Persians had been strengthening their position at Mohammerah. Batteries had been erected of great strength, of solid earth, 20 feet thick, 18 feet high, with casemated embrasures, on the northern and southern points of the banks of the Karoon and Shat-ool-Arab, where the two rivers join. These, with other earthworks armed with heavy ordnance, commanded the entire passage of the latter river, and were so skilfully and judiciously placed, and so scientifically formed, as to sweep the whole stream to the range of the guns up and down the river and across the opposite shore; indeed, everything that science could suggest and labour accomplish in the time appeared to have been done by the enemy to effectually prevent any vessel passing up the river above their position; the banks, for many miles, were covered by dense date groves, affording the most perfect cover for riflemen; and the opposite shore, being neutral territory (Turkish), was not available for the erection of counter batteries.

"4. The accompanying rough sketch will, I fear, give your Excellency but a faint idea of the great strength of the Persian position, and difficulty of successfully attacking them in it without very considerable loss. I could have landed my troops on the island of Abadan, which was strongly occupied by Persians; and there is no doubt that, after defeating them, the southern battery eventually would have fallen to us. But the several batteries on the northern bank of the Karoon commanded the entire southern bank, as well as the stream of Shat-ool-Arab; and it would have been a serious and an extremely difficult operation to have crossed the rapid current of the Karoon in the face of the enemy, had the means existed of doing so. But, until our small steamers and boats could round the southern point and join us, we should have been helpless.

"5. After mature deliberation I resolved to attack the enemy's batteries with the armed steamers and sloops of war, and so soon as the fire was nearly silenced to pass up rapidly with the troops in small steamers towing boats, land the force two miles above the northern point, and immediately advance upon and attack the entrenched camp.

"6. I have now the very great satisfaction of announcing to your Excellency the complete success of the first two operations; the third, to the regret of the army, being frustrated by the precipitate flight of the enemy.

"7. The Persian army, ascertained from credible report to amount to 13,000* men of all arms, with 30 guns, was commanded by the Shahzade, Prince Khander Mirza in person. The British force, under my command, composed as follows,† was the utmost I deemed it prudent to withdraw from Bushire; but, with the aid of four armed steamers and two sloops of war to effect my landing, I felt confident of success, although I anticipated some loss from what I learnt of the determination expressed by the enemy to oppose our further advance to the utmost of their power, and their extreme confidence of succeeding, as evinced by the fact of their having sent away their baggage cattle.

"8. On the 24th instant, the steamers, with transport ships in tow, moved up the river to within three miles of the southern battery, opposite the Arab village of Hurteh; but, as some of the large ships shoaled on the way and did not reach the rendezvous until after dark, I was obliged to defer the attack for another day. During the night a reconnaissance was made in a boat to ascertain the nature of the soil of an island west of, and immediately opposite, the northern battery, where I wished to erect a mortar battery; but, as it was found to be deep mud, I determined to place the mortar upon a raft. This was constructed the following day, under the superintendence of Captain Rennie, I.N., and being armed with two 8-inch and two 5½-inch mortars, with a party of artillery under Captain Worgan, was towed by the steamer Comet, and moored in position close to the island during the night, unobserved by the enemy, who, from our preparations at the rendezvous, and their confidence as to the impossibility of any vessel being able to pass above their batteries, apparently expected we should not land on the southern island (Abadan). The horses and guns of the artillery, a portion of the cavalry, and the infantry, were trans-shipped into boats and small steamers during the day, in readiness for landing the following morning.

"9. At break of day, on the 20th, the mortars opened their fire upon both the northern and southern batteries. The range of the 5½ inch proved too short, but the 8-inch shells were very efficient, bursting immediately over and inside the enemy's works, while, from the position of the raft, but few of the Persian guns could be brought to bear upon the mortars. At seven o'clock the several vessels of war moved up into the positions allotted them by Commodore Young, and by nine o'clock the fire of the heavy batteries was so reduced that the small steamers with boats in tow, and one large steamer (the Pottinger) towing the transport Golden Era, were able to pass up and land the troops above the northern battery, without a single casualty among the troops, although they had to run the gauntlet of both gun and musket fire; two or three native followers only were killed in consequence of their unnecessarily exposing themselves.

"10. By half-past one o'clock the troops were landed and formed, and advanced without delay through the date groves and across the plain, upon the entrenched camp of the enemy, who, without waiting for our approach, fled precipitately, after exploding their largest magazine, leaving, as I have before stated, their tents and baggage, public and private stores, with several magazines of ammunition and seventeen guns, behind. The want of cavalry † prevented my pursuing them as I could have wished; but I despatched a party of Scinde irregular horse, under Captain Malcolm Green, to follow them up for some distance. This officer reported that he came upon their rear guard, retiring in good order, but that the road in many places was strewn with property and equipments. The loss of the Persians has been estimated at 200 killed, among whom was an officer of rank and estimation, Brigadier Agha Jan Khan, who fell in the northern battery.

"11. I beg to annex a report received from Commodore Young, with a copy of a letter I had previously caused to be addressed to that officer, expressing my entire satisfaction with the naval operations; indeed, it was impossible for my instructions to have been more ably or more successfully carried out, and the commodore, and every officer and man under his command, have nobly earned my warmest thanks. From Commodore Young, ably seconded by Captain Rennie and the other officers of the fleet and masters of transports, I have throughout received every possible assistance.

"12. With the exception of the artillery, with the mortar battery, under Captain Worgan, no portion of the military force was actively engaged with the enemy, beyond some European riflemen sent on the war vessels; but I am not the less indebted to all for their exertions and zeal, and especially for the great order and despatch with which the landing of the troops was effected, under Brigadier-General Havelock, C.B. The highest spirit prevailed, and, had the large Persian army only waited our approach, out of the range of the ships' guns, I feel confident that it would have received a lasting lesson.

"13. From recent information I learn that the Persian force, in a very disorganized state, is still in full retreat; and I propose to despatch immediately up the Karoon, to Ahwaz, three small armed steamers, with 100 European infantry in each, for the purpose of making a reconnaissance, and, if practicable, effecting the destruction of the magazines at that place.

"14. I take this opportunity of recommending to your Excellency's notice Colonel Lugard, C.B., the chief, and the several officers of my general and personal staff, the brigadier-general, the brigadiers, and their respective staff, as also the officers commanding the several regiments, batteries, and detachments of cavalry, and heads of departments, composing this force, upon whom much responsibility has devolved, and whose zeal and exertions throughout this expedition have been most praiseworthy.

"15. To Captain Kemball, Bombay artillery, Consul-General at Bagdad, I am much indebted for his very valuable assistance; also to Major Taylor, as well as to Lords Dunkellin, Seymour, and Schomberg Kerr, who volunteered their services on my staff.

"Commanding Expeditionary Force."

The next despatch is from Acting-Commodore J. W. Young, I.N., commanding the Persian Gulf squadron, to Lieutenant-General Sir James Outram, dated H.C.S.F. Ferooz, off Mohammerah, March 27. This despatch describes the passage of the Indian naval squadron, under his command, up the river, and the attack on the forts, until the enemy were driven away, and we obtained possession of the works and guns. In this engagement the only casualties sustained by the squadron amounted to five killed and eighteen wounded. Special commendations are given by Commodore Young to the officers who assisted him.

A despatch follows from Colonel E. Lugard, C.B., Chief of the Staff, to Commodore Young, dated Camp, near Mohammerah, March 27, expressive of the high approbation of Lieutenant-General Sir James Outram at the service rendered by the Indian navy on the previous day in reducing the strong batteries which the enemy had erected on the Euphrates to defend their position at Mohammerah.

"Camp, Mohammerah, April 4.

"Sir,—In my despatch, dated the 27th ult., I announced to your Excellency my intention of immediately despatching up the Karoon River, to Ahwaz, an armed flotilla, being the only means I had of effecting a distant reconnaissance, owing to the total want of baggage-cattle; but as the steamers had to be coaled, and seven days' provisions for the troops put on board, while all were busily engaged disembarking tents and stores from the transports, some little delay occurred; and it was not until the afternoon of the 29th that the party could be despatched.

"The flotilla I placed under the immediate command of Captain Rennie, Indian navy, aided by Captain Kemball, political agent in Turkish Arabia, who zealously undertook the political conduct of the expedition; Captain Hunt, 78th Highlanders, commanded my military detachment; and Captain Wray, deputy quartermaster-general; and Captain M. Green, my military secretary, accompanied the expedition, for the purpose of reporting upon the country in this vicinity of Ahwaz.

"My instructions to Captain Rennie were 'to steam up to Ahwaz, and act with discretion according to circumstances.' Should the Persian army have arrived, and apparently be prepared to make a determined stand, the party was to return, after effecting the reconnaissance; but in the event of the enemy having proceeded beyond Ahwaz, or if they continued their flight on seeing our steamers (as I fully expected they would, under the impression that the flotilla was the advance guard of the British army), it was my desire that the party should land and destroy the magazines and stores which the Persians had collected.

"By the annexed reports from Captains Rennie and Wray, which I have the honour to submit, your Excellency will learn how admirably my instructions have been carried out, and the complete success which has attended the energetic and judicious measures adopted by all concerned; indeed, it is impossible to calculate upon the advantages which must ensue from the successful result of this expedition, in the effect it will have upon the Arab tribes who in crowds witnessed the extraordinary scene of a large army of 7,000 infantry, with five or six guns,† and a host of cavalry, precipitately retreating before a detachment of 300 British infantry, three small river steamers, and three gunboats.

"I feel that I cannot sufficiently express to your Excellency the great obligation I am under to the several officers and men of the expedition.

"Captain Rennie, Indian Navy, whose gallant conduct at the bombardment of Mohammerah I so recently recorded, has again earned my highest praise and warmest thanks for the able manner in which he has conducted this expedition.

"Captain Kemball, who on this, as on every occasion of difficulty and danger upon which I have required his services, has rendered me most valuable assistance, materially contributed to the success of the expedition by his counsel and energy. Great praise is also due to Captain Hunt, 78th Highlanders, who so successfully carried out the military operations; to Captain Wray, Deputy Quartermaster-General, and Captain M. Green, my military secretary, for the part they so ably performed, and to all the officers and men employed in the expedition. I have to thank them all, and beg to recommend those specially named to your Excellency's notice.

* During the morning of the 26th instant there were apparently one very large and six smaller explosions, near the northern forts; in the afternoon, one very large and one small explosion, in Khaur Mirza's camp. Near this latter large one I have found the remains of about 100 ammunition-boxes. It may, therefore, be assumed that 6,000 cartridges, attached to shot and shell, were then destroyed. Estimating the large one in the morning at the same, and each of the eight (sic) smaller at one-half, we have—

The next despatch is from Captain Wray, Deputy-Quartermaster-General, P.F.F., to Colonel Lugard, C.B., dated Camp, Mohammerah, April 6, which describes in more minute detail the operations against the enemy conducted by Captain Rennie. It states that the enemy retreated from a very strong position, to the number of 7,000 men, with a perfect swarm of Bukhtiarree horsemen and five or six guns, before a body of 300 infantry.

The following despatch from Captain Kemball, completes the series:—

"Captain A. B. Kemball, Political Agent, to Lieut.-General Sir James Outram, K.C.B.

"Mohammerah, on board of the Hon. Company's ship Comet, April 4.

"(Extract).

"I have much satisfaction in announcing to you the complete success of the expedition, which left Mohammerah about mid-day on the 29th ult., under the command of Captain (Acting Commodore) Rennie, Indian Navy, and of which the political direction was committed to my charge.

"After quitting Mohammerah, the first traces we discovered of the enemy were at a point about three miles beyond Rawali Ali ibn Jacob, or 30 miles up the river, to which our attention was attracted by the remains of fires, shreds of clothing, &c., indicating a recent bivouac. There we anchored for the night, a little before sunset. On landing, however, we failed to obtain the desired clue to the number of guns accompanying the retreating army. Either their stay on the spot had been very temporary, or they had omitted to range their guns in line, and must have unhooked the horses in the order in which they advanced on the road.

"Leaving Ismailiyeh at 5 a.m. (31st), we reached Oomarra about 3 p.m., without any incident worthy of notice, beyond the capture of a Persian straggler,* from whom, however, we failed to elicit any information whatever. This man, who, but for our timely arrival, must inevitably have perished, was received on board of the Comet, and having been fed and supplied with provisions, was released at Oomarra.

"At Oomarra we ascertained positively that the Persian army had reached Ahwaz the previous morning, and that the boat containing the disabled gun had passed Oomarra the same day. It was likewise reported, that immediately on the receipt of intelligence of the fall of Mohammerah, orders had been given to remove across the river the small force under the command of one of the Shahzada's sons, which formed the garrison of Ahwaz, as well as to withdraw the grain and provisions collected there.

"Time being thus of importance, the vessels resumed their progress towards Ahwaz, now distant only 15 miles, at 3 a.m. (Apr. 1). At 7 we first observed the enemy's cavalry videttes (who retired at our approach), stretching along the right bank; and, having made good our advance to within two and a half miles of their position, we could clearly discern their battalions of infantry, with a large body of horse on the right flank, crowning a low range of hills of sandstone formation which trended westward in a direction at right angles to the river. Here, in the view of the Persian force, we overtook the boat carrying the disabled gun,† and took possession.

"Some time was now occupied in reconnoitring the country, as also in awaiting the return of spies I had despatched the previous evening to obtain information, and, there being reason to believe either that Ahwaz had been totally abandoned,‡ or was so weakly garrisoned as to be liable to a coup-de-main, an attack upon the town was speedily determined on. The details of the plan will doubtless be reported to you by the naval and military commanders; but I may be permitted to observe that its adoption fully justified the previous reputation of Captain Rennie for daring and intrepidity, while the judicious disposition of the small force, under the command of Captain Hunt, of Her Majesty's 78th Highlanders, insured its successful execution. The gunboats having taken up the position assigned to them under the shelter of an island within range of the enemy's camp, the troops landed, and were formed up in a manner to assume the appearance of 1,500 men, rather than of 300, to which number they were in fact limited; and at the same time Captain Rennie proceeded in person in the Comet, Captain Selby commanding, to support the former, and as far as possible to cover the march of the latter.

"As we advanced the last of the enemy's pickets were seen to retire on the main body. The battalions on the heights gradually disappeared, and one hour later, when the occupation of the town had been effected, we descried the whole Persian army, with their rear not 1,200 yards distant from us, in full retreat on Dizful. Among the wheeled vehicles the private carriage of the Shahzada was clearly discernible. I must not omit to mention that twice as the troops proceeded the enemy endeavoured to bring a gun to bear upon them, and as often the steady and accurate fire of the gunboats compelled him to relinquish the attempt.

"On our approach to the town§ a number of the inhabitants came out to meet us, with proffers of entire submission and devotion to the British Government. I lost no time in allaying the alarm which so manifestly possessed them; and the assurance I conveyed to them that, provided they would honestly disclose all property belonging to the Persians, their private dwellings should be respected, seemed to have the desired effect. As soon as leisure permitted they conducted us to the different stores of grain and flour, and further delivered up to us 230 sheep, some 50 mules, and 150 new stand of arms (in cases), which time had not been allowed the enemy to remove. The sheep, arms, and mules Captain Rennie caused to be shipped on board of the steamers, but the grain, after removing so much as was required for the subsistence of the animals en route, and reserving two boatloads of wheat and barley, there being no other means of conveyance available for transmission to Mohammerah, I distributed among the inhabitants of the town and the outside Arabs.

* "It is probable that throughout our course to Ahwaz we must have passed many stragglers who concealed themselves in the brushwood.

† The carriage had been shattered below the left trunnion. This boat was laden also with valuable property belonging to the Shahada, which, from a distance, we observed the Arabs plundering and carrying into the interior; but time did not admit of our landing to recover it.

‡ Intelligence of our coming had, it seems, preceded us, and the last of the enemy had crossed that morning. We subsequently heard also that a small body of 200 or 300 men had a few days before been sent up the river, on the left bank,—on what errand was not known,—probably to escort provisions.

§ Ahwaz, though formerly a place of some note, is now in a ruined condition, and its population does not probably exceed 3,000 souls.

"While engaged in inspecting the stores of grain, information was brought to me that several stand of arms and a magazine of ammunition had been abandoned by the Persians on the ground they occupied.

"Accordingly, a small detachment, under the superintendence of Major Wray and Captain Green, passed on to take possession; but, having been preceded by the Arabs,* whom from Ahwaz we could observe covering the ground immediately after the departure of the Persians, they were enabled to discern merely powder strewn over the ground, port-fires, shot, shell, &c., and empty and broken cases. The whole were collected in a heap and set on fire.†

"Situated as they were in a position remarkably strong by nature, the precipitate retreat of the Persian army; before a mere handful of British troops, can only be explained by the panic inspired by the defeat at Mohammerah, by their inability from the want of boats, to effect the passage of the river, by the bold front assumed by the expedition, and, finally, by the fact, which would have weighed probably with better troops than themselves, ignorant of our deficiency in field-guns, that the occupation of Ahwaz enabled us to turn their flank, and thus effectually to rake their position. The advantages accruing to us cannot, I think, be overrated. Already had they commenced to entrench themselves, and had made arrangements for the arrival of reinforcements, and for the supply of stores and provisions from Shuster and Dizful; as it is, the loss of the grain at Ahwaz, which in the interim would have maintained the army for fifteen or twenty days, will not only occasion much loss and suffering on their retreat, but by driving them to a distance will destroy their political status in the country, and, for the present, at least, deprive them of any control over the inhabitants.

"From the intelligence derived from natives it would seem that the line of retreat of the Persian army is on the direct road to Dizful; that they have with them seven guns, of which three were present at Ahwaz, or met them on their way thither from Mohammerah; and that the Shahzada, attended by 30 horsemen, has quitted the army and proceeded in advance.

"In conclusion, I take the liberty to bring to your notice the steadiness and admirable behaviour of the military portion of the expedition while employed on shore; their presence in the town was regarded as a protection by the inhabitants of Ahwaz—men, women, and children; and, though for a time isolated in small bodies at different points, in no instance were they charged with any act of molestation or annoyance.

"Nor can I close this despatch without acknowledging the assistance rendered to me by Lord Schomberg Kerr, Attaché to the Persian Mission, who, as you are aware, volunteered his services for the occasion.

"Intelligence having reached me at Ahwaz of the occurrence of disorder at Shuster, I beg to transmit herewith a translation of a letter I addressed to the elders of the latter town in consequence.

"I have despatched emissaries to Shuster and Dizful, to bring me information with respect to the state of the Persian army, and to the state of affairs generally in that quarter.

NOTIFICATION.

"Be it known to all whom it may concern, that the State of Great Britain, being at war with the State of Persia, I, Lieutenant-General Sir James Outram, K.C.B., have arrived in this quarter with the English forces, for the purpose of occupying Mohammerah and the districts adjoining thereto.

"Notice is hereby given accordingly that the military operations of the English army, being directed only against the Persian Government, are not intended to affect the condition of the Arab tribes, to whom the British Government is disposed to extend its favour and goodwill. All, therefore, who may abstain from taking part against the English will be left in the enjoyment of peace and security, and need be apprehensive of no molestation. Themselves, their property, their families, and their religion will be, in every sense, respected. The well-known generosity of the British Government and the discipline of its troops furnish the best guarantee that this pledge will be scrupulously redeemed.

commenced to show itself at Shuster. In sending you, therefore, a copy of the notification issued by the English General, Sir James Outram, K.C.B., I take occasion to advise you that in the event of the march of the British army to Shuster, the General will expect all chiefs to maintain peace and good order among their followers, and that those who molest and commit depredation upon their neighbours, must not look for favour at his hands.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

The new Parliament met on the 30th April for the election of a Speaker. The speech from the throne was delivered by commission on the 7th May.

HOUSE OF LORDS, MAY 14.

THE OPIUM TRADE.

The Earl of Shaftesbury recalled to the recollection of their lordships that at the close of the last Parliament he brought under their notice a series of questions relating to the opium trade, and the mode in which it was carried on by the East-India Company. The result of the discussion upon that occasion was that the question of the legality of the traffic was referred to the law officers of the Crown, and he now wished to ask the noble and learned lord on the woolsack what progress had been made in the inquiry by those functionaries.

The Lord Chancellor replied that, in consequence of what passed when this subject was last before their lordships, he immediately communicated to his colleagues, and particularly to the President of the Board of Control, the questions submitted by the noble earl. As soon as the elections were over the President of the Board of Control lost no time in directing the proper officer connected with this department to draw up a case, stating the facts, that it might be submitted to the law officers of the Crown. That was done; but there was some difficulty arising from the circumstance that it was all-important that the facts should be stated accurately,—a task by no means so easy as might at first sight appear. The case, however, was drawn up, and it had now been transmitted by the President of the Board of Control to the Court of Directors, in order that they might see whether, in their view, the facts were correctly given. It was at present in their hands; but he believed that in the course of a few days it would be laid before the law officers of the Crown, for there was no reason to apprehend that the facts were inaccurately stated.

A discussion then arose on a motion made by Lord Clancarde for papers connected with the case of Mr. Thomas, of the Madras civil service, and Bhawanny Lallah, which motion was withdrawn on an assurance given by Lord Granville that the matter was not at present ripe for discussion.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, MAY 12.

THE KING OF OUDE'S DEBTS.

Mr. Pagan asked the President of the Board of Control whether it was intended to apply any portion of the money borrowed by the Government of India from the King of Oude to the payment of public and bond fide debts still unpaid and payable to the creditors of that prince?

Mr. V. Smith said that all the public and bond fide debts of the King of Oude would be referred to the Government of India, and, though he was not prepared to say that any particular sum would be allotted for the purpose of defraying them, yet any debt which was shown to be public and bond fide would no doubt be paid out of the ordinary revenues of the country.

INDIAN COURTS.

Sir E. Perry inquired of the President of the Board of Control what are the intentions of her Majesty's Government with respect to the improvement in the administration of justice and the amalgamation of the courts proposed to Parliament by his predecessor, the present First Lord of the Admiralty.

Mr. V. Smith said that the Legislative Council of India was now considering the code of procedure and the penal code which had been recommended by the Indian law commission, and he hoped soon to receive their report. The amalgamation of the Supreme and Sudder Courts would probably require to be confirmed by an Act of Parliament; but, as it was a very important question, and one about which there were great differences of opinion, he did not think that he had acted with more than due deliberation in referring the subject for discussion in India.

A RUSSIAN EMBASSY TO CHINA is reported, by the Russian journals, to be on the tapis at St. Petersburg.

THE INDIAN JUNCTION TELEGRAPH COMPANY.

Mr. Andrew, the Chairman of the European and Indian Telegraph Company, has received a letter from the Secretary of the Court of Directors of the East-India Company, of which the following is a copy:—

“East-India House, April 30.

“SIR,—With reference to the correspondence that has passed on the subject of the establishment of telegraph communication between this country and India, by way of Asiatic Turkey and the Persian Gulf, I am commanded to state that the Court of Directors of the East-India Company have resolved to meet the wishes of the European and Indian Telegraph Company by allowing Sir William O'Shaughnessy to accept the appointment of consulting engineer to that company.

“The Court have likewise resolved to sanction the employment, by the Telegraph Company in the construction of the line through Asiatic Turkey, of Captain Charles Douglas, of the Bengal Artillery, and Lieutenant Arthur Hawes, 88th regt. Bengal N.I.; it being understood that the salary and allowances of these officers during such employment are to be paid by the Telegraph Company.

“I am, Sir,

“Your most obedient and humble servant,

“W. P. Andrew, Esq.” JAMES C. MELVILLE.”

MR. TITE, M.P., AND MR. T. ANSTATHEN have been appointed chairman and deputy-chairman of the bank of Egypt.

THE NEW COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF OF THE INDIAN NAVY.—On Wednesday last, the 13th inst., a Court of Directors was held at the East-India House, when Captain G. G. Wellesley, R.N., C.B., was sworn in Commander-in-Chief of the Indian Navy.

IN THE BANKRUPTCY OF CORNELIUS WAUGH, of Branksea Island, who was one of the directors of the London and Eastern Banking Company, the following have been chosen assignees:—Mr. Jay, Regent-street, and Messrs. D. Poole and P. Hughes, Worcester.

THE ORIENTAL BANK CORPORATION v. CALROW.—On the 8th instant, the Vice-Chancellor gave judgment in this case. The plaintiffs were holders of property which was claimed by Messrs. Stewart and Calrow, and also by the assignees in bankruptcy of Messrs. Syers, Walker, and Co. The chief consideration was what was the relation between the two sets of claimants and the plaintiffs. The demurring defendants, Stewart and Calrow, were drawers of bills on the bankrupts, Syers, Walker, and Co., against the proceeds of cargoes consigned by the former to the latter. The plaintiffs advanced money on the security of the bills thus drawn. When the bills of exchange arrived at maturity they were not paid by Messrs. Syers, Walker, and Co., who in December last were declared bankrupts; and the plaintiffs, in pursuance of the power for that purpose, sold the goods. After they had repaid themselves the amount advanced on the bills of exchange, a balance of 1,586l. 18s. 6d. remained in the hands of the plaintiffs. An action for that balance had been brought by Stewart and Calrow, and another action threatened by the assignees in bankruptcy. The plaintiffs prayed for an injunction to restrain the defendants from proceeding at law, and for permission to pay the sum of 1,586l. 18s. 6d. into court. His lordship decided that the acts of the demurring defendants, and their transactions with Syers, Walker, and Co., made the property now in the hands of the plaintiffs liable to the claim of the assignees of the bankrupts. The injunction would go on the plaintiffs paying the money. The money was then paid into court, intact.

PERSIA AND THE PERSIANS.—On the 4th inst. a large meeting of persons interested in the knowledge of our relations with Persia, attended at the United Service Institution, Whitehall, to hear a lecture on the present state of that country, by Colonel Sir Henry Rawlinson. Lieutenant-Colonel Lindsay occupied the chair. Sir Henry Rawlinson, on the 11th inst., delivered to an assembly of the members of the Royal Geographical Society a lecture on Mohammerah and Shat-el-Arib, with reference to the late operations on the mouth of the Euphrates.

MR. HENRY L. MURRAY, brother to our Minister at Teheran, writes to the editor of the Quarterly Review:—“On looking over an article headed ‘Persia,’ in the last number of your Review, I find some severe strictures upon the British Minister's conduct. As I cannot believe a respectable journal guilty of wilfully distorting facts, you will, I trust, feel indebted to me when I inform you that a more erroneous statement of the causes which led to his retiring from Teheran could scarcely have been penned by ignorance or concocted by malice. When the blue-book is published the public will judge for themselves. In the meantime, as you have unintentionally administered poison, you will doubtless feel grateful for the antidote herein supplied.” This letter has led to a warm correspondence between the Quarterly Reviewer and Mr. H. L. Murray.

THE ORIENTAL GAS COMPANY had their annual meeting on the 6th inst., when a dividend of one shilling and sixpence per share was declared.

The Queen has conferred the title and dignity of a baronet of the United Kingdom upon Sir Jamesjee Jejeebhoy, Knight, of Bombay.

APPOINTMENTS.—Downing-street, May 8.—The queen has been pleased to appoint William Stevenson, Esq., to be governor and commander-in-chief in and over the colony of Mauritius and its dependencies, and N. G. Bestel, Esq., to be second puisne judge of the Supreme Court of Mauritius; Sir R. Schomberg, consul at St. Domingo, is appointed consul at Bankock; Mr. W. Van der Spar to be consul in Ceylon, and Mr. F. Schlusser to be consul in Mauritius for his majesty the king of the Netherlands.

THE FRENCH PLENIPOLENTIARY TO CHINA. Baron Gros, has been nominated by the Emperor to go to China in the quality of Extraordinary Commissioner. Baron Gros will be accompanied by a full staff of attachés. One of the objects of the French mission is to demand reparation for the murder of M. Chappeleine the missionary, who was cruelly put to death during the last year. Other wrongs are also to be satisfied, and a fresh treaty of commerce is to be demanded.

THE EAST-INDIA AND CHINA ASSOCIATION has been addressed by Mr. J. de Salis, in a lengthy epistle on the subject of the delays long experienced by the Overland Indian Mail at Marseilles. It appears, from inquiries instituted by Mr. de Salis on the spot, that the principal cause of the delay is the absence of an express mail train on the Marseilles railway, by which the Indian mail ought to be transmitted as soon as possible after its arrival at the Marseilles post-office. With proper facilities Mr. de Salis calculates that the Indian mail could be transmitted to the general post-office, London, in twenty-seven hours, whereas it usually takes from forty to forty-eight hours to transmit it. Another cause of the delay was found to be the practice of the French authorities at Marseilles of keeping the English mail waiting for the French mail, the latter generally being the much heavier of the two, and consequently taking longer to sort at the post-office. The cause of the French mail being so heavy is attributed to the largely increasing trade in silks, carried on with the East-Indies and China by France. Mr. de Salis suggests remedies for the above state of things which are too obvious to need transferring to our columns; but we may state that the trouble taken by Mr. de Salis, and the good sense which marks his suggestions, entitle him to the thanks of all interested in our Eastern possessions.

H.M.'S FORCES IN THE EAST.—The following officers, belonging to regiments serving in India, have received an order from the War Office to hold themselves in readiness to proceed to join the head-quarters of their respective corps with the detachments for India proceeding from Chatham garrison, viz.:—Col. A SCIENTIFIC MISSION TO CHINA.—At the suggestion of the Admiralty, Mr. Charles Wilford, one of the assistants in the Herbarium and Library at Kew, will have a passage on board the beautiful steam yacht sent out by our Government to the Emperor of Japan, and has already sailed for Hong-Kong. The same gentleman will, when his time for remaining at Japan shall have expired, be attached to H.M.S. Acteon, for the survey of the coasts of Northern China, and especially Eastern Tartary.

THE ASSAM COMPANY held its annual meeting on the 1st inst., Mr. H. M. Kemshead in the chair, when a dividend was declared at the increased rate of 8 per cent., and the report and accounts were adopted. The report mentions that the great obstacle to rapid progress—the difficulty of obtaining labour—still continues to exist; but that operations during the past year show a state of continued prosperity and steady success.

OFFICIAL PAPERS ON CHINA.—Some further official papers on China have been published. Particulars are sent to the home Government of an act of perfidy on the part of the Chinese at Whampoa, in kidnapping a gentleman named Cowper; and also copies of correspondence with the Spanish Consul-General, on the subject of the supposed murder of the Spanish Vice-Consul of Macao, in the attack upon the Thistle. On the 9th of December Sir John Bowring sends to the Viceroy of Fuh-keen, &c., a statement of his complaints against Commissioner Yeh, and requesting that the Court of Peking be advised of the same. Upon the replies, Sir John Bowring remarks:—"I think it is to be gathered with tolerable certainty, that there is no present disposition to extend the field of hostilities; and that the Imperial Commissioner will be left alone to settle his misunderstandings with us, unless, indeed, any advantages he might obtain should create a prestige in his favour—a not very likely result." A variety of documents relative to the poisoning at Hong Kong, including protests thereon from the representatives of France and America to Commissioner Yeh, then follow. Yeh, in his reply, expresses detestation of the act. A despatch of Sir John Bowring, dated the 10th of March, contains the following remark:—"I am disposed to think that the Imperial Commissioner will maintain his present position as long as we are unable to visit him with any serious molestation, trusting to the chapter of accidents for some turn in his favour." The remaining papers include communications relative to the capture of the steamer Queen, and further despatches from Admiral Seymour, the latter observing on the 15th of March:—"As regards the Imperial High Commissioner, from all that I can learn, his excellency is still animated by feelings of the deepest hostility, and has increased his garrison at Canton; nothing but an adequate military tone can, in my opinion, replace our relations on a proper footing, and ultimately secure the due fulfilment of treaty stipulations. I am in daily expectation of the steam-sloops and gun-boats."

THATCHER v. D'AGUILAR.—An action was brought in the Brighton Police Court on the 13th instant, by Mrs. Thatcher, widow of an Indian officer, against Col. D'Aguiar, son of Sir George D'Aguiar, charging him with being the father of her illegitimate child, and with having neglected to contribute to its support. Both parties are well known in the fashionable circles of Brighton, and the case created a good deal of interest. The circumstances of the case are as follows. In 1853, Mrs. Thatcher was residing at Brighton with her children, in a respectable position of life. In that year Colonel D'Aguiar, being then with his regiment in Brighton, was attracted towards her. He obtained an introduction to her, and ultimately made her an offer of marriage, which she accepted. After that, unfortunately, an intimacy arose between them which resulted in the lady giving birth to a child. Having left Brighton before the birth of the child, Colonel D'Aguiar, on learning that event, did all he could to break off the engagement, and made Mrs. Thatcher an allowance of 30*l.* a year for the maintenance of the child. Upon the payment of this allowance there was this condition, that the plaintiff was not to communicate with the defendant in any way afterwards. Plaintiff, however, had written defendant a letter, and after that defendant stopped the payment of the allowance. After hearing evidence in support of the charge and on behalf of the defendant, whose counsel sought to impugn the moral character of Mrs. Thatcher, the magistrates decided against the defendant, and made an order on him for 2*l.* 6*d.* per week for the support of the child.

A Bonus of Twenty per cent. from realised profits has been declared for the present year to all policy-holders on the profit scale who have paid five years' premium.

The advantages of this Society are as follow:—

Low Rates of Premium, calculated on the best and most recent investigations of mortality in India.

Annual participation in the profits after payment of premium for five years, by parties assured on the profit scale.

Immediate reduction of premium to the English rates in the case of a party assured proceeding to Europe for a permanency, and reduction after one year in the case of the party visiting Europe for a short period.

The civil rate only charged on the lives of parties in the military service, holding civil offices, as long as they continue in such office.

The Society also grants Deferred Annuities and Endowments payable at any given period.

Tables and full information may be had at the Office in Chatham Place; or on application to the Secretaries at Calcutta, Messrs. GORDON, STUART, and Co.; or to the Agents of the Agra and United Service Bank, at the other Indian Presidencies.

THE NEILGHERRIES: including an Account of their Topography, Climate, Soil, and Productions, and of the Effects of the Climate upon the European Constitution. By R. BAIKIE, M.D. Second Edition, revised and enlarged, with new Views, &c. By W. H. SMOULT, B.C.S.

FROM THE "HUKKARU."

"Mr. W. H. Smoult has got up, with great trouble and expense, an edition of Dr. R. Baikie's account of the Neigherries. The subject-matter of the work is of great interest, but the point we are most disposed to dwell upon is the admirable style in which Mr. Smoult has contrived to get the work illustrated. The large panoramic view of Outacamund is a picture that well deserves a handsome frame, and is worth the price of the book itself.

FROM THE "ENGLISHMAN."

"The new edition is neatly printed, and is illustrated with maps and views, the latter being from original drawings taken on the spot, and lithographed by an artist whose work excels any we have yet seen in Calcutta."

FROM THE "PHENIX."

"A most interesting work on the Neigherry Hills, compiled by Dr. Baikie, but edited, and, in fact, altogether remodelled, by W. H. Smoult, Esq.

ROWLAND'S KALYDOR, an Oriental botanical preparation, for improving and beautifying the Complexion. It eradicates all redness, tan, pimples, spots, freckles, discolorations, and other cutaneous visitations. The radiant bloom it imparts to the cheek, and the softness and delicacy which it induces of the hands and arms, render it indispensable to every toilet. During the heat and dust of summer, or frost and bleak winds of winter, and in cases of sunburn, stings of insects, chilblains, chapped skin, or incidental inflammation, its virtues have long and extensively been acknowledged.—Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle.

SOUND and WHITE TEETH are not only indispensably requisite to a pleasing exterior in both sexes, but they are peculiarly appreciated through life as highly conducive to health and longevity by the proper mastication of food. ROWLAND'S ODONTO; or, Pearl Dentifrice, compounded of Oriental ingredients, imported by the Proprietors at a great expense. This Powder is of inestimable value in preserving and beautifying the teeth, imparting to them a pearl-like whiteness, strengthening the gums, and in rendering the breath sweet and pure.—Price 2s. 9d. per box.

CAUTION.—The words "ROWLAND'S ODONTO" are on the label, and "A. ROWLAND and Sons, 20, Hatton-garden," engraved on the Government stamp, affixed on each box. Sold by them, and by Chemists and Perfumers.

WATCH, CLOCK, and CHRONOMETER MANUFACTORY,
33 and 34, LUDGATE HILL, LONDON. ESTABLISHED 1749.

J. W. BENSON, MANUFACTURER of GOLD and SILVER WATCHES of every description, construction, and pattern, invites attention to his magnificent and unprecedented display of Watches, which is admitted to be the largest and best selected stock in London. He has a variety of Chronometer, Duette, Patent Detached Lever, Horizontal, and Vertical Movements, Jewelled, &c., with all the latest improvements, mounted in superbly-finished engine-turned and engraved Gold and Silver Cases. The designs engraved upon many of the cases are by eminent artists, and can only be obtained at this manufactory. If the important requisites, superiority of finish, combined with accuracy of performance, elegance, durability, and reasonableness of price, are wished for, the intending purchaser should visit this Manufactory, or send for the ILLUSTRATED PAMPHLET, published by J. W. BENSON (and sent post-free on application), which contains sketches, prices, and directions as to what Watch to buy, where to buy it, and how to use it. Several hundred letters have been received from persons who have bought Watches at this Manufactory, bearing testimony to the correct performance of the same. The following extracts from the opinions of the Press will, it is hoped, be a sufficient guarantee to the public that they may secure at this House a good Watch at a reasonable price:—

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"Exhibits exquisite artistic feeling in ornamentation, and perfection of mechanism in structure."—Morning Post, October 30.

"Excellence of design, and perfection of workmanship."—Morning Chronicle, October 30.

"The high repute which Mr. Benson has obtained for the qualities of his manufactory stands second to none."—Morning Advertiser, November 1.

"The high standing of Mr. Benson as a London manufacturer must secure for him a large amount of public patronage."—Morning Herald, Nov. 3.

"All that can be desired in finish, taste, and design."—Globe, Nov. 3.

"Mr. Benson, as a long-established City manufacturer, has gained a reputation for the quality of his productions, which stands second to none in the City."—Sun, November 3.

HANWELL COLLEGE, MIDDLESEX,
SEVEN MILES FROM LONDON.

INDIA AND THE COLONIES.

The increasing importance of the cultivation of the LANGUAGES of the EAST, and the immediate advantages that result from their acquisition, have induced the Principal to make arrangements for affording INSTRUCTION therein.

The rudiments of Hindustani, Persian, and Arabic, will be taught to all who are intended for employment in our Eastern Possessions; and the more advanced Pupils will be prepared for their examination on their arrival in India.

The course of instruction includes not only that which is necessary to pass at Addiscombe or Haileybury, but all that may be requisite for those who are destined to pursue an Indian career.

The history and geography of the country, and the general features of Anglo-Indian life, are taught by a gentleman whose perfect acquaintance with India, from long residence there, peculiarly qualifies him for the duties he has undertaken.

The great advantage to Parents in India of an Institution of this kind must be evident. At a short distance from London, in a proverbially healthy locality, they may place their children from an EARLY AGE under a system from which there need be no departure until their education is completely finished; a class being expressly formed for the matriculation at the University of London, wherein they may matriculate at sixteen years of age, and graduate two years after that time.

Prospectuses, with full particulars, may be had on application to the Rev. J. A. EMERTON, D.D., Hanwell College, Middlesex.

HANWELL COLLEGE.—
PREPARATION for ADDISCOMBE and DIRECT APPOINT-MENTS.

The TERMS of this long-established, economical and successful Institution, will be sent on application to the Rev. J. A. EMERTON, D.D., Principal.

"Hanwell College is fully sustaining its high character."—United Service Gazette.

ILFRACOMBE, NORTH DEVON.

THERE are VACANCIES in a select Establishment, where only a limited number of Pupils are received. For Children from India, or others, where ENTIRE CHARGE is required, the situation and domestic arrangements will be found to possess peculiar advantages.
References of the highest respectability forwarded, on application to ALISS BLUNDELL, Montpellier House, Ilfracombe.

HINDUSTANI IN CLASSES.

THE REV. G. SMALL, believing that many Ladies and Gentlemen, though aware to some degree of the desirableness of acquiring, at least, the rudiments of Hindustani before going to India, are yet deterred from doing so by the usual expensiveness of a course of private lessons under a competent teacher in this country, proposes to form CLASSES for the study of that most useful language, on very economical terms, for Ladies as well as Gentlemen, at his

CLASS ROOMS, No. 3, LEADENHALL STREET.

For Terms, &c. address, 1, St. John's-grove, Croydon.

N.B.—Mr. S. has been a Teacher of Languages for upwards of 20 years, ten of which were spent in India.

HOME for LITTLE CHILDREN.—A Widow Lady, accustomed to tuition, having a large and airy house and good garden, in a healthy locality near a railway station, about ten miles from London, is desirous of RECEIVING THREE or FOUR little CHILDREN, to bring up with her own. Parents residing abroad will find this an eligible opportunity, combining instruction with the comforts of home. First-rate references given and required.

For particulars apply to A. R., 4, Belitha Villas, Barnsbury Park, London.

CLARENCE TERRACE, REGENT'S PARK.—
TO BE LET, furnished or unfurnished, for the season or for a longer period, or TO BE SOLD, a HOUSE in this terrace. It contains superior dining-room, two drawing-rooms, library, three best and three secondary bedrooms, and convenient offices.

For particulars, address Messrs. WM. H. ALLEN and Co., 7, Leadenhall Street.

PASSENGERS to INDIA.—Plans and Prices of Accommodation of all Ships sailing for INDIA may be seen at the Office of Messrs. GRINDLAY and Co., and Passages negotiated without charge for commission.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

IN our last impression we announced the ratification at Teheran of the Anglo-Persian treaty. An official intimation of the fact was received in Paris on Thursday last by Feruk Khan, the Persian ambassador, accompanied by a letter from his government expressing much satisfaction at the success of the negotiation, and flattering acknowledgments of the ability and zeal he had displayed. Mr. Stevens, the British consul at Teheran, left Vienna for London on Saturday, having in charge the ratified document.

By the mail just arrived, which brings advices from China to the 15th April, we are informed that no change had taken place in the position of affairs in the Canton river. Up to that date, indeed, no other result could have been looked for. It was not probable that the Chinese would become the assailants, and any hostile movement on the part of the British would have been unjustifiable, pending the arrival of the expected reinforcements. Intelligence had been received at Hong Kong that her Majesty's ship Raleigh, of fifty guns, had struck on a rock near Macao, on her passage from Singapore, and that it had been found necessary to run her ashore. The Bittern had been despatched to receive her guns. The authorities at Shanghai, with the concurrence, it is said, of the Imperial Government, have imposed a duty of twelve taels per chest on the entrance of opium into that port. If the statement be correct, and the trade is no longer contraband, one great source of all our disputes with the Chinese will have been removed. For more than half a century the Imperial Government has striven to suppress the traffic in opium; but in spite of severe regulations for its exclusion, the taste for the drug has spread throughout the empire, and is said to have extended to the palace itself. The government at length, satisfied of the impotence of its efforts, has wisely determined to adopt the best remedy in its power, and to legalize the traffic. Great distress, it is stated, prevails at Canton and its vicinity from the scarcity of rice, the staple article of food with all classes. On the 2nd April the boats of the Company's steamer Auckland succeeded in capturing a mandarin junk at Tung-Chung Bay, which was taken on to Hong Kong. A battery on shore, which opened fire on the boats as they were pulling in, was also taken possession of, and held till the junk was got under way. In this service we regret to find that two officers and one seaman were severely wounded, and that four men were wounded slightly. A few days later a further engagement took place, when the boats of her Majesty's steamers Sampson and Hornet, and ship Sibylle, under Commodore Elliot, attacked a strong force of mandarin boats and three lorchas in Deep Bay, at the entrance of the Canton river. Ten boats and the three lorchas were destroyed. The firing that was kept up from the shore, where a great number of Chinese soldiers were congregated, was very heavy, but the only accident on our side was one man severely wounded. An atrocious murder had been perpetrated at Hong Kong. Mr. Charles Markwick, government auctioneer, formerly a servant in the East-India Company's service in Canton, and one of the oldest European residents in China, was strangled while confined to his bed by sickness, by one of his house-servants, for the sake, it would appear, of some little property which was in the house. The miscreant had escaped; but a large reward had been offered by the Government for his apprehension.

From Calcutta we learn that the disbanding of the 19th regiment of Native infantry has produced the most salutary effects, and that the late mutinous spirit in the army may be regarded as virtually suppressed. With regard to the 34th Native infantry, it is believed that the discharge of some of the disaffected Sepoys will obviate the necessity of resorting to the extreme measure of breaking up the regiment. The jemadar of the 34th, who commanded the guard which refused to assist Lieutenant Baugh when resisting a murderous attack made upon him by one of the Sepoys, had been sentenced to death by a native court-martial. The sentence was confirmed by the Commander-in-Chief, and the jemadar has been hanged. The unhappy man seems to have hoped for mercy to the last, and then, finding that the sentence would be carried out, addressed the men as follows:—"Sepoys! listen to me; I have been a traitor to a good Government, I am about to be punished for my great sins, I am about to be hanged, and I deserve my punishment. Sepoys! obey your officers, for they are your rightful and just rulers, or else you will, like me, be brought to the gallows. Sepoys! obey your officers, listen to them and not to evil advisers; I listened to evil advisers, and you see what I am come to. I call upon God to bless the Governor-General, all the great gentlemen, the general, and all the sahib logue [gentlemen] here present—Seeta Ram! Seeta Ram! Seeta Ram!" The men who attempted to tamper with the Mint guard, with the view of seizing the building and plundering the vaults, have been sentenced to transportation for fourteen years. In this instance also the trial was conducted by a native court-martial. The war with China appears to be viewed with the utmost favour. Meetings have been held at Singapore, congratulating Sir James Brooke on the success of his decisive measures during the late insurrection. A similar feeling prevails at Calcutta, where the merchants were about to attend Lord Canning with an address, expressing their unanimous sympathy with the policy of Lord Palmerston, and their conviction that the time for concession to the Chinese had passed. Fuzl Ali, the notorious outlaw, who murdered Mr. Boileau, one of the commissioners in Oude, has at length forfeited his life as the penalty of his crime. Lieut. Longueville Clarke, of the 3rd regt. of Oude irregular infantry, on the evening of the 7th April marched with forty men across the Nepaul frontier, through the dense jungle which constitutes the boundary, and surprised the bandits in a grove of trees. The men fought desperately, Lieut. Clarke having one man killed and four wounded, out of his small party. Fuzl Ali, and two of his brothers, equally notorious bandits with himself, were killed, and two others of the gang. The importance of this service is very great, as it will probably restore peace to the province, and relieve the administration of much anxiety. Lieut. Clarke was himself slightly wounded.

Gholab Singh, the ruler of Cashmere, is believed to be on his death-bed. His legitimate successor is his son, Runheer Singh; but the feelings of the people have been much embittered by the tyranny and oppression of Gholab, and it is not improbable that, at his death, the succession may be disputed between his son and his more popular nephew, Jowahir Singh, each being supported by a section of the soldiery. The issue will probably be determined by the decisive interference of the British Government.

Nothing of importance has been communicated from Caubul, save the announcement that Major Lumsden, and the British mission, were at the fort of Koorun (in the valley of that name, which was lately entered by a force from Peshawur), on the 20th of March. The commandant of the fort turned out his garrison to receive the party, and showed them all the civilities in his power. A troublesome clan being in arms to impede their further progress, he detained them in his fort, while with a strong body of men he advanced to clear the way for them.

From Madras we hear of General Grant's investiture with the insignia of the Bath, at the hands of the Governor of the presidency.

Major-General Ashburnham was expected at Bombay by the ensuing mail, on his way to China. A meeting of the Bombay shareholders of the London and Eastern Bank was held on the 30th of April. It appeared, from the accounts submitted to the meeting, that the assets of the branch were amply sufficient to meet all engagements. An explanatory statement was given of the arrangements entered into by the London directors with the Oriental Bank, and of the advantages to be derived from the assistance tendered by that corporation. Those arrangements were unanimously approved, and all the shareholders present agreed to sign promissory notes, payable to the Oriental Bank Corporation, for the 50% per share not yet called up, in respect of the shares held by them in the London and Eastern Banking Corporation.

CASUALTIES BY DEATH IN THE ARMIES OF INDIA REPORTED SINCE OUR LAST PUBLICATION.

BENGAL.—Capt. H. P. Wildig, 34th N.I., at Lucknow, April 8.

MADRAS.—Capt. Henry Hughes, 18th N.I., at Vellore, April 18; Capt. William Johnstone, 51st N.I., at Trichinopoly, April 19; Capt. R. L. J. Ogilvie, 33rd N.I., at Jackatalla, April 8; Capt. W. T. K. Rolston, 14th N.I., at Bangalore, March 31.

THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF.—The Englishman tells two good stories concerning the Commander-in-Chief. His Excellency, on inspecting a regiment at Delhi, inquired of an officer commanding a company, "How many men there were in his company? When he last inspected the company? How many medal men there were present?" To each of which questions the officer answered, "About 25 men. About last Wednesday. About 29 men." "I don't want to know about the number," replied his Excellency, "give me the exact numbers and period." The subaltern, becoming slightly confused, hesitated in giving his answer. Upon this the colonel of the regiment turned round to the subaltern, saying, "This is really too bad, it is shameful; I could not have believed it." The Commander-in-Chief, with the most courteous demeanour, said to the colonel, "Pray do not be annoyed with the young officer; it strikes me his conduct coincides admirably with your system of discipline." Again, whilst inspecting the artillery at Meerut, the Commander-in-Chief asked an officer the age of a horse he was then looking at; the officer, seeing 52 on the horse's back (this being the year he came out of the stud) answered 52 years. These stories point to two fundamental principles. In an infantry regiment, an officer should know the history of every man in his company; and in a cavalry regiment not only the history of every man, but the history of every horse. We hold their little of enani if such studies were carried out.

BENGAL.

THE SALE LAW, AND THE REVENUE OFFICERS.

The Legislative Council has published another mass of papers upon the proposed change in the revenue Sale Law. They profess to contain the opinions of the Lieut.-Governor, and some of the revenue officers of the presidency upon the details of that measure. We confess that we have glanced through the collection with a feeling of almost bitter indignation. Could its character be comprehended in England, it would inflict the heaviest blow ever yet felt by the civil service of Bengal. The measure proposed by Mr. Grant is acknowledged, whatever its intrinsic merits, to be worthy of a statesman. It is acknowledged that it will effect an instant change in the tenure of land throughout Bengal; that it will ameliorate, if not remove some of the evils of the settlement; that it may lead the way to a mighty social revolution. It is acknowledged that there are great practical difficulties in the path, that there are arguments to be met as weighty as those which impeded the Encumbered Estates Act at home. This measure, thus wide and thus difficult, is submitted to the revenue officers of a presidency, to the board, to the commissioners, to collectors, to the men upon whose skill its success must ultimately depend. And what is the result? Of eight commissioners, five only condescend to reply in decent time. Of some thirty collectors only fourteen send any replies at all, and some of those which do arrive are rather the careless jottings of a note-book than well-weighed reports. Of the remainder, Mr. Loutour says his experience is confined to minor revenue matters. Mr. W. Tucker writes just one page and a quarter, and certainly does not make up for his brevity by condensed argument. Mr. E. Russell has "but a very short time entered the Revenue line." Mr. H. V. Schalch has acquired "his experience in a district, temporarily settled under Regulation VII. of 1822, and therefore feels great diffidence in expressing his opinion on an Act which will have effect through the permanently settled districts." Mr. Shore says, it "is so long since he has been employed in the revenue branch of the service, and he has re-entered it so recently," that he also feels considerable diffidence. The commissioner of Nuddea says he has had no time to write the opinion he formed while in the board, but transmits his collector's views, which "will not greatly assist the board." That seems probable, for

"I shall conclude with a few words on the collector's returns. Mr. Mangles has begged to be excused giving any opinion on the plea of his inexperience in revenue matters. Mr. F. Lushington, Mr. Pigon, and Mr. Fowle, have altogether missed the points on which their opinions were required. On pointing this out to the two former gentlemen, and on requesting them to ascertain the views of their deputy-collectors on the probable working of Sections XXXVI. and XXXVII., I obtained the further returns which are also submitted. In the case of Moorshedabad the second return is not a more satisfactory one than the first. In the case of the twenty-four Pergunnahs I have thus obtained the opinions of three deputy-collectors of experience. That of Serchander Deb should, I think, carry weight with it."

This is a little too bad. Here are ten gentlemen employed in the revenue department, dealing every day with questions of the highest importance to every agriculturist in Bengal, deciding on claims which involve the right to areas larger than England, who are unable to give an opinion on the broadest question of tenure ever presented to the community. Most of them plead inexperience. Every one has three times the experience of Mr. Peacock, and we will be bound to say that when Mr. Peacock speaks upon the Bill, his opinion will not be obscure, or based on defective information. Others talk of want of time. How much time has an Indian journalist at his disposal, yet there are at least three in India who have contrived to analyse the new Bill with some effect. One gentleman actually says he has not time to write his opinion. Suppose he had sat up all night for once in his life, as some hundreds of students do every year who are not paid for it. One week's study would have enabled all these collectors to form, if not an accurate, at least a definite opinion on every clause in the Act. We have no scruple in saying that every one who has thus declined to consider a great question has been guilty of a positive dereliction of duty. We can suggest no fitter punishment than that each should be sent to serve for six months under Sir John Lawrence, to be taught what work really means. It is occurrences like these which make even Conservatives doubt whether the independence afforded by a covenant, is not counterbalanced by the mental laziness it is so apt to foster.

We have already noticed the minute by the Lieut. Governor. Disagreeing as we do with its conclusions, it is impossible to deny either its clearness or its force. Mr. Halliday writes as we wish his subordinates would write, adhering firmly to his own scheme, but striking at the principles rather than the details of the rival proposal. The next in ability is Mr. Ricketts. This gentleman, not content with objecting to a material part of Mr. Grant's project, considers it, justly enough, his duty to suggest a remedy. He thinks it impossible for the collector to decide what is the "fair proportion" of the jumma, which will entitle the under-tenant to demand registration. This opinion is shared by the majority of the revenue officers, but it is worthy of note, that only two, the Lieut. Governor and Mr. Ricketts, have added to their objections a practical suggestion. Mr. Ricketts would replace the words "a fair proportion" by a "suitable" proportion, as one much more easy to be ascertained:—

"If the lands are in the hands of Ryots, under ordinary circumstances the rent should be about fifty per cent. on the ryottee rental. If the land is to be held immediately by the lessee without the intervention of any Ryots, the rent should be about thirty per cent. of the gross proceeds. When circumstances are peculiar, special inquiry and special terms of registry will be needful."

The alteration would probably simplify the working of the Act, but the rates suggested appear exorbitant. Mr. Ricketts, moreover, is almost the only official who has perceived the enormous importance of the commutation clause. We make no apology for giving his opinion this prominent place:—

"This section certainly provides for redemption of the land-tax and in the manner proposed I see no reason why the tax should not be redeemed. It is not probable that many will take advantage of the rule; and if it were probable, still I would have the rule. It is not intended to decrease the resources of posterity; while the redemption will have the effect in promoting improvement by a complete exemption from all liability to the State, the resources of posterity will be in no way affected by the transaction. The existence of the debt and the necessity for paying the interest thereof are facts. The transaction will be equivalent to redemption of the land-tax for a money payment at twenty-five years' purchase, and the immediate application of the money to the liquidation of so much of the debt; supposing the debt to be extinguished by redemption, or, in other words, supposing all the public securities in existence to be deposited under the Act, I do not see how posterity could suffer. There would be less land revenue to receive, but there would be no interest to pay. I do not see but that the condition of the country would be improved in many respects. Imagine Bengal with no Collectors' offices, no last days of payment with all their griefs and anxieties, no settlements with "unfortunate" over assessments, no turning out escorts for treasure at unreasonable times, all the cost of collectors' and deputy-collectors' establishments, guards, &c. &c., saved and laid out in improving the courts and the police. I can see no object in the land-tax except to meet State expenditure. Unless it be denied that the landed interest would prosper more without the tax than with it, payment of debt by redemption of tax would be advantageous."

Dimly and faintly, but not the less certainly, the idea of a perfect tenure begins to rise in the Indian official mind. Ten years ago Mr. Grant's proposal would have been hooted down as revolutionary. Five years ago, the bare idea of annihilating the land revenue of Bengal would have been received as a symptom of financial insanity; and now the Legislative Council talks freely of commutations. A member of the Sudder Board thinks the land might possibly not prosper the less if it were less taxed. A President of the Board of Control regrets deeply the want of permanence in our tenures. An Indian journal talks of allodial tenure as yet possible, and is not believed to dream. Municipality after municipality proposes and accepts an income-tax as the fairest of all modes of taxation; and, lastly, the Court of Directors, the stronghold of short leases, acknowledges that the value of land depends on the fixity of tenure. The process is slow, as all social changes ought to be; but the end, sooner or later, is inevitable. The burden of the empire will be thrown on all alike. Land will be what the public funds now are—the best and most tangible security; and the Government, with an elastic revenue, will be enabled to commence improvements now pronounced Utopian. We have not space to notice Mr. Ricketts's plan for investing Government with a power over under-tenures not conceded to any other purchaser. It appears to us to leave open that possible chance of loss which already vitiates every perpetual lease in the country, and which it is the object of Mr. Grant's Bill to remove. We pass on to the third formidable opponent of the reform.

Mr. Samuells' paper on the law may almost atone for the carelessness of the majority of his colleagues. It deserves to be read by every one who has taken the slightest interest in the proposed change. Flinging details somewhat contemptuously aside Mr. Samuells strikes straight at the vital principle of the bill. He declares that it will not tend to encourage the devotion of capital to land. It will rather render such expenditure impossible. The under-tenure, he argues, would be under the new law the only proprietary tenure. The zemindar would have merely a superiority. The middleman would only buy and sell the right to certain rents. No one possessed of capital would have the faintest interest in the improvement of the soil, for he would have no power to increase his rent. Nobody improves land out of philanthropy. The owner wants a quid pro quo in India as well as England, and under the new law he will not get it. If this objection were correct, it would be impossible to overrate its force. The first object of the act is to secure the application of capital to the soil, and if its fails to secure that end, it is not worth its cost. It is not, however, correct, for this simple reason. The state of affairs Mr. Samuells deprecates exists already. The zemindar has only a superiority. The middleman can only—so long as he does not cheat—deal with certain rents. The farmer is the only person really and permanently interested in the improvement of the soil. And therefore on the great underlet estates there is no improvement. Mr. Samuells says—

"I cannot believe, for instance, that the improvement of the District of Burdwan would not proceed much more rapidly if the leases were under the control of the rajah, than it is likely to do while the estate is sub-divided among putneers who enjoy fixity of tenure and who alone therefore have an interest in improving its resources."

We will accept his illustration, and we say that if the Burdwan estate were to be improved into a garden, instead of the pauper warren it now is, the revenue of the rajah would not be improved one rupee. He has exactly that bare superiority of which Mr. Samuells complains. Nay, we are wrong. He has one thing more; the right, if he pleases, of committing a colossal fraud, of letting his estate lapse, and buying it in cleansed of its encumbrances. We fear to mention the sum he might clear by such a proceeding. Tenants doubtless under the rajah are as safe as under the Stanleys, but that is an accident. Suppose the estate divided, as great estates are every day, among half a dozen poverty-stricken sons, each making it his point of honour to keep up the original scale of living! Will Mr. Samuells guarantee their principles? Or would any planter in his senses take a talook under them, and triple its value by covering it with date trees? It is to enable him to do this that the act is really required. The evil is not in this or that detail, in the sunset law or the existence of middle-men, but in the broad patent facts that for a capitalist to improve his estate in Bengal is to run the risk of losing it, and that the ratio of the risk is in exact proportion to the ratio of improvement. The point seems so clear that we are weary of the reiteration. A Bengal talookdar pays for a perpetual lease. He gets a tenancy at will instead. Has the legislature a right to secure him his lease? We maintain—like the collectors with due diffidence—that it has, that the prevention of fraud is one of the objects for which legislatures exist.

Lastly, Mr. Samuells endorses the objection of the zemindars:—

"At present, when a zemindary is sold by the collector, it passes into the hands of the purchasers free, for the most part, of encumbrances, and capable, under judicious management, of improvement to a greater or less extent, according to the circumstances of the case. It commands, therefore, a price calculated not merely according to its present rental, but according to the extent to which there is reason to expect that rental may be raised. But introduce fixity of tenure, and the zemindary is worth merely the market value of the existing rental, minus the cost and risk of collection."

That is plain English. The zemindar not only sells what is his own, but a right of stealing besides. The good-will of the shop is sold plus some rare recipes for adulteration. Doubtless the recipes increase the value of the shop; but that is no reason the legislature should not render the adulteration penal.—Friend of India.

THE MUTINIES AND THEIR CAUSE.

The difficulty is not over. The men of the disbanded regiment are wending their way back to their homes, ruined and dispirited. The spirit which pervaded them exists, however, in other regiments, and needs the vigilant watchfulness of the military authorities. We shall not enlarge on the motives and designs attributed to the 34th N.I. at Barrackpore. There is little wisdom in giving currency to stories one half of which are inventions, and the other half coloured by native imagination. The broad fact that the regiment is disaffected, is only too patent, and that is sufficient. Whatever the reason or the excuse, it is certain that the decree of a court-martial cannot be carried out at Barrackpore without the presence of Europeans. There are whispers of troubles at Dinapore averted by tact, and the presence of H. M.'s 10th. The men selected to practise at Umballah and Sealkote look anxiously at the English cartridges. Wild rumours, each more preposterous than the last, float about the cantonments of the North West, and we expect speedily to hear that the sensation has crossed the Indus. A panic so unreasonable, and so widely spread, must in India be always inconvenient. Touching as it does the point of honour of a credulous Native army, it becomes not only inconvenient, but dangerous.

The danger is not diminished by the fact that the most experienced officers are still doubtful as to its cause. Of the many explanations offered not one suffices to render all the phenomena intelligible. The sepoys, it is said, believe that Lord Canning has pledged himself to convert them all to Christianity. A dim hazy conviction that Christianity is winning the game, that conversion is only a question of time, is undoubtedly a sign of the hour in all ranks of native society. But if this be the belief of the soldiery, why do any regiments remain loyal? The 43rd would be as sensitive to such a suspicion as the 34th. They live in the same station. They are subjected to the same influences. They hear the same news. They have the same caste, the same creed, the same point of honour. Yet it was perfectly well understood on the 31st, that the 19th had no sympathy to expect from the 43rd. The irregulars are as Hindoo as the line, and they quiz the regulars for their perturbation. The Goorkhas belong to the race who nearly dethroned Jung Bahadoor on a rumour that he had forfeited his caste in England, and the Goorkhas clamour for the cartridges. The Sikhs have a horror of bullock's fat, and the Sikh soldiers at Barrackpore are said to have expressed simple disgust at the entire movement. There is nothing in the training of the cavalry to make them indifferent to their creed, and no sound of disaffection has been heard from that arm. The theory must be dismissed as a mere excuse put forward by mutineers to excuse and conceal the cause of their disobedience.

The next theory is more tangible. It is surmised that the movement is part of a plan having for its object an increase of pay. The price of provisions is rising rapidly. The sepoys detest Bengal for itself. They hate the climate; they hate the people, who tremble before them, and fleece them as easily as a gamester fleeces an unfledged lordling. But they accumulate money by eating rice instead of wheat, and money is a sepoy's summum bonum. Rice is now dear, and the Bengal regiments of course are discontented. Knowing, however, that they will obtain little sympathy from the mass of the army, which is buying grain beyond the Sutlej at thirty-five seers to the rupee, they start the only rumour which will wake up every sepoy from Calcutta to the Indus. There is something very plausible in this explanation. Questions of pay have been at the bottom of almost all sepoy mutinies. The facts assumed are all correct. Provisions are very dear, and will be dearer still. The stalking-horse put forward is exactly such a one as a clever drill Nainque, very much in debt, would be apt to suggest. But the old difficulty still recurs. Why should the desire for more pay be confined to a portion of the brigade? The 43rd would like an extra rupee as well as the 34th. Why does the latter regiment only hope to obtain it by disobedience? It is no answer to say that one regiment may have the same desires as another, yet disapprove of its method of expressing them. It would at least ask, in however temperate a tone. Nor would any grievance of this sort produce an expression of irritation against the officers. The men know as well as we do that no one but the Sirkar can increase their pay. They are under no delusion as to the authority to which, in such a case, they must appeal. This theory like the last is inconsistent with the known facts.

Again, it is surmised that the movement is instigated from the outside. This impression is favoured by the fact that there is obviously a secret somewhere. The men reply vaguely even to officers whom individually they trust. Promises have been made of revelation which still is not revealed. Two or three incidents have occurred betraying anxiety on the part of the men, lest the truth by accident should get wind. Moreover, a secret grievance is prima facie impossible. Men conceal a conspiracy, not a complaint. A regiment in mutiny is a mob, and the instinct of a mob is to roar out its trouble, in the roughest and most intelligible of phrases. Thus far therefore the idea of outside intrigue seems reasonable. But even here we are met on the threshold by the old rule of evidence. Whose interest is it to spread disaffection among the sepoys? No foreign power, supposing it to have the will, has the means. No Indian power except the Mahrattas and the Nepaulese could profit for an hour even by a general outbreak. The Mahrattas have shown no disposition to intrigue. Nepal is still ruled by Jung Bahadoor, and Jung Bahadoor has never forgotten London. As to the King of Oude, supposing him mad enough to make the attempt, what are his means? He can have no influence over the Hindoos. The attempt to buy the men, head by head, seems possible, but it must be remembered that the high offers from Moolraj were contemptuously rejected, and we doubt if any amount would induce a native officer to risk his pension. Who else is there who, by any stretch of the imagination, could be supposed to gain by a quarrel between Government and its native army?

Finally, there are some few observers, chiefly unconnected with the army, who point to the general service order, and talk of an unwillingness to serve in Persia. The conjecture scarcely deserves a reply. It is refuted by the simple fact that the 19th offered with one consent to re-enlist as a general service corps and go to China, or the world's end. There are as many recruits as ever, and the order if disliked at all, is disliked, because the older soldiers see that it will not do to plead caste while their younger comrades are on their way to battle.

As yet, we submit, the balance of evidence is in favour of the opinion at first expressed. The mutinies are really the result of the "cartridge question." The secret to be kept is not the cause of discontent, but the plan devised by the sepoys for allaying it. The reason for the difference of opinion among the regiments is the different degree of their previous impatience. The spark passes through the whole, but ignites only the combustible matter. Without the cartridges there would have been no overt mutiny. Without the disorganization, consequent on the separation between officers and men, the cartridges would never have excited an emotion. They will excite none in the Irregulars. They will excite none in regiments where the commanding officers have gained the confidence some Europeans so easily inspire.

We hope next week to discuss at least one plan for the permanent removal of this source of danger. But it is not by plans however broad or however thoroughly matured that it must be met. They all require time, and there is no time to spare. The immediate difficulty must be met now, by such commanding officers as we have, and with such means as they may have at their disposal. In every regiment the local grievance, whatever it be, should be instantly redressed. In every regiment the officers should patiently and quietly impress on the men that Government is totally indifferent to their creed. In every regiment there should be a new and persistent effort to ascertain what the Sepoy really thinks, hopes, and wishes. There is too much of the kidglove system in vogue, which it behoves commanding officers to remove. The Subaltern who entertains his mess with his dislike for natives, his contempt for men who can share their sports on the wrestling ground, his impatience of Subadarjee's prose, may be a gentleman. He is no officer. In nine cases out of ten we believe a little kindly talk, an exhibition of real personal sympathy with the men would remove much of the discontent. Sepoys are just like continental servants. They can be managed as easily as Englishmen, but not in the same manner. You cannot rule either if you keep up the harsh line of separation drawn by our insular etiquette. The danger of over familiarity, a military crime in an European regiment, does not exist among Sepoys. The distance is too great, the line of colour too impassable for kindness to be misinterpreted. The regiment which has confidence even in one officer will never be misled by rumours of conversion.—Friend of India.

— THE UNFORTUNATE SHIP "LADY NUGENT." —

Some of our readers may perhaps recollect that, two years or more ago, when endeavouring to account for the mysterious loss of the unfortunate ship Lady Nugent, with half or two-thirds of a Madras regiment on board, leaving Madras Roads as she did, a stout, well-commanded vessel, as we knew from the most undoubted authority, and at a time when no bad weather was known to have occurred in the Bay of Bengal, we urged it as probable, or more than probable, that the loss had arisen through neglect of the deviation of the compasses on board, which would certainly be effected by the arms of the troops, and probably by the cargo of military stores; and that, as now well ascertained, this new deviation would go on increasing from day to day, and thus, unless most carefully watched, it might become in a few days a fearful source of error, especially at night or in thick weather.

We were reminded of this subject by the singular discovery made by Mr. Leighton, the chief officer of the Enterprise, which we published in our paper of the 23rd of February, of the remains of a ship, and some 2,000 rupees in money, on the Alguada Reef—the very place where a westerly deviation of her compasses might have placed the unfortunate Lady Nugent, as an easterly one might have led her on the reef-bound shores of the Andaman Islands; and our readers, nautical ones, at all events, will remember that by the account of the starving natives, who were taken off from the Alguada Reef about fifteen months ago by Mr. Hulke, of the Fire Queen, they state, that their vessel, with 300 coolies on board, went to pieces immediately! No doubt the utmost care has been taken by the officers of the Enterprise to have the most diligent search made, and every relic brought off which can give a chance of identifying the wreck, which, from the money, we have no doubt must have been a European one; and one would think the make and numbers on the muskets, if, as we suppose, they are numbered in the Madras army, would give some clue. As to the approach to the reef, it is very true that there are deep water soundings of 30 to 35 fathoms, which would keep a ship at a safe distance from it, and guide her into the mid-channel passage; but there are 24 fathoms at seven miles due west from it, and strong tides setting due east at the springs; so that with any error in the chronometers, which, by the way, might also have arisen from the same cause as that of the compasses, and unless with an attention to the lead which we could only look for now-a-days in a man-of-war, the casts would scarcely be taken frequently enough, if at all, to warn a ship of danger in thick weather, when she was moreover beguiled by the error of her treacherous compasses.—Englishman, March 10.

PATRIA CARA, CARIOR LIBERTAS.

A correspondent, whose letter on another page will well repay perusal, informs us that Col. Wheler, commanding the 34th N.I., is to be removed from his command. He is accused, it appears, of preaching in the bazaars, of exerting himself personally for the spiritual welfare of those with whom he is brought in contact. His sentence will, we fear, be approved by more than half our readers. Even zeal, it will be argued, cannot excuse the utter want of discretion manifested by a commanding officer preaching in the presence of sepoys. Admitting even the doctrine that every man is bound to preach the truth, he is not bound to risk the conversion of millions for the sake of the conversion of a few. The success of Christian teaching throughout India, the progress and even the safety of the mission-work, depends upon retaining the British sovereignty unimpaired. That sovereignty is endangered the moment the sepoys are alienated, and there is no practice so certain to alienate them from our rule. If Colonel Wheler wishes to teach, it will be said, let him teach, but not his own sepoys. There is in such a proceeding an obvious indecorum. The words which from the lips of a missionary are healthy arguments, become from those of a commanding officer, commands. The sepoys, who never understand individual eccentricity, interpret these speeches as official orders, and Christianity is discredited by its association with force. At all events, granting that logically the opponents of such a practice are in the wrong, there is a political necessity in the matter, to which even fanatics must submit.

We recognize the force of all these arguments, and many more which our contemporaries will scarcely fail to urge. We confess to a regret that the zeal of men like Colonel Wheler is not more tempered with discretion, that this should be the time of all others selected for efforts which, right or wrong, are perhaps distasteful to our soldiery. But still the great question remains untouched. Offences against taste, or even against prudence, are not errors; and conduct like that attributed to Col. Wheler is simply the logical consequence of religious liberty. There is no compromise possible in the matter. If it be right to address Hindoos at all for the purpose of conversion, it is right to address the class whose conversion would have the greatest moral weight. If it be the right of every individual to speak freely on religious topics, it is the right also of soldiers, even though they should be in the invidious position of commanding officers. There is not one of the arguments now brought forward which was not equally applicable to the admission of missionaries into India. Then, as now, it was said that the minds of the Hindoos were inveterately attached to caste. Then, as now, it was declared that missionary teaching would alienate the natives from our rule. Then, as now, universal insurrection was predicted from such presumptuous intermeddling with the prejudices of our subjects. And the British people, believing all this, still deliberately put the empire to hazard, sooner than allow the freedom of Christian teaching to be restrained.

We can see no way whatever out of the conclusion to be drawn from such an act. To punish Colonel Wheler for preaching, is simply to punish him for being a Christian, to assert that religious freedom, to whomsoever it may belong, does not belong to British officers. It is to declare that Christianity is to be preached only where the congregations are willing to hear, or in other words, to prohibit the spread of the Gospel altogether. That is not a result which in this nineteenth century Englishmen will be disposed to tolerate.

Some writers, in their terror of Hindoo disobedience, write of a soldier who practises Christianity as if he were some new phenomenon. It is forgotten that Colonel Wheler preached and taught amid the most bigoted population in the world, in the centre of the city of Peshawar. It is not remembered that Colonel Martin in the same district itinerates from village to village, teaches in every serai, and finds from a bigoted race the forbearance he is not to find from men of his own creed. Let us not be told that this differs greatly from preaching to sepoys. "Another promising inquirer," said Colonel Edwardes, in his address in Calcutta, is "Jemadar Dilawur Khan, an Afghan native officer in the corps of Guides, who was formerly a professed robber, living entirely by violence and plunder. He afterwards enlisted in the corps to which he now belongs, and is noted as an able and daring soldier. He had received a tract of Dr. Pfander's from Col. Wheler, and soon became convinced of the falsehood of Mahomedanism. Then he professed himself 'a seeker of truth,' and declared that he would be a Hindoo or a Christian, or anything else, if he could be satisfied of the truth of the creed. Mahomedanism he wholly disbelieves; he well knows the wicked lives of the moolahs, who inculcate crime and receive tithes of the spoil; and he says to them and to others, that as the Koran enjoins them to convert all men by itself or by the sword, and as they cannot convert the English by the Koran, and are afraid to take up the sword against them, they are nothing better, by their own showing, than 'kafirs' or infidels. The jemadar has frequent discussions with the missionaries, obtaining leave from his duty for the purpose, and it is hoped that he is favourably disposed to embrace the truth." Is Government prepared to put a final stop to such movements, to inform men of Col. Edwardes' stamp, that to organize a mission is an act unbecoming an officer and a gentleman? We presume not, yet where is the halting-place to be found?

As to the wisdom of the proceeding, opinions may reasonably differ. For ourselves we believe it will undo half the effect of the really wise counsels which have hitherto prevailed. If a sepoy is to dictate to his commanding officer what he is to believe or say, there is an end of discipline. We shall soon have sepoys prohibiting their officers from attending church, or petitioning against family prayers, as likely to impair the faith of the punkah-pullers. Every man who is discontented, or sulky, or idle, will declare that he is the victim of some converting captain. A grave and decorous life will mark an officer for suspicion, and the only "real soldiers" will be the few of the old school who still swear, drink, and worse. Is that the end for which we control India? We do not believe that in India respect can be earned by a timid denial of our faith. Abd-el-Kader, when he taunted his French prisoners as dogs, for like dogs they lived without a prayer, spoke the genuine feeling of the East. The moment we suppress teaching by force, it becomes dangerous if only because the distrust of the audience appears justified by the law.

It is the vague terror of some movement to follow the preaching which, if anything, agitates the sepoys. What better device to reassure them, than to show them that nothing does follow? When they are certain that the preaching even of a colonel is followed by no order abolishing caste, their distrust must, if only by the experience which teaches a child, be permanently removed. We will not argue the question whether this preaching is or is not the cause of the recent mutinies. Even if that assertion were as clearly proved as it is still doubtful, however much we might regret such occurrences, our views would be unchanged. But we will remark one fact. The Mussulman is, of all fanatics, the one most sensitive to the praise of another creed. It is notorious that even in the 34th the Mussulmans are not irate, stand wholly aloof from the whims and projects of their Hindoo fellow-soldiers.

One word more. While deprecating, as we have always done, any interference with caste prejudices, and approving therefore of the order which condemned the bullock's fat, we have no intention of slipping back to the days of Mr. Adams. If we cannot hold the empire without treating Christianity as a crime, let us stake the empire on that issue, and stand or fall with the faith to which we pretend. Major-General Hearsey, throughout the recent affair, acted with a judgment and gallantry few men and soldiers would have shown. But the menace to the missionaries conveyed in his speech on parade was simply an anachronism. There is no man in India, however successful or however respected, whose commission would be worth three months' purchase, after removing a missionary by military force out of a cantonment.—Friend of India.

THE OUTLAW FUZIL ALI.

The notorious and bloody outlaw, Fuzil Ali, has at last been killed by Lieutenant Longueville Clarke and his party. An extra of the Central Star gives the following account of the affair:—

"News was received last evening by express from Gonda, stating that Lieutenant Longueville Clarke, 3rd regiment Oudh irregular force, had attacked Fuzil Ali, and his band of marauders, killing him and his brother, who was equally as notorious a scoundrel, and as much dreaded as Fuzil Ali himself on the frontier; their heads being brought into Gonda. Lieut. Clarke had one man killed and five or six wounded, and himself slightly wounded also. Too much praise cannot be accorded to Lieut. Clarke for his conduct throughout his pursuit after these marauders. He employed himself incessantly for weeks past in tracking the outlaw through the dense forests and hills along the frontier and, together with his men, has undergone an immense deal of fatigue and privations, at times scarcely with a meal in twenty-four hours, and constantly without tents or any shelter whatever. At length, however, these trying and persevering efforts of the gallant party were crowned with signal success, which we doubt not will elicit praise from the highest quarter. We hope to receive further particulars before our Saturday's issue."

The following further particulars regarding the end of the notorious outlaw Fuzil Ali, are from the columns of our Lucknow contemporary :—

"It appears that Lieut. Clarke's party came upon Fuzil Ali and his gang on the 5th instant, in a tops of trees on the lower range of the Nepal hills, at a place called Deokah, when a short skirmish ensued, which eventuated as above stated, with this difference, however, that Fuzil Ali and two of his brothers, instead of one only, with two of his followers, were killed; the heads of all five having been brought into Gonda. Co.'s Rs. 500 in cash, also some of the late Mr. Boileau's property, were found in the dacoit's retreat. All agree in praising the conduct of Lieut. Clarke; and even we, who are not very prodigal of our encomiums, cannot withhold our warm admiration of it. He was the only officer who managed to obtain correct information as to the outlaw's whereabouts, and had nigh captured him twice before the final result. The news of his success has taken the natives here completely by surprise, as they were under a strong impression that Fuzil Ali would never be caught, with all the opportunities of escape which were before him;—and this certainly might have been the case had he wished to avail himself of them. The wonder is that he did not. It has, however, all turned out for the best; for, irrespective of the 'moral effect' which the freebooter's total extinction is likely to have on the people, the relief which it will afford the officers and troops which have been long engaged in the pursuit, will be great. They will now be able to return to their quarters, and pass the hot weather in peace and quietness, should no other Fuzil Ali turn up in the interim, which we hope not."

"The subjoined further particulars have been placed at our disposal by a friend :—'Just one line to convey the glad news that Fuzil Ali, his brothers, and two of his followers, have been killed by Clarke and his party. Clarke surprised them in a grove of trees; he is slightly wounded, and has had one sepoy killed, and four wounded. Captain Boileau went up one pass, whilst Clarke took another; both ascended the hills on the 5th instant, and Clarke had the luck to fall in with the miscreant, and successfully put an end to his doing any more mischief.' So ends the drama for the present. A third account adds that at the sight of Lieutenant Clarke's party, Fuzil Ali's followers deserted him, leaving him, his two brothers, a nephew of his, and a couple of others, to their fate. The Oudh Irregulars, it will be seen, have no hesitation about using the obnoxious cartridge, as proved to Fuzil Ali's cost."

THE LONDON MAIL, of March 10th, arrived at Calcutta, April 19 (per Hindustan).

AT AGRA there have been two incendiary fires in the sepoy lines.

THE MANCHESTER MEN AND COTTON.—The Englishman mentions that the Manchester manufacturers are planning a cotton league. Their object is to remove the official difficulties which exist in India to the culture of cotton. It is strange that these men will not read the report of their own agent, Mr. Mackay. If they will give an extra penny a pound for cotton, they may have as much as they like. If they will not, they must go without, league or no league.

VIADUCT ACROSS THE SUTLEJ.—The Englishman informs us that some time since Lieut. Greathed submitted to Col. Baker a report regarding the formation of a viaduct across the Sutlej between Ferozepore and Lahore. It will be required for the extension of the railroad from Delhi to Lahore. The Court of Directors have ruled that since the present contract with the railway provides only for the construction of the line from Calcutta to Delhi, any extension of the works requiring a new agreement is at present premature. The Government of India, however, concur with Lieut. Greathed in the opinion that the proposed line across the Sutlej should be at once determined on, and that a report should be sent in by the rainy season of 1857.

THE PORTRAIT OF MR. THOMASON, the late Lieut.-Governor of the N.W. Provinces, painted to the order of the Thomason Testimonial Committee, is on its way to India. The portrait will probably be placed in the Metcalfe Hall, Agra. The Hurkaru says that the subscribers to the portrait can have no idea what sort of a place the Metcalfe Hall is, otherwise the portrait would not be placed there. The building is a ruin, and dismal in the extreme.

MR. J. B. ROBERTS has been vested with the powers of a deputy coroner.

THE BOZDARS.—A letter from Dhera Ghazee Khan reports that the Bozdars have submitted. A fine of Rs. 150 has been levied for each murder committed by the tribe during the last year. All their joks have been burnt down, and their crops destroyed. They are to furnish 400 "dhombas" for the use of the troops, and restore all the cattle which, during the past year, they have carried off from British territory. The Bozdars fought well, and were reduced to great straits before they acceded to terms.

CHOLERA AND SMALL POX have broken out at Mirzapore.

THE MEMBERS OF THE MAHOMEDAN ASSOCIATION have taken umbrage at a circular which has been issued from the office of the Inspector of Gaols, ordering that all prisoners shall have the hair shaved off from chin and face. The committee, in a letter to the Inspector of Gaols, state that "No Mahomedan can contemplate without acute pain the social and the spiritual consequences of throwing off the hair on his chin." The Inspector of Gaols has very properly refused to reply without the sanction of the Government. The circular of the Inspector of Gaols contained no such provision. The beards and whiskers are simply to be trimmed, the mustaches to be retained. If no appeal is preferred, then the head and face of each prisoner is to be shaved.

IN THE BENARES NORMAL SCHOOL there are 430 pupils, 200 of whom are in the Model School, 22 in the Amlah Class, and while 22 in the Special Class, 186 are pupil teachers. The pupil teachers are arranged in three classes. The Tehseel Class has 38 pupils, each receiving Rs. 5 a month. The Halkabundee Class contains 84 pupils, each receiving Rs. 3 a month, and the Omedwar Class consists of 60 candidates, who wish for nominations to vacancies. Out of the 186 pupil teachers, 114 are Hindus. There are only 71 Mahomedans, and but 1 Christian. We suppose the pupils receive the ordinary rudiments of education; but Mr. D. Tresham in his report only mentions plan and map drawing and surveying. Once a week, the assistant-surgeon delivers a lecture upon the symptoms and treatment of various diseases. This school is intended to do for India what Cheltenham and Battersea are doing for England.

RIFLE EXERCISE.—A revised edition of the "platoon exercise and different firings for the ordinary or rifle musket," having, with the approval of the Government of India, been published for the use of the troops, European and native, of the Company's service, to be issued to all regiments concerned from the office of the Adjutant-General of the army, the Commander-in-Chief desires that the alterations and amendments in the exercise therein contained shall be brought into operation at once; and his excellency further desires that no deviation whatever shall be made from the instructions laid down in the book now furnished.

DURING THE CHURUCK, two officers of the disbanded 19th regiment, forced their way through a crowd of natives, collected in one of the streets at Serampore. In so doing, they caused some annoyance to a Baboo, who immediately collared the smaller of them. A fight commenced, in which the Baboo and the crowd appear to have been worsted. The officers, at the conclusion of the affray, obtained two bamboos from some native shop, pursued the Baboo into his garden, and thrashed him. Again a crowd collected, which began to pelt brickbats, and this time the officers had to flee for their lives. As they were running, a woman rushed out, and attempted to seize one of them. She received, in some way unexplained, a wound which caused instantaneous death. The whole affair is most unfortunate, and we sincerely trust that some extenuating circumstance will render unnecessary the terrible punishment which will otherwise fall upon the young men for an act of perhaps merely thoughtless folly.

INEFFICIENCY OF MOFUSSIL COURTS.—The Englishman inserts a letter from Mr. Biddle describing the inefficiency of the Mofussil courts. When Mr. Smith was judge of Rungpore, a man was accused of murder. The circumstantial evidence against him was so strong, that Mr. Smith was compelled to condemn. Mr. Smith, believing the man the victim of a conspiracy, requested that the sentence should be commuted into imprisonment until the supposed murdered man was forthcoming. The Nizamut angrily reprimanded Mr. Smith, and ordered the criminal to be executed. Ten days after execution, the supposed murdered man was arrested, and brought before Mr. Smith. Mr. Smith reported the arrest to the Sulder, and requested to be informed what steps he should take if charged with murder. He received no answer, and was ever after employed as a collector.

THE BANK OF BENGAL RATES are still falling. On the 16th April, it was notified that private bills and notes at or within three months would be discounted at eight per cent. Government acceptances having more than 15 days to run at 6 per cent.; and having less, at five, as before. Interest on loans and cash credits is now at 7 per cent., and on deposit of goods eight.

MR. LODGE is to succeed Mr. H. Pratt as inspector of schools.

FIGHT WITH A TIGER.—The Delhi Gazette contains the following story:—The day after the Sirmoor battalion arrived at Dhoon, a Goorkha, armed with a flint and steel musket, went out to shoot tigers. A tiger soon rose close to the man, who immediately fired. The tiger acknowledged the shot with a growl, proving that he was hit, and made off as fast as he could. The Goorkha pursued. The tiger turned round, and charged. Again the musket was fired; but this time it flashed in the pan. The tiger came upon the sepoy with open mouth, when the Goorkha thrust the barrel of the musket down the animal's throat. The tiger backed, and the Goorkha followed him up; but at last the tiger got off with the musket in his mouth. Another Goorkha, at this instant arriving, fired, and wounded the tiger in the leg. A second bullet, through the head, despatched the brute. It is only Goorkhas and Englishmen who attack tigers on foot.

GOVERNMENT has ordered a school to be established at Hooghly for the instruction of the children of dacoit approvers.

LUCKNOW.—A correspondent at Lucknow writes as follows:—“You will have seen in the Central Star that some person or persons unknown burnt down Dr. Wells' bungalow. I believe that he was so imprudent as to taste some medicine by putting the phial to his mouth. This immediately set the Hindoos to work, who refused to take any medicine lest they should lose caste. They complained to their Colonel (Palmer, of the 48th), who sent for the pundit of the regiment, and for the Hindoo Native officers, and in their presence broke the phial. They seemed quite satisfied, and even delighted at the Colonel's explanation and conduct, and all went merry as a marriage bell, when lo! that very evening, shortly after ten, Dr. Wells' bungalow was set on fire, and destroyed. Nothing is known as to who did the deed, or how it happened; but the owner of the bungalow believes it to be the work of the sepoys.”—Hurkara, April 14.

MUTINY.—A correspondent of the Phoenix writes from Dacca, that the disbanding of the 19th Regiment N. I. at Barrackpore, has created a great sensation among the native sepoys in Dacca. No more boasting words are heard; they have been completely cowed down. The 34th N. I. appears to have been the very focus of discontent and insubordination. The 44th N. I. at Dinapore is reported to be untrustworthy.

Mr. James Graves has been appointed to officiate as Principal of the Kishnagur College in succession to Mr. Lodge, who is now acting for Mr. H. Pratt as Inspector of Schools.

THE CALCUTTA AUCTION COMPANY.—The whole of the 7,500 shares reserved for India in the Calcutta Auction Company having been subscribed for, the directors have resolved to retain for local distribution part of the 2,500 intended for England.

A THREAT.—The following is from our own correspondent at Benares:—“We have just heard that it is currently reported amongst the native community here, that the sepoys (for some imaginary grievance, we suppose,) threaten to rise en masse and slay every European inhabitant of this station. We do not exactly give credence to the rumour, but supposing for a moment such a threat was really put into execution, what should we do? There are no European soldiery here. Why do not the authorities, to prevent such an occurrence taking place, quarter at least three companies of European artillery. Surely such a number could be spared? It is not exactly our intention to become alarmists; but, seriously speaking, the sepoys are of late beginning to show evident signs of dissatisfaction. Increase of pay and new cartridges are merely pretences to show cause for mutiny. There must be some other cause, which had better be left for the powers that be to institute inquiries upon. The natives also in these parts complain bitterly of some new taxes of late; surely that is worthy of being inquired into. They entertain also a singular idea that the Governor-General has been ordered (only recently) by Government to Christianize all India nolens volens. Three steamers are aground between this and Ghazepore, viz., the Sir Frederick Currie and Mirzapore on their upward trip, and the James Hume on her downward trip; all, it is stated, in the same vicinity. The Mirzapore is at present seven days after her usual time.”—Bengal Hurkaru, April 17.

LIEUT. BORRODAILE.—We regret to notice, from General Orders by his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief in India, that the name of Lieutenant Borrodaile, of the 52nd N.I., has been ordered to be struck off the strength of the army, under conviction of drunkenness when on parade for adjutant's drill. The Court would appear to have recommended Lieut. Borrodaile to mercy, although this unfortunate officer had been only five years in the service, and had, on a previous occasion, been pardoned for a similar offence. The Commander-in-Chief, however, wisely, we think, declined to accede to the recommendation of the Court, and the otherwise promising career of this young officer has been cut short by an act of folly which it may take years of repentance to eradicate or repair.

DEATH OF CAPT. WILDIG.—The Delhi Gazette, of the 8th April, announces the death of Capt. W. P. Wildig, Brigade Major, Oudh field force. He died on the evening of the 7th, at the house of Colonel Sherwill, in cantonments. The deceased had long been ailing, and was on the point of proceeding on furlough to Europe. He was a most excellent officer, and his loss will be much regretted by all who knew him. It was only the other day that he was bereaved of his wife, a misfortune which seems not a little to have hastened his own end.

THE KING OF DELHI.—It has been decided by the Governor-General in Council, that the eldest son of Bahadour Shah shall succeed his father.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

NEW ABSENTEE RULES.

Fort William, Financial Department, March 16, 1857.—The following extract, para. 1, from a despatch from the Court of Directors, addressed to the Government of India in the financial department, No. 6, of 1857, dated the 14th January, is published for general information:—

Para. 1. The question here put as whether the reckoning for privilege leave under Section XII. of the new rules is to be considered as interrupted by the grant of special leave on private affairs for six months under Section XIV., and to be therefore subject to renewal from the date of the civil servant's return from the latter leave. We have no hesitation in answering this question affirmatively; any other construction of the rules would be at variance with our decision in the case of Mr. F. A. Lushington, and with the instructions which we have on several recent occasions communicated to you, to which we feel it necessary to adhere.*

By order of the Right Hon. the Governor-General in Council,
C. HUGH LUSHINGTON,
Secretary to the Gov. of India.

FORAGE CAPS.

Head Quarters, Simla, April 8, 1857.—With the sanction of Government, the Commander-in-chief is pleased to direct that a forage-cap of the description now authorized for non-commissioned officers of the Artillery battalion staff, shall be worn by the non-commissioned officers employed in the Ordnance Commissariat, Army Commissariat, and Public Works' Departments, in substitution of the round hat ordered for them in the present dress regulations.

STAFF APPOINTMENTS OF OFFICERS IN H.M.'S SERVICE.

Fort William, April 9, 1857.—The Right Hon. the Governor-General of India in Council is pleased to direct that the following military letter, from the Hon. the Court of Directors to the address of the Government of India, be published in general orders:—†

Military Department.—Our Governor-General of India in Council; reply to military letter, dated 17th July, 1856.

1. In consequence of the want of an adequate number of officers of the Company's army available and qualified for staff and detached employments, we consented, in the year 1853, to relax the rule under which the employment of her Majesty's officers serving in India was limited, in time of peace, to (General commands, divisional commands, brigade commands, staff of her Majesty's forces in India, and regimental duties.

2. The several Governments were then permitted, whenever the necessity should arise, to employ duly qualified officers of her Majesty's regiments as Surveyors, revenue surveyors, and in the department of public works.

3. It was proposed by the late Commander-in-Chief in India that the rule should be still further relaxed by admitting qualified officers of her Majesty's regiments to the departments of the quartermaster-general, judge advocate-general, assistant adjutant-general of divisions, brigade majors of stations, and to appointments in the irregular cavalry and infantry; and the field-marshal lately commanding in chief transmitted the proposal to us, and recommended it to favourable consideration.

4. We have now been furnished with the sentiments of the Governor-General and the other members of the Government of India on this important question.

5. The Governor-General has remarked as follows:—

“It is, I think, sufficient to say that which I believe can be said with truth, that the opening of staff employment, under certain restrictions, to officers of the Queen's army will place at

* Letter from the Governor of India, dated 17th July, 1856, No. 110.—Submit for the Court's Orders a question raised by the officiating civil auditor, N. W. Provinces, with reference to Sections XII. and XIV. of the new civil absentee rules.

† Forward for Court's consideration and orders correspondence on the subject of allowing to officers of H.M.'s service an increased participation in staff and other military appointments in India.

the service of the Government of India in posts of responsibility, not always easily filled, men of capacity and energy, whose usefulness beyond the ranks of their regiments are at present lost to the Government. That it will act as a stimulus to honourable and wholesome rivalry between the two armies to the great benefit of each; that it will partially relieve the Indian army of the inordinate drain upon its officers, which, under the requirements of the staff, joined with other growing necessities, has become a serious impediment to its regimental efficiency, and that the general result will be to improve and enlarge the machinery of Indian government.

6. In pursuance of those views, his Lordship recommends the admission of her Majesty's officers to the offices and departments already specified in certain fixed proportions, and also to corps of irregular cavalry and infantry, in the proportion of one per regiment, provided they can be so employed without liability to sudden removal.

7. These appointments, being intimately connected with native troops, have hitherto, as a general rule, been strictly limited to officers of the Company's army, not for the personal advantage of those officers (although their just claims are entitled to the highest consideration), but on account of the obvious necessity of securing the services of officers well acquainted with the languages, customs, and feelings of the native troops, and therefore especially qualified for these particular duties. The maintenance of this general rule we consider to be absolutely necessary, although the exigencies of the public service and the peculiar qualifications of individuals may justify occasional and temporary deviations from it.

8. We do not think it desirable to sanction the employment of fixed proportions of her Majesty's officers in the department and corps above mentioned; but we are prepared, under the emergencies of the service, to accede to the recommendation so far as to extend the authority given as above mentioned in the year 1853 to the employment, when the necessity shall arise, of officers of her Majesty's army serving with their regiments in India in the following offices on the staff, viz.:—

Assistant and deputy assistant adjutants-general of division; brigade majors; assistant and deputy assistant quartermaster-generals of divisions; and deputy judge advocates.

9. It will be indispensably necessary that the officers of her Majesty's regiments to be selected for these appointments, when the necessity may arise, shall be possessed of all the qualifications in respect of the knowledge of native languages which are required in officers of the Company's forces, as reported by committees, and that they shall be familiar with the habits and feelings of the native troops, also that no such appointment be made without the previous approbation and authority of the Governor-General in Council, or of the local Governments of Madras and Bombay.

10. The officers of her Majesty's regiments serving in India have such limited opportunities of acquiring the peculiar knowledge requisite to qualify for service with corps of irregular cavalry and infantry, to which usually only three European officers are attached, that their admission to that service could only be justified in special cases, when any of her Majesty's officers, after a lengthened service in India, had evinced remarkable aptitude for those duties. In such cases we authorise their being so employed, subject to our confirmation, the special grounds in each case being immediately reported to us. In fact, when an officer of her Majesty's service exhibited these exceptional qualifications at a former period, your Government did not fail, notwithstanding the existence of the general rule, to avail itself of his services in an irregular corps, as manifested in the instance of Lieut.-Colonel Fisher, formerly of her Majesty's 3rd dragoons. Fitness equally signal can alone justify the employment of other than our own officers in times to come.

11. By the rules of the Company's service the term of qualification for staff employment is three years' regimental duty. We consider that the same term of service, and in India, should be required to render her Majesty's officers eligible for staff employment in the Company's service.

12. Officers so appointed to the staff are not to hold office for a period exceeding five years, unless re-appointed; and they will cease to hold staff appointments if placed upon half or unattached pay, or if their regiments are removed from the establishment in India, or if, on promotion, officers of the Company's service, similarly circumstanced, would be required to vacate the appointments. As a matter of course, no officer is to be appointed to the general staff of a presidency other than that to which his regiment is attached.

13. It is understood that the establishment of the Queen's regiments in India will not be augmented in consequence of this arrangement.

(Signed) W. H. SYKES, and nine other Directors.

London: 24th December, 1856.

SPECIAL LEAVE.

Fort William, Financial Department, April 17, 1857—Notification—Read the following papers relative to the grant of special leave to civil servants for the period intervening between departure from station to the commencement of reckoning authorized absence on sick leave, or between the end of reckoning absence on sick leave and re-arrival at station:—

Clause 4 section VI. of the covenanted civil service absentee rules, dated 8th June, 1855.

Financial Notification No. 25, dated 27th June, 1856.

Section V. of the uncovenanted civil service absentee rules, dated 22nd February, 1856.

Financial Notification No. 36, dated 11th July, 1856.

Letter from the officiating secretary to the Government N.W. Provinces, No. 804, dated 11th March, 1857.

Resolution—Clause 4 of section VI. of the new covenanted civil service absentee rules allows for the interval elapsing between departure from station to the commencement of reckoning absence, or between the end of reckoning absence and re-arrival at station of the grant of a special leave, for an additional period of one month, two months, or three months, according to the distance to be travelled, on half salary not exceeding 10,000 rupees per annum.

It was found, however, that in cases of sick leave taken in India, the above proposition was open to abuse, and it was accordingly notified on the 27th of June, 1856, that the special leave in question should, from that date, be calculated at the rate of one day for every ten miles of the distance to be travelled, provided that the limit of three months was not exceeded, and that the whole time claimed was spent bona fide between the place of departure and the place of destination.

A like provision was made on the 11th July, 1856, for uncovenanted civil servants proceeding to Europe on sick leave, with these alterations, viz., that the time allowed to them should be calculated at the rate of one day for every fifteen miles of the distance travelled, instead of one day for every ten miles, as stated above; and that the limit of two months should not be exceeded, instead of three months, as in the case of covenanted servants.

In reference to these rules, it has been usual for officers, to whom leave on medical certificate has been granted, to submit separate applications for the special leave referred to.

The Hon. the Lieutenant-Governor N. W. Provinces, however, considers that these separate applications are unnecessary, and suggests that the civil auditors be permitted to pass the allowances of officers proceeding on an authorized leave to the hills or to sea for the period which may be occupied in travelling to and from the place of leave or port of embarkation, when satisfied that the conditions upon which such leave is permitted by the existing orders of the Supreme Government have been duly fulfilled.

The Right Hon. the Governor-General in Council sees no objection to the course suggested by his honour in cases of sick leave granted to covenanted servants, and in cases of sick leave to Europe granted to uncovenanted servants. In cases of furlough on private affairs, separate applications for leave for the purpose of travelling must still be submitted.

ORDER.—Ordered, that a copy of the foregoing resolution be forwarded to the departments,* the governments,† and the officer‡ specified in the margin, for information and guidance.

Ordered also, that the resolution be published in the Calcutta official Gazette for general information.

C. HUGH LUSHINGTON,
Secretary to the Government of India.

ADDITIONS TO THE STAFF.

Fort William, April 17, 1857.—Under authority of the Hon. Court of Directors, the Right Hon. the Governor-General of India in Council is pleased to add the following officers on the staff to the list published in general order by the Governor-General, of the 21st Sept., 1855, in which service as lieut.-col. shall be held equivalent to actual regimental command as lieut.-col. in qualifying officers to be promoted to the rank of col.

FREIGHTS.

Quotations to London and Liverpool, 3l. to 3l. 17s.

EXPORTS (Calcutta, April 21).—Operations have been on a smaller scale, consequent on the scanty supply and ruling high prices of most staples, and high rates of freights. Very little has been done in Indigo, the quantity remaining unsold in the market being very small and consisting of low and mixed up country, and held at high prices. In Sugar, Saltpetre, and Rice there has been less business for the home markets. Raw Silk of March bund is coming down freely; but the market within the last few days has not been so active as it was last reported, and prices have somewhat receded. Linseed is in moderate request for Great Britain, but continues to move off for America. Rape is being taken only for Great Britain. There is no particular change in the position of all other produce.

IMPORTS (Calcutta, April 21).—No decided reaction has as yet taken place. Mule Twist has attracted some attention at slightly advanced rates; the demand has been for Nos. 30, 40, and 50, for immediate wants. The accounts from the Upper Provinces report stocks very heavy and prices receding. There has been no animation for Manchester fabrics; grey goods of heavy makes, have become very dull, and barely maintain former prices. Almost all descriptions of metals have remained firm at previous quotations. Chintzes and Prints.—The market as reported in our last, continues inactive in the absence of demand. A few fancy style cambric chintz continue to be taken for local requirement at former prices. Sales reported are cambric chintz, at Rs. 4 to 4'12; striped chintz at Rs. 1-12 per piece; and Turkey red chintz at 4 annas 6 pie per yard. Coloured Cottons.—Turkey Red Goods are saleable to a limited extent, at about former prices. The reported sales are, Turkey Red Twills at 4-4½ to 6-4 annas per yard; Turkey Red Cambrics at 4-3½ to 6 annas per yard; Turkey Red Jaconets at Rs. 5-6 per piece; Turkey Red Mulls at Rs. 4-10 to 5-4 per piece; Colored Lappets at Rs. 2-1 per piece. Shirtings.—Grey, 39 to 40 inches 6 to 7 lb. low to middling qualities, continue to sell freely at a slight advance in price. Heavier makes are dull of sale, and barely maintain former prices; 45 inches middling qualities and light makes fully maintain former prices; heavier goods are not inquired for; 51 inches scarcely saleable. White low to middling qualities are dull of sale, and have fallen in price; finer descriptions are wanted at former prices; figured are neglected. Madapolams.—Grey middling qualities continue to sell at former prices—heavy makes are dull of sale, and scarcely obtain previous rates. White are neglected. The reported sales are Grey at Rs. 2 to 3-4 per piece. Cambrics.—Grey, 21 yards by 50 and 60 inches, are saleable to a moderate extent at Rs. 3-6 to 3-8. White are dull of sale. Jaconets.—Grey; owing to some forced sales lately, the market has become a little easier, and purchasers are rather cautious in buying at present—sales have been rather moderate at Rs. 1-6 to 2-7 per piece. White have been sold to a fair extent; upwards of 50,000 pcs. have found buyers since last week, at prices ranging Rs. 1-9 to 4-4 per piece. Book Muslins.—A limited business doing for local requirement only at Rs. 3-0-6 to 5-2-6 per piece. Swiss Muslins are also selling to a very limited extent at Rs. 5-4 to 5-6 per piece. Lappets continue selling to a moderate extent, at Rs. 1-6 to 2-9 per piece; Dacca Pattern Lappets, at Rs. 7-4 per piece. Mull Mulls are in limited inquiry. A few sales have taken place, at Rs. 1-3 to 1-15 per piece. Japan Spots continue in limited request. A few sales have taken place at Rs. 1-14 to 2-8-6 per piece.

MADRAS.

THE CHIEF JUSTICE AND CHIEF MAGISTRATE OF MADRAS.

It was not our intention to have noticed the occurrence in the Supreme Court on the first day of sessions, because it is not our wish to press hard upon any fallen man. But the circumstance has been so much talked of in society, that we find it impossible to pass it over altogether in silence. Colonel Colbeck contrives to keep himself pretty constantly before the public, and we cannot altogether congratulate him upon the part he plays. It is ever through some grave indiscretion that we are kept informed from time to time of his existence; all the more pointedly from our reminiscence of the consummate tact of his predecessor. Colonel Colbeck has lately been raised in dignity, has had an increase of pay, a magnificent house to live in, and the labours of his post lightened by the charge of two divisions being handed over to other magistrates. High emoluments are only justified by high qualifications, and we place discretion among the highest essentials of a chief magistrate. The occurrence of such a functionary being bodily turned out of a Supreme Court we will undertake to say never occurred before in India; what effect it may produce in lessening the respect due to the magistracy, it is too early to judge; but we are bound to say that the least perception of his own position and of the relative positions of himself and the Chief Justice, would have prevented what we cannot but regard on many accounts as a most unfortunate collision. The facts were these. A gross case of murder had been sent into the Clerk of the Crown's office on the very morning of the sessions. It was committed by the coroner, and naturally most defectively got up. There was, in fact, scarcely a piece of evidence to warrant a conviction, except a statement that he was guilty, said to have been made by the prisoner to a policeman, immediately on apprehension. Yet, as the poor woman had lived for several days after the assault, it seemed strange that there was not even a dying declaration. The Chief Justice, in his charge to the grand jury, made some general observations on the propriety of the magistrates always taking up charges of murder, independently of the coroner, the latter of whom, he observed, had not the same means of investigating crime, as the former. No personal allusion was made to any one. Colonel Colbeck, shortly after the grand jury had retired, came into court, and asked if he might be permitted to offer some explanation. The Chief Justice informed him that he did not desire to hear any. But we had perhaps better throw this into the form of a dialogue.

Col. Colbeck.—I wish, my lord, to offer some explanation.

Chief Justice.—I have already told you that I do not desire any. My observations were public, and the public time must not be occupied thus.

Col. Colbeck.—I also wish my explanation to be public.

Chief Justice.—You ought to know that it is highly improper to attempt to reply upon a judge, who has just delivered his charge. My observations were general; however, if the cap fits, I trust you will learn a lesson from what has occurred. Retire, sir.

Col. Colbeck.—(After a pause) It does not fit.

Chief Justice.—I have ordered you to retire, sir. (A pause, during which Col. Colbeck showed no symptom of moving.)

Chief Justice.—Officer, remove that gentleman from the body of the court. (Two officers hereupon went up to Col. Colbeck; the court-keeper, we believe, placed a hand upon his shoulder.)

Col. Colbeck.—Am I in custody?

Chief Justice.—I have already said you are to be removed from the body of the court (and this was immediately done by the officers, who ushered Colonel Colbeck into the lobby, and returned to their duties).

We think that the feeling of the public will be with the Chief Justice. We do not see that any explanation was necessary; no imputation had been cast upon any individual whatsoever, but some very proper observations made upon the general duties of the magistracy. Colonel Colbeck could have explained anything he wished in a five minutes' interview with the judge upon his retiring to his chambers; it was most injudicious to take the course he did, and, we will add, highly indecent to enter into any personal altercation with the Chief Justice, and not at once to take the many broad hints, if not positive orders, to retire. Colonel Colbeck's position is no doubt humiliating; Lord Harris may well be disgusted, if not embarrassed, at the false position in which the man whom he hath so lately delighted to honour has placed himself. For our own part, it would be affectation in us to express any surprise. You cannot make a silk purse out of a sow's ear. —Athenæum, April 19.

THE LONDON MAIL, of March 26th, arrived at Madras, April 22nd, en route to Calcutta (per Alma).

TRAVANCORE.—The Madras Athenæum says that the Government of Madras threatens the Rajah of Travancore with the loss of his dominions, on account of misgovernment, yet counsels him to rely upon the very persons by whom that misgovernment is occasioned. The late Rajah many years ago remonstrated against a certain person being forced upon him as a minister. He was unsuccessful, and died either of poison administered by himself or of a broken heart.

THE FAMILY AND DEPENDENTS OF THE LATE NAWAB OF THE CARNATIC will receive a monthly stipend of Rs. 48,212, of which 35,097-5-4 will be paid to the immediate family, and 13,114-10-8 to the dependents.

COL. PATTON.—A Board of Medical Officers have been ordered to assemble at the Royal Hotel this morning, for the purpose of examining and reporting upon the state of health of Lieut.-Col. W. D. P. Patton, of H.M.'s 74th Highlanders.—Spectator, April 20.

DEATH OF CAPT. HUGHES.—Tidings were received yesterday at the Presidency by electric telegraph, of the death from cholera, at Vellore, on Saturday, of Capt. H. Hughes of the 18th Native Infantry. This casualty will promote Lieut. A. Stevens of the season of 1840 to the rank of captain, and Ensign J. K. Clibbey of the season of 1854 to the rank of lieutenant.—Ibid.

MAJOR DAVIDSON, the newly appointed Resident, arrived at Hyderabad on the morning of the 16th of April, and took charge of his duties on the same day. The Nizam was to hold a public Durbar in a day or two, for the reception of the resident.

COURT MARTIAL ON LIEUTENANT J. W. F. TAYLOR.—From the Madras General Orders we observe that Lieut. (Brevet Captain) J. W. F. Taylor of the Artillery has been found guilty by a court martial assembled at Kamptee, of having made a false statement, and sentenced to three months' suspension from rank and pay. The Commander-in-Chief has confirmed, but does not approve the sentence, as it is not calculated to establish a just appreciation of an offence of this quality, nor to satisfy the requirements of discipline.

SUFFERINGS OF H.M.'S 43RD FROM CHOLERA.—The Madras Spectator details the sufferings and losses of H.M.'s 43rd from cholera. A wing of the regiment 550 strong started from Bangalore en route for the presidency. At the first encamping-ground after leaving the village of Venkatagerry, at the foot of the Ghaut, the cholera appeared. In seven days sixty-six men were attacked, and so far as we can learn from our contemporary, who gives a most confused account, thirty-five men, two women, and ten children have since died. Since the arrival of the men at Madras, health has been partially restored to the regiment. It is impossible to state what has been the mortality amongst the camp-followers. Dr. Innes, Dr. Bean, Dr. C. D. Madden, and the Rev. Mr. Murphy, a Catholic priest, with one other European, whose name has not reached us, have been indefatigable in their attentions to the sick. The cholera has likewise attacked the 39th native infantry, en route from the French Rocks to the Madras presidency, and a detachment of artillery proceeding from Mercara to Bangalore.

EASTERN COAST CANAL.—We quote thus prominently the following notification, which appeared in the last Fort St. George Gazette. It will be interesting to the general public:—"It is hereby notified for general information that the Eastern Coast Canal has now been so far completed from the river Adyaur to the post town or station of Sadras, a distance of 35 miles on the coast road to Pondicherry and Cuddalore, that it is open for the use of the public. The new Canal passes near Vanien's Choultry, Covelong, and the Seven Pagodas, and will be open throughout the year to boats drawing 1'5" of water.—C. A. Faber, Colonel, Chief Engineer General office of P. W., Fort St. George, 18th of March, 1857."

ABOLITION OF THE MILITARY BOARD.

Fort St. George, April 7, 1857.—Pursuant to instructions from the Hon. the Court of Directors and the Government of India, the Military Board will cease to exist from the 30th of the present month, and the appointment of Inspector-General of Ordnance and Magazines will take effect on the 1st May.

2. From and after the latter date, the following arrangements for the performance of the duties hitherto conducted by the Military Board are directed.

3. The superintendence and direct control of the Ordnance Department of this Presidency are vested in the Inspector-General of Ordnance and Magazines, on whom devolve all duties connected with the Ordnance Department hitherto performed by the Military Board, except those below mentioned.

4. The Inspector-General has individual and direct authority over every part of the Ordnance Department and Ordnance establishments, bearing direct and individual responsibility to Government for the right management of the department, and is to correspond direct with Government.

5. The salary of the Inspector-General is the same as that of the present stipendiary member of the Military Board.

6. The duties of audit connected with the ordnance accounts, heretofore confided to the Military Board, are transferred to the Military Auditor-General, under whose superintendence the additional duties caused by the transfer will be conducted by the Ordnance Assistant Military Auditor-General (an artillery officer of not less than ten years' standing), who will receive the same staff salary as the First Assistant Military Auditor-General. Such addition as may be found necessary for the due performance of the additional duties will also be made to the office establishment of the Military Auditor-General.

7. The forage accounts of the cavalry, hitherto under the Military Board, will be made over to the Commissary-General, on or before the 1st May next, as may be arranged between the Military Board and Commissary-General.

8. Further orders will hereafter be issued respecting the Barrack Department, barrack supplies, stationery, saddlery and harness, office furniture, and other miscellaneous duties, which, in the mean time, will be under the control of the Inspector-General, as at present under the Military Board.

9. As soon as the Inspector-General has taken charge, he will communicate with the Accountant-General and Military Auditor-General, and these three officers will collectively submit to Government such a revised system of accounts of the Ordnance Department as may be necessary in consequence of the separation of the duties of audit.

10. The Inspector-General, after taking charge, will report on the arrangements which may be required for his office.

MOVEMENTS OF TROOPS.

Fort St. George, April 17, 1857.—The following arrangements are ordered consequent on the return to Madras of the 1st Fusiliers.

11. M.'s 43rd regiment to be stationed at Fort St. George.

1st Madras Fusiliers to be stationed at Bangalore.

Fort St. George, April 24, 1857.—The 49th Regiment Native Infantry is to be removed to Bellary instead of to Kurnool as notified in G. O. G. 10th March, 1857, No. 63.

OFFICERS TO WEAR UNIFORM.

Head-quarters, Choultry Plain, April 21, 1857.—No. 12.—Officers of the army are peremptorily prohibited from wearing plain clothes when employed on duty of any description. On all such occasions the uniform prescribed by the regulations is invariably to be worn.

The Commander-in-Chief finds it necessary to notify, in order to obviate misapprehension and insure uniformity of practice, that "dress" uniform should invariably be worn at the funerals of officers.

BOMBAY.

MEETING OF THE SHAREHOLDERS OF THE LONDON AND EASTERN BANKING CORPORATION.

The Bombay shareholders of the London and Eastern Banking Corporation held a meeting at the Bank premises yesterday afternoon, March 31, Dhunjeebhoy Cursetjee, Esq., in the chair. Amongst those present were the following gentlemen:—Cawasjee Jehangier Jussawalla; Dhunjeebhoy Cursetjee, Shroff; Purmanund Meghjee, Vied; Purshotumdass Pranjeevandass; Shoojawoodin Tyabjee; Sorabjee Nusserwanjee, Dundass; Tricumdass Megjee; Dorabjee Coverjee, Majoo; &c. &c. A statement of the assets and liability of the branch, and a list of the Bombay shareholders, having been laid before the meeting, the chairman explained at some length the nature of the arrangements entered into by the Directors in London with the Oriental Bank Corporation, and urged the shareholders present to give their co-operation to an arrangement so advantageous to themselves, and he showed the unhappy consequences that might ensue if they refused to do so.

It was proposed by Cawasjee Jehangier Jussawalla, Esq., and seconded by Shoojawoodin Tyabjee, Esq., "That the shareholders in Bombay now present approve of the arrangement entered into by the Directors and a body of the London shareholders with the Oriental Bank Corporation, and agree to sign promissory notes, payable to the Oriental Bank Corporation, for the 50*l*. per share not yet called up, in respect of the shares held by them in the London and Eastern Banking Corporation."

The resolution was carried unanimously.

It appeared, from the accounts submitted to the meeting, that the assets of the branch were amply sufficient to meet all its engagements, and it was stated that every liability would be met in due course.

Resolutions expressive of confidence in the Bombay management, and condemnatory of the management in London, were then passed; and the shareholders having each signed promissory notes to the Oriental Bank, in conformity with the first resolution, the meeting separated.

The following is a list of the shareholders on the Bombay register, with the number of shares held by each:—

Cawasjee Jehangier Jussawalla	5
Dhunjeebhoy Cursetjee, Shroff	5

THE LONDON MAIL, of March 26th, arrived at Bombay, April 20th (per Ganges). The Mail of April 26th had left Suez for Bombay (per Bombay steamer).

THE LATE CAPTAIN ETHERSEY.—We are informed on unexceptionable authority that Government is quite guiltless of the charge of garbling the proceedings of the inquest held on the late Captain Ethersey at Bushire. The whole of the proceedings received from the Gulf were placed at our disposal; and we are assured that equal surprise is felt by the Government as by the public, that no mention whatever is made in those proceedings of the contents of those despatches and that memorial, the oversight of which, intentional or accidental, has given rise, necessarily, to suspicions of the most unpleasant nature. We are not informed whether any remonstrance has been addressed to the president of the Court on the subject, but can hardly doubt that such either has been, or will be. It is plainly a matter of necessity that these documents should be produced, and we think no man can have so strong an interest in their publication as Sir Henry Leake himself. The despatch which was said to contain a reprimand from the Government to the unhappy Ethersey was conceived, as we are told, in terms of extreme mildness, and can hardly be believed to have had much influence upon his state of mind. Let the public however be the judges.

LAUNCH OF THE "LADY CANNING."—The H. C. new steamer Lady Canning of 527·79·94 tons and 160 horse-power, built on one of the slips of the dockyard, was launched on Saturday at 11 A.M., on which occasion the dockyard gates were thrown open to the public, and two salutes were fired—one from the saluting battery and another from the Achbar. There were present Sir H. Leake, Miss Leake, Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence; Major-General Waddington, Drs. Haines and Coles, Messrs. Standen, Compton, Ritchie, Atkinson, and Pryce; Captains Jenkins, Young, Powell; Lieutenant Hallard, and Messrs. Ardasir Cursetjee, Cursetjee Rustonjee, Jehangir Nowrojee, Heerjeebhoy Jehangir, Nasarwanjee Ardasir, Rustonjee Ardasir, and several officers of the dockyard. The ceremony of christening was gracefully performed by Miss Leake. As the Lady Canning was loosened from the slip, she glided smoothly into the water, but stopped after having proceeded right beyond the wall. After a few minutes, the impediment, whatever it was, was removed, and she was enabled to continue her course, as if nothing amiss had occurred. The customary appendages of such ceremonies, rose water and nosegays, were distributed among the spectators, who dispersed about half-past eleven o'clock.—Bombay Times.

NETHERLANDS CONSUL AT BOMBAY.—Under the authority of the Honourable the Court of Directors, the Government of Bombay have been pleased to recognize Mr. John George Volkart, of the firm of Messrs. Volkart Brothers, as consul at Bombay for the Netherlands Government.

DIVORCE.—At a sitting of the Supreme Court, Mr. Lowndes, instructed by Mr. Acland, moved, in the matter of the divorce between Mr. Robert Keays and Maria Eliza his wife, that the warrant of the Lord Chancellor of England, directing the judges of the Supreme Court to take evidence in this matter, may be filed; that a special court be held on Monday, the 11th of May next, and following days, to take such evidence; and that a notice of the day of hearing be published in the Government Gazette and the three English daily newspapers. The motion was granted by Sir M. Sausse, the presiding judge.

ITALIAN ROBBERS IN THE DESERT.—A correspondent of the Bombay Telegraph and Courier, writing from Egypt, states that the Egyptian police have captured a gang of Italian robbers. For some time past they have been plotting an attack upon the English passengers crossing the desert. Thirty are in custody, and will probably be deported. They call themselves the "sons of Italian liberty," illustrating the old proverb that patriotism is the last refuge of a scoundrel.

MR. ARTHUR JAMES LEWIS, appointed advocate-general of Bombay, was sworn, on the 23rd ult., a barrister of the Supreme Court of Bombay, before Sir Matthew Sausse. The gentlemen of the bar congratulated their fellow-associate after his admittance.

STATISTICS OF THE GENERAL HOSPITAL.—The Bombay Gazette publishes certain statistics of the General Hospital in that presidency, for the ten years from 1846 to 1856. During that time there were 12,925 cases under treatment. The number of deaths was 702, or 5·695 per cent. The number of cases admitted for delirium tremens and ebrietas, was 1,146: more than ten per cent. of the patients for these diseases were women.

ACCIDENT TO THE SHIP "THOMAS CAMPBELL."—This vessel left Kurrachee on the 3rd April, laden with grass, &c., for Bushire. Owing to a strong current and high winds she was, after beating about for several hours, carried to the southward, and eventually grounded near the Hujamree mouth of the Indus.

LIEUT. J. CARNEGIE, of the 5th regt. N.L.I., is permitted to resign the Hon. Company's service.

ECCLESIASTICAL FEES.—The chief secretary to the Government of Bombay has forwarded to the Government of India a revised scale of fees for the performance of sacred offices, prepared by the Lord Bishop of Bombay, and has asked the opinion of that Government on the subject, with a view to the preparation of a general scheme of fees applicable to all India.

LIEUT.-COL. WELLS.—We, Telegraph and Courier, have been informed that Lieut.-Col. Wells, superintendent of police at Poona, has tendered his resignation of his appointment to Government, and will shortly proceed to England on furlough. The reason assigned for this rather unexpected step is a difference of opinion on official matters with Mr. Bettington, the police commissioner. The Poona public will regret losing Colonel Wells, as he is a very excellent man, and most meritorious officer.

CHINA.

LEGALIZATION OF THE OPIUM TRADE AT SHANGHAI.

The Overland Friend of China makes the following most important announcement:—

"Our readers will remember that, on various occasions within the last year or two, we have told of a reported intention of the Chinese Government to legalize the trade in opium at Shanghai by the levy of a duty of twenty dollars a chest. But there has been until now an obstacle in the way. The brokers were willing enough to assist in the proposed legalization, but demurred to the handling of the money by the local authorities, whose honesty they doubted. Impressed, however, with a sense of the necessities of the Government, and desirous of aiding the military operations before Nanking, the brokers have formed an excise company among themselves, and intend, without the interference of the provincial Government, to collect a tax of twelve taels per chest, or a little over three per cent. on the price, which money, to be paid by the broker or middle man, after deduction of expense, will be remitted direct into the coffers of the general Commanding-in-Chief, to be by him disbursed in payment of the army. The arrangement actually commenced on the 12th ult., Koogkwak, a Kiung-siman, being the director-general. It is proposed, we hear, to have sixteen boats, with six men in each, to be stationed on the Woosung river, and up the Number and Soochow creeks, and places where attempts are likely to be made to evade the imposition. The monthly sales of opium in and about Shanghai average not less than three thousand chests; so that a tax of twelve taels per chest will amount in the year to the large sum of 141,200*l.* sterling, and will prove of considerable importance to the poverty-stricken imperialists."

BURMAH.

ANOTHER FIRE IN PEGU.—There has been another great fire in Pegu. This time the rising town of Bassein has been totally destroyed. The Rangoon Chronicle of the 25th March furnishes the following account of the conflagration:—"We are sorry to hear that Bassein has become a heap of smouldering ruins. About four or five days ago a fire broke out there, the origin of which no one seems to know, which spread with frightful rapidity over the town, not sparing even the Court houses, residence of the commissioner, treasury, church, nor in fact anything on which it could use its devouring strength. Poor Major Fytche has been rendered houseless, and deprived of all his worldly effects; the treasury has had its rupees and other coins converted into shapeless molten masses, the opium has had its narcotic property well extracted, and in a word, the destruction has been so complete as to serve all alike, sparing nothing and making no distinctions."—Phoenix, April 18.

STRIKE AMONGST THE DRIVERS.—The Rangoon Chronicle records a strike amongst the drivers. They were required to wear a bright brass plate, showing their number. Pay and the badge, however, won the day over no pay and no badge. The victory was achieved, and now in Rangoon there are no more extortionate cabmen. Our contemporary remarks, "that notwithstanding all the facilities of the big city (Calcutta), we seem to manage things infinitely more satisfactorily in this our little one." Rangoon has no municipal commissioners.

THE COMMISSARIAT DEPARTMENT IN PEGU has been transferred from the charge of Bengal to Madras officers.

SCINDE.

IMPORTANT DISCOVERY OF COAL.

We are happy at being able to announce that the existence of coal in Scinde is an established fact. It has been found in the Sehwan district. The credit of the discovery is due to the deputy-collector, Captain Phillips. We look upon it as one of the most important discoveries ever made in this country, not second to anything connected with the province. Both as a commercial matter and a revenue matter, it must have great effect in bringing this province into competition with other parts of India.

We shall have the nearest coal-fields in India to the sea. The facts connected with this discovery are the following:—Captain Phillips was engaged in sinking a well in the Vera plain, Mookan Gundee, about twenty-eight miles from Kotree, and at a depth of 40 feet from the surface the workmen came on a seam of coal 8 feet thick, and a few feet lower down another seam 18 inches thick has been discovered. About 300 maunds have been dug out of the well, and the supply from the country surrounding the spot is probably very large. The well has been sunk to a depth of eighty feet, without, however, coming either to water or to any other strata of coal. Ten camel loads have been sent to the Naval Department, for an experiment, and we shall look with much interest for the official report of the quality of the coal, and its value for steam purposes; there is, however, no doubt of its burning well, and it burnt in the Kotree factory to a white ash. We trust Government will pursue the important discovery, and a few hundreds expended now may lead to a future revenue of thousands. Our acting commissioner, Mr. Ellis, with expected promptness, has at once acceded to Captain Phillips's wish, and has granted money for the purpose of further excavations. The result we shall not fail to lay before our readers. The collector of Kurrachee, Major Preedy, in bringing the discovery to the notice of the Government, has mentioned that it might prove worthy of inquiry, whether, instead of the railway being taken direct to Sehwan, a diversion might not be made so as to take the line through the Scinde coal-fields, and we have no doubt the collector's accurate geographical knowledge will have great weight with the Government, and the inquiry will be made. But the advisability of such a step must weigh against the fact that there is at present nearly two million sterling value of trade, requiring the most direct route it can get to Kurrachee; and at Sehwan itself the Government returns give 21,00,000 maunds of traffic, the largest portion at any place on the Indus. We think Captain Phillips should not be tied down to the expenditure of "one hundred rupees;" just fancy a landlord at home discovering upon useless barren land a coal seam eight feet thick, and his agent being tied to the expenditure of ten pounds to discover its value and extent.

Captain Phillips should be empowered to sink wells throughout his district, and we venture to predict that he will find coal at other places, perhaps on the plain, this year under cultivation, north of the Munchur Lake; the sandstone formation is the same; and should it be found, it would be on the main line of the railway, as its course may be determined upon, so that coal may be found and become a source of revenue to the railway company, and yet the great principles upon which the Sehwan line has been chosen by General Jacob will not be lost sight of. This discovery of coal will force the construction of a railway through Scinde; the mineral productions of the earth itself will be one of the most potent causes for preventing the traffic of the Punjab and the North-west being carried round to Bombay. While we are talking about railways, canals, and steam-boats on the Indus, the Bombay people are laughing at us, and are forcing their line up to Agra, with what intention can easily be understood. Attention should not unnecessarily be attracted from the great national object of a Scinde railway, which was, and is, to make this the road to England! The railway must be pushed on with vigour, or Scinde will be Scinde, but it will never be a part of India! One of two things must shortly be decided. Is this to be an isolated Province, or is it to be the highway for the traffic of the Punjab, the North-West Provinces, and the increasing riches of Central Asia?—A bold and pushing policy will make it the last.

It may appear to some of our readers, that the thickness of the seam of coal now found promises a small supply; it may not, generally be known that the seam at Burdwan, in Bengal, is only 9 feet thick; and it is found 90 feet below the surface, the coal pits, with this thickness of seam, produce from 20,000 to 30,000 tons per annum. The sample of the coal we have had given us is so small that we can hardly judge of its kind; we are inclined to think, however, it is of the kind generally known as Anthracite (mineral charcoal or glance coal), and is the kind which contains the smallest amount of hydrogen, and no bitumen. The other two kinds of coal are common or slaty coal (houille), and differs from the Anthracite in containing bitumen. Cannel coal, which is very compact with an even texture and scarcely any lustre—we are not sure the coal found is not of this latter kind. We are not professed geologists. We will not lose sight of this subject, and any additional particulars of Captain Phillips's discoveries that comes to hand shall be duly published. In the meantime we would hint at the great advisability of Captain Phillips being assisted by Captain Hamilton, Forest Ranger, than whom no one is more fitted to assist in carrying out the inquiry with vigour and success. Of course, we claim the right of being the first chairman of the Scinde Coal Company—and our P. D. to be secretary.—Scindian, April 18.

THE VACANCY IN THE EAST-INDIA DIRECTION.

AMONG the various names which have been mentioned in connection with the new appointment to the East-India Direction, to supply the vacancy occasioned by Colonel Oliphant's retirement, the one which now appears to be the most likely to meet with the approval of her Majesty's Government is Sir Lawrence Peel, late Chief Justice at Calcutta. Most sincerely do we trust that the Government will make so good a choice.

SIR JAMSETJEE JEEJEEBHoy, BART.

FIFTEEN years ago Sir Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoy, of Bombay, received the honour of knighthood from the British Sovereign. The dignity was conferred in recognition of the munificence which had been displayed by the wealthy merchant in constructing works of public utility, and the favour of her Majesty could scarcely have been more worthily bestowed, since, though intended as a reward for the past, it seems but to have added fresh stimulus to the public spirit of the worthy knight. Bombay owes him much; but with his new honours the liberality of Sir Jamsetjee took a wider range, and thenceforward was not restricted within the confines of his native city. Our limits will not permit us to give even a list of his donations. Some idea, however, may be formed of their magnitude, when it is mentioned that to one undertaking alone—that of supplying the city of Poonah with water—the contribution of Sir Jamsetjee amounted to no less a sum than 17,500*l*. The uninterrupted flow of his beneficence appears at length to have been regarded as entitling him to further distinction, and we were rejoiced to observe, by the Gazette of the 22nd ultimo, that “the Queen had been pleased to direct letters patent to be passed under the Great Seal, granting the dignity of a baronet of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland unto Sir Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoy, of Bombay, Knight, and the heirs male of his body lawfully begotten.” The elevation of Sir Jamsetjee has doubtless been dictated by a sound policy. Honorary titles are nowhere more highly prized than in India; and though the Crown of England does not sell its dignities, the native millionaires will not fail to discover that it is ever ready to confer distinction upon those who prove themselves the real benefactors of their country.

TEA-GROWING IN INDIA.

If India is to become a great commercial country, it must be by the improvement of its agriculture. Its circumstances are not such as to foster the development of manufacturing industry. If, then, the chief exports of our Eastern possessions are to be restricted to the products of the soil, it behoves us to stimulate to the utmost the culture of the older staples of the country, and to facilitate the introduction of such new specimens as may afford a fair prospect of being cultivated with success. Fortunately, the work has not to be undertaken afresh. India is already rich in agricultural products which are in great demand. Between the Himalayas and Cape Comorin combinations of soil and climate are found in such diversity as to be equally favourable to the growth of cotton, opium, silk, sugar, and indigo. Of these staple articles, some are indigenous and others are exotic in India. Among the latter are opium and indigo. The opium poppy, though introduced from the North, is raised better and cheaper in Bengal than in any other part of the world, and the produce of India monopolizes the markets of China. Formerly the indigo used in Europe was imported from Guatemala; now the principal supply for the whole world is raised in the delta of the Ganges. Why should not similar success attend the culture of the tea plant? Some shrubs and trees, indeed, are of such extreme delicacy as scarcely to bear removal. Others, as the clove, the nutmeg, and the cinnamon, are limited within narrow geographical boundaries. The hock and claret grape both deteriorate when transplanted to other spots than those they occupy. This, however, is not the case with the tea plant. This shrub is found in a naturalized state over an extent of territory comprising no less than thirty degrees of latitude and as many of longitude. It flourishes within the tropics as far south as Cochin China, and beyond the equatorial regions as far north as Peking and the upper part of Japan. But the principal culture is carried on within a belt of territory lying between the 27th and 31st parallels of north latitude. Its favourite sites are the declivities of hills, and it appears to be brought to the highest perfection in a climate where the thermometer ranges between 30° and 80°, where the heat of summer is not scorching nor the winter marked by severe frost. Now these characteristics are to be met with as readily in India as in China. In the former of these countries, vast tracts exist which agree so perfectly with the tea provinces of China in all the conditions necessary to the naturalization of the tea plant, that no doubt can be entertained of their capability to produce tea quite equal to the best kinds obtained from the Celestial Empire. These tracts are situated for the most part at the base of the Himalaya mountains, in the British provinces of Kumaon, Gurwhal, and the Dhera Dhoon. They contain the same description of soil as those of China; they have the same mean temperature in summer and the same degree of cold in winter. Speaking of these tracts, an eminent botanist observes: “They constitute the northern and western corner of Hindostan, extending from the plains of the adjoining provinces to boundaries beyond the Snowy Mountains. In regard to climate and elevation they are extremely diversified, possessing every degree of temperature, from the scorching heat of a tropical sun, or the temperate atmosphere of the tea provinces, to the severe winter of Chinese Tartary and the eternal snow of the Himalaya, with all the intermediate gradations; and rising from a comparatively low level to the height of the loftiest peaks in the world. They are watered by the Sutlej and the upper course of the Ganges, and by the countless tributary streams of both those rivers. They, moreover, possess every variety of soil. To these advantages," continues Dr. Wallich, "must be added the very striking and almost exclusive similarity of their general flora with that of China and Japan, amounting in some instances to absolute identity of species, and in others to close similarity." Public attention seems to have been directed to these facts so far back as the year 1834. The subject at the time excited considerable interest, and the ruling authorities at Calcutta participated largely in the general feeling. A Tea Committee was appointed, and it was in contemplation to depute agents to China for the purpose of procuring seeds and cuttings; but while the plan of operations was still under discussion, an unexpected occurrence took place. The tea-tree was found to be indigenous in the British territory of Assam. This province, it will be recollected, has its boundaries almost on the very frontiers of the Chinese empire, and sufficient evidence was adduced to show that the shrub growing wild on its hills was the genuine tea plant of China. A discovery so opportune could not fail of being regarded as one of the most important that had occurred in India in connection with the agricultural and commercial resources of the empire. Tea nurseries were speedily established. These plantations rapidly multiplied, and in a few years a general conviction prevailed that the tea plant could be cultivated with great success in Assam. This impression led to the formation of a joint-stock association, termed the Assam Tea Company, and in the year 1841 a considerable number of the state nurseries were made over to this company. The remainder were retained by the Government until it should be ascertained that the objects contemplated when the experiments were commenced had been fully attained. Later experience fully satisfied the Government upon this point. About the year 1845 it became manifest that the undertaking had been conducted to a successful issue, and that it no longer required the aid of the State to induce parties to engage in a project which experience proved to be highly remunerative. The Government accordingly withdrew from the cultivation, and the remaining plantations were transferred to the Assam Company. Success so complete stimulated the Government to revert to the original project of testing the capabilities of the north-west frontier of India for the growth of tea. Upon this occasion it was deemed preferable to introduce the plant direct from China, and agents were accordingly despatched to Canton in furtherance of this object. A large supply of seeds and plants having been secured, various nurseries were formed in Saharunpore and other hill districts in the vicinity of the Himalayas. These endeavours on the part of the Government gave rise to another joint-stock association, which was formed in London in 1852, under the title of the Himalaya Tea cultivation Company. This association failed, however, to secure the support necessary to the commencement of active operations, and the experimental cultivation in this part of India still remains in the hands of the Government. In the mean time the plantations have not been neglected. In 1852 upwards of 100,000 trees had been planted, and further supplies had been ordered from China. In March, 1854, the number of acres under tea cultivation amounted to 670, and the plants had increased to a million and a half. A Government tea plantation has also been made at Kangra, in the Punjab. In this locality the experiments were commenced upon a petty scale in 1851. Now six hundred acres are under cultivation, and, according to late returns, three millions of seedlings had been planted, while as many more were ready for distribution. The area under cultivation by the Assam Tea Company amounts to about 4,500 acres, and the annual produce is now estimated at about 700,000 lbs. Such is a brief sketch of what has been done to promote the growth of tea in India. If the progress has not been so rapid as could have been wished, it is something to have smoothed the way for future exertions. The Chinese may, perhaps, smile at a rivalry which, after the lapse of twenty years, still leaves them the monopoly of the European markets; but future success is not to be measured by past difficulties. All obstacles have now been swept away, and the state and prospects of tea cultivation in India are highly encouraging. Considerable tracts already yield a rich return, large plantations are successively arriving at maturity, and the breadth of cultivation is annually extending. It would not, indeed, be easy to point out in what consists the advantage of China over India. If China possesses a vast belt of territory in which the tea tree may be brought to perfection, so does India; if China commands an unlimited supply of cheap labour, so does India. The same markets are open to both, and in the means of transit India will shortly have the superiority. We see no reason, therefore, to distrust the expectation that in a few years the tea of India may be brought into successful competition with the tea of China.

THE EAST-INDIA COMPANY'S CIVIL SERVICE.

THE following are the names of the Examiners who have been selected for the examination of candidates for admission to the Civil Service of India next month:—

- Sanscrit* Monier Williams, Esq., of the University of Oxford, and Professor at Haileybury College.

THE FOUNDATION STONE OF A NEW CAVALRY COLLEGE was laid on the 25th ult., at Richmond, by Lady Combermere.

BOMBAY, BARODA AND CENTRAL INDIA RAILWAY COMPANY.

The third report of this company commences by regretting the retirement from the Board of two colleagues, the late noble chairman (the Earl of Devon) and Mr. Lewis, whose valuable services are lost to the company in consequence of the former having changed his residence to a remote part of England, and the latter having been appointed to a high legal position in the East Indies. In consequence of these retirements, Colonel French has been appointed chairman, Captain Scott vice-chairman, and Mr. Kay and Mr. Mackenzie have been appointed members of the Board.

The report of the consulting engineer, Lieut.-Col. Kennedy, supplies the fullest information as to the progress of the works in India.

According to estimates based upon the working plans and sections for the 143 miles of line between Surat and Ahmedabad, it appears that the most costly portion of the line will probably reach 7,995*l.* per mile, the least costly 4,164*l.* per mile, and the average cost will be 5,516*l.*, exclusive of rolling stock. The cost of shop tools and rolling stock for one train daily in each direction will average 628*l.* per mile additional, making the maximum average, including rolling stock, for one train, 8,623*l.* per mile, the minimum average 4,792*l.* and the mean average 6,144*l.*

It will, however, be unreasonable to hope that even one train daily in each direction should be filled on the remote detached portion of line between Surat and Ahmedabad, until the company shall have been permitted to effect a junction with the commercial focus of the line at Bombay. To obtain this permission from the Government appears to be the most important duty of the directors, whether in reference to the interests of their shareholders or the Indian population, whose industrial requirements the company have undertaken to furnish with the means of internal intercourse, of which they are now totally deficient. On this subject it is satisfactory to observe, from the answer given by the Local Government of Bombay to the urgent solicitation of the mercantile bodies of that presidency, that the conviction of the Local Government continues as strongly in favour of opening the Bombay and Surat Junction as it ever has been; and that in reference to the memorial forwarded by the shareholders at their last half-yearly meeting, the Bombay Local Government have reiterated their solicitation to the Home Government for the immediate extension of the line from Surat to Bombay.

There appears, therefore, to be nothing now impeding the progress of the work, in the vital point, which every well-informed authority admits to be the main element of its ultimate utility and success; but the concurrence of the Home Government of India, in the reiterated recommendations of the Supreme Government of India, of the Local Government of Bombay, of the commercial interests of the Bombay Presidency, of the Manchester commercial bodies, who are interested in Indian progress, and of the shareholders and directors of this company. It is, therefore, clear, after the fullest consideration of the entire subject, that the most important benefit which the directors can confer upon the shareholders, and upon the population of Western and Central India, would be to obtain the concurrence of the Home Government in the unanimous recommendations of the above high authorities for the immediate construction of the Surat and Bombay Junction.

Those who are best qualified to form an opinion on the subject, including Mr. Forde, the chief engineer of the company in India, attribute the notorious disinclination of labourers to the company's employment to the system adopted of paying the labourers fortnightly, and having suggested that a system of daily payment should be introduced instead, it is to be hoped that the recent decision of the Board requiring that the labourers should be paid their wages daily (but carefully avoiding the introduction of any modification of the shop-trust or truck system, which has been found to act so injuriously to the labourers of this country), will tend to remove the objections of Indian labourers to the service. This and a judicious application of the small contract system or piece work, by enabling industrious labourers to earn additional wages, proportioned to the amount of their exertions, will no doubt produce that competition for employment on the railway which is desirable, and give the required supply of labour.

There have been forty-eight contracts entered into with British manufacturers for the supply of various materials and machinery. These contracts include two-thirds of the entire permanent way, some of the bridges, ballasting engines, &c., and it is satisfactory to find that the contract rates range below the rates calculated in our estimates.

5,000 tons of the first materials required on the works have been shipped at different British ports for India.

The debt incurred for advance of guaranteed dividends up to last December was about 18,000*l.*, which, in June, 1857, when there can be no doubt that the line shall have been opened, may be expected to exceed 100,000*l.*, or upwards of 700*l.* per mile; this amount would require above four years to pay off, assuming the revenue to reach 10 per cent. on the capital, above working costs, giving a liquidation fund of 2½ per cent., and leaving 7½ per cent. divisible among the shareholders.

The capital account showed that 467,273*l.* had been received, and 165,102*l.* expended, leaving a balance of 294,082*l.* in the hands of the East-India Company, and 8,088*l.* at the banker's. The interest account showed that 18,330*l.* had been paid to the shareholders, leaving a balance of 115*l.* in hand.

THE WILL OF THE RIGHT HON. WILLIAM PITT, EARL AMHERST, G.C.H., has been proved in London, under 140,000*l.* personalty.

THE 93RD HIGHLANDERS were presented with new colours at Dover on the 22nd May, by H.R.H. the Commander-in-Chief preparatory to their embarkation for China.

THE EASTERN STRAM NAVIGATION COMPANY have made a call of 2*l.* per share, payable on the 10th instant.

A GOLD MEDAL was presented by the Royal Geographical Society, at the annual meeting, on the 25th ult., to Lieut.-Col. A. S. Waugh, Surveyor-General of India.

IN RE CHRISTOPHER HALL.—This bankrupt, described as an East-India merchant, of Sun-court, Cornhill, passed his final examination on the 25th May. The liabilities of the estate are small.

CAPTAIN JAMES PEAT, late of the ship Golden Age, who went out in February to Old Calabar, committed suicide on the voyage.

REID, IRVING, AND CO.'S ESTATE.—A dividend of 6*d.* in the pound was declared on the 19th ultimo in the estate of Reid, Irving, and Co., making, in all, 3*s.* paid thereon. Promises are held out of further and better dividends, as the Mauritius property is turning out well.

THE DEATH OF MISS MACNAGHTEN.—The eldest daughter of Sir Edmund C. Macnaghten, Bart., met with a distressing accident on the 18th ult., which terminated fatally. The young lady was occupied in the drawing-room in writing a letter, and it is believed that she struck a light in order to seal the letter, when a spark lodged unperceived in a portion of her muslin dress. In a short time she rushed from the room shrieking loudly, and descended the staircase to the hall, entirely enveloped in flames. One of the domestics, alarmed by the cries, ran up stairs, and rushed into the dining-room, and seizing a baize table-cover, had the presence of mind to wrap it round the unfortunate lady. Medical aid was promptly obtained, when it was ascertained that she was so dreadfully burnt that she could not recover.

THE CADETS AT ADDISCOMBE AND TOUTING TAILORS.—The parents and guardians of cadets at the East India Military College, Addiscombe, have been furnished with the following circular, which tells its own tale, and shows how infamous is the practice to which the document refers:—"Some unprincipled tradesmen in London, usually calling themselves 'tailors' or 'outfitters,' have long been in the habit of pressing upon young lads at schools and colleges money and goods, sometimes to large amounts. Their process of recovery is either by charging the amounts in bills for imaginary outfits to India, or by suing the parents in the courts of law. A late legal decision having, however, nonsuited one of these 'touters,' their tactics are changed, and they now supply nothing but clothes; but they introduce a third person generally a Jew, who offers to buy up the clothes so provided, paying ready money. If, then, after such a transaction payment is refused, the tailor threatens his victim with an action for felony, or conspiracy to defraud. It is most strongly urged upon parents to warn their sons of the dangerous and illegal character of these transactions, and to assure them that if after such warning they should be wicked enough to engage in them, they will be left to bear the punishment of their folly. The names of some of these touting tailors are known to the head of this college, and they will be communicated to those parents and guardians who would avoid the employment of such unprincipled men in supplying the Indian outfit. Parents are assured that a young man proceeding to India requires very little outfit beyond the articles of apparel necessary for a voyage of six or seven weeks. The head of this college will be happy to give advice on all such subjects."

TRADE WITH CHINA.—The declared value of British manufactures exported to China last year amounted to 2,216,123*l.* in 1855 to 1,277,944*l.*

THE OPIUM TRADE.—Some papers relative to the opium trade with China were on Friday published by order of the House of Lords; they include a mass of correspondence between the Government and the local authorities in China on the subject of opium, the dates extending from 1842 to 1856. It may be gathered from these papers that both the extent of opium-eating in China, and its baneful effects have been grievously exaggerated.

DREDGING THE NILE.—The Committee of the Board of Trade have requested the assistance of an engineer and shipwright officer, of Woolwich dockyard, to inspect the first of forty iron barges, built expressly to dredge the Nile.

ORIENTAL BANK CORPORATION.—A dividend and bonus of 7 per cent. for the last six months were declared at the annual meeting, held on the 25th ult. Reference is made in the report to the destruction of British factories at Canton. The directors state that they are advised, that previously to the commencement of the disturbances, all their books, money, and valuable property had been removed to Hong-Kong. The actual loss, therefore, is confined to the building and furniture, and for these compensation has been applied for in the right quarter. It is stated that two months ago an application was made to the directors on behalf of the London and Eastern Bank, which was in difficulties. The corporation held none of the obligations of that bank, but some of our most valued constituents being interested, the directors agreed, in conjunction with other establishments connected with India, to assist in the liquidation of its affairs, in order to save the expense and probable litigation consequent on a judicial winding-up. The corporation has ample security for any advances it can be required to make for this purpose, and the liquidation is being carried out under the superintendence of one of its officers. The insurance fund of the bank which in 1855 stood at 10,960*l.* 19*s.* 2*d.*, has increased to 38,183*l.*

THE GOVERNMENT OF CEYLON.—On the 28th ult. was published a copy of a letter, dated January 17, addressed by Viscount Torrington to the Colonial-office on his administration of the government of Ceylon, with reference to the remarks of Governor Sir H. G. Ward on the subject, together with the reply of Mr. Labouchere, dated February 11th. Mr. Labouchere replied to the effect, that he did not think it would be a proper or a convenient course to express any general opinion on the merits of Lord Torrington's administration; and he felt it the less incumbent upon him so to do, because he (Mr. Labouchere) was persuaded that it was not Sir Henry Ward's intention to cast any imputation upon his lordship's government; but, on the contrary, to declare that, in his opinion, the prosperity now enjoyed by the island of Ceylon is in great part to be attributed to able and vigorous measures adopted by his lordship and Sir George Anderson under very difficult circumstances, in order to place the finances of the colony on a sound foundation.

THE STUDY OF ORIENTAL LANGUAGES.

1. The Study of Oriental Languages. A Letter by MAX MÜLLER, in the Times of January 13, 1857.
2. Instruction in the Oriental Languages considered, specially as regards the Education of Candidates for the East-India Civil Service, and as a National Question. By W. NASSAU LEES, Member and Secretary to the Board of Examiners, Principal of the Muhammadan College, &c. &c. Calcutta. Williams and Norgate, London, 1857.

WITHIN the last few months two of our ablest Orientalists (the one a Sanskrit the other an Arabic scholar) have endeavoured to arouse public attention to the importance of the study of the Eastern languages, and to the utter neglect into which it has fallen in England. Whilst the Continental nations of Europe are vying with one another in the cultivation of this field, some—like the Germans—apparently from an inborn love of linguistic and scientific pursuits, others—like the Russians—with a view to political aggrandizement, we islanders, who have more at stake in the East than any of them, are content to remain in ignorance of the languages of those countries in which our widest and fairest possessions lie. France has its "Ecole spéciale des Langues Orientales vivantes;" Russia and Austria the magnificent Academies of St. Petersburg and Vienna; England has—we may now almost say had—only Haileybury; and that school must, we fear, be looked upon, on the evidence of Mr. Lees, as a failure; for, whilst he found (pamphlet, p. 28) Austrian students "who could not only read fluently printed books, but who could themselves write the Oriental character, and decipher readily ordinary MSS. in Turkish, Arabic, and Persian," his testimony regarding Haileybury is (p. 11) "that the young men who came from it did not bring with them to India an adequate knowledge of the Oriental languages;" and (p. 12) that "it is certainly an extreme case in which a young man lands in India with sufficient knowledge of the (Sanskrit) language to read even the character decently."

We often hear it alleged that it is useless to give instruction in the Oriental languages in this country to young men going out to India; that they will learn more in six weeks there than in almost as many years here. The idea is a mistaken one. Our own experience goes to prove that those who have studied French and German to some extent at home, and then gone to reside on the Continent, come back at the end of a few years much better scholars than others who went abroad at the same time, but without previous preparation. And if this be true of the European languages, much more must it hold in regard to the Oriental tongues, which differ so completely from our own in their grammatical form and modes of expression. Mr. Lees goes into lengthy details to show the loss of time and waste of public money incurred by the arrival of young civil servants in India in a state of total, or almost total, ignorance of any native language. In a Minute on the subject, written in May, 1854, he estimates the expense of maintaining the average number of twenty-five to thirty students at the College of Fort William (abolished in January, 1854) at about half a million of pounds sterling per annum; in return for which the Company had not received a single day's service. "What a deal of money," adds he, "would be saved, and what a load of anxiety would be removed from the shoulders of Government, could the civil servant proceed at once to his station on landing in India!" Sound common sense, good judgment, and an intimate acquaintance with the native languages of India, are the qualifications necessary to enable a civil servant to perform his duties efficiently; but the last is the sine quâ non; without it all other mental qualities and accomplishments are of no avail. A man may write Greek like Thucydides; his Latin verses may cast those of Horace and Virgil into the shade; he may be a Newton in mathematical science, or a Bacon in philosophy; but he will not be fit to preside in an ordinary Indian cutcherry. Have, then, the authorities decided on dispensing for good and all with the second of the two Indian examinations? Or may we hope, with Max Müller, that this state of things is not likely to continue long?"

We are not, however, contending for a single examination; we plead with Müller and Lees for the establishment of a school of Oriental languages, where we can educate not only our Indian civil servants, but also the attachés of our embassies, the employés of our Foreign Office, our missionaries, and our merchants. Arabic is, as every one knows, the language spoken at the important settlement of Aden, the Gibraltar of the Red Sea; yet such is the scarcity of Arabic scholars in the Company's service, that one officer, distinguished for his knowledge of it, has been kept at that station for nine years. Good Persian scholars, too, seem, at least among the military men, to be equally rare; and the consequence is that the Indian Government has suffered some inconvenience during the late war for want of them. Whilst M. di Marchi, an attaché of the Sardinian embassy at Constantinople, is preparing an extensive work on Muhammadan law, our embassy is frequently in difficulties for want of properly qualified officials, and has been in some instances obliged to apply to the Porte for assistance. Whilst Mordtmann, Wetzstein, von Kremer, and Blau are making large and valuable collections of MSS., coins, and other treasures of art, we never hear that any of our consuls in Turkey or Asia Minor are similarly occupied. The Russian Governor of Georgia receives information of a conspiracy in his territory from St. Petersburg; our Foreign Office gets a letter from a Circassian Prince, and has either to send it for decipherment to St. Petersburg or to leave it unread. Germany and Denmark send out to the East missionaries properly qualified for their task—witness the labours of a Graul, a Krapf, and a Kölle; but with us a Caldwell is a rare phenomenon indeed. Lees is, doubtless, not far wrong when he says (p. 24) that our missionaries in India "are, as a general rule, so ignorant of the native languages as to be unable to communicate with any degree of fluency with those whom they term the heathen; and that, from the same cause, their translations of religious tracts are too often unintelligible—nay, sometimes even blasphemous!" How can such men, devoid in many instances of any knowledge whatever of the languages in which the sacred books of their opponents are written, make themselves thoroughly acquainted with the religion of those whom they seek to convert? How can they overturn by argument systems of which they are ignorant, or which they have studied only in the writings of a Ward or a Charles Forster?

In short, the state of Oriental learning in this country at the present moment is disgraceful to us as a nation, and detrimental to our interests in the East. Russia understands these things better. She has concentrated, since 1854, her Oriental scholars at St. Petersburg, and established there an Oriental Faculty, with professorial chairs for the following languages:—1. Arabic; 2. Persian; 3. Turkish and other Tatar dialects; 4. Mongol and Kaimuck; 5. Chinese; 6. Hebrew; 7. Armenian; 8. Grusinian, or Georgian; 9. Manchu; 10. Pushtu; 11. Tibetan; 12. Sanskrit. Among the professors are not only German and Russian scholars, such as Dorn, Chwolsohn, Beresin, Wassiljew, and Tschubinow, but also native Orientals of the first literary reputation in their own land, such as Mirza Kasembeg and the Shaikh Tantāwī. A similar institution ought, we think, to be brought into operation in this country without delay. In the first instance, it would be sufficient to found Chairs for Sanskrit and the principal modern dialects of India (namely, Bengali, Hindustani, Maharrati, Punjabi, and Guzerati), not neglecting the southern Tamil and Telugu; for Arabic, Persian, Pushtu, Turkish, and Armenian; for Burmese, Malay, and Chinese. The countries in which some of these languages are spoken are subject to the British sway, but governed by their own laws administered in their own tongue; with others we carry on an extensive and lucrative trade; whilst in the case of others, such as Afghanistan and Persia, it is at least important to be thoroughly informed as to their political state and the designs of other powers in regard to them.

Regarding the constitution of such a college as has been proposed, the suggestions of Müller in the Times are especially deserving of notice. He proposes that the East-India Company, the Foreign Office and commissariat, the Universities, the various missionary and Bible societies, great commercial firms, and private individuals, should subscribe the amount necessary for its foundation. "The money thus contributed," he proceeds, "should be vested in private trustees, and the institution itself should be entirely independent of Government. The Board of Control, the Foreign Office, the War Office, the missionary societies, the Universities, and private subscribers, should each have the right of appointing trustees. The trustees should have the control of the funds, and appoint a president. The president should have the management of the whole institution, and the right of appointing the teachers and professors, subject to the approval of the trustees. Now, with regard to the teachers, it seems desirable that, whenever it is possible, well-educated natives should be procured, to give instruction in the languages which they speak. For the most important languages of the East there will be no great difficulty in getting natives who have received a literary education in their own country, and who have a certain knowledge of English, French, or Italian. At a public school, as, for instance, at Haileybury, where the experiment was tried, men of this class might find it difficult to keep their classes in proper order; but at an institution where pupils go voluntarily and in their own interest to acquire useful knowledge, this difficulty would hardly be felt. Besides these native teachers, it would be necessary to have a small number of English professors, who should lecture on some of the chief branches of Oriental literature and history, and at the same time assist and guide the native teachers whose languages fell within their respective departments."

Supposing the teaching of the college restricted to the languages above mentioned, there would be required, according to this plan, one native teacher for each of the modern Indian dialects, with two English professors, one of Sanskrit and another of Tamil, since it is extremely improbable that one man could be found combining an adequate knowledge of both. For Arabic, besides the professor, three native teachers might be necessary, because the dialects of Syria, Egypt, and Algiers differ not inconsiderably from one another. Persian and Turkish might be combined under one professor, or the Persian might be joined to the Arabic chair. In either case two Persian teachers would be required, as the pronunciation and idiom of Muhammadan India is very different from that of the court of Teheran. For each of the other languages, one teacher would probably be found sufficient.

It is to be hoped that Government and the influential public bodies enumerated by Müller, more especially the East-India Company, will shortly give their serious attention to the plan proposed. The East-Indian civil service examinations cannot, we fear, be long conducted upon their present footing, without producing results the reverse of beneficial to the public service. Prevention is better than cure; and the sooner an academy for the study of Oriental languages is established in London, the better for British interests in the East.

The Houses of Refuge are numbered in succession to those already erected on the Sea-face of the Sunderbunds, and are situated as follows:

No. 4, PAINTED WHITE.

Erected on the South-east part of Dalhousie's Island, at the Eastern entrance of the Mutlah River, on a sandy patch, about five feet above high-water mark, and about 100 feet in shore, distinguishable by a White Flag from a long spar and bamboo, which have been put up close alongside of the House, visible considerably above the surrounding trees.

No. 5, PAINTED WHITE.

This House is erected on Bangadoonee Island, about seven miles Eastward of No. 4. It stands on the S.E. part of the Island, above a small sandy beach, about 100 feet from high-water mark. A long spar and bamboo, with a Flag, have been put up alongside, and may be seen considerably above the trees.

In each House, there is a supply of water and biscuit, a Catamaran and paddles, a letter of instructions, and a Chart of the Sunderbunds.

LIFE DEPARTMENT.—Under the provisions of an Act of Parliament, this Company now offers to future insurers FOUR-FIFTHS of the PROFITS, with QUINQUENNIAL DIVISION, or a LOW RATE of PREMIUM without participation of profits.

The next division of profits will be declared in June, 1860, when all participating policies which shall have subsisted at least one year at Christmas, 1859, will be allowed to share in the profits.

At the five divisions of profits made by this Company, the total reversionary bonuses added to the policies have exceeded 913,000*l*.

At the last valuation, at Christmas, 1854, the assurances in force amounted to upwards of 4,240,000*l*, the income from the Life branch in 1854 was more than 200,000*l*, and the Life Assurance Fund (independent of the guarantee capital) exceeded 1,700,000*l*.

FOREIGN RISKS.—The extra premiums required for the East and West Indies, the British Colonies, and the northern parts of the United States of America, have been materially reduced.

INVALID LIVES.—Persons who are not in such sound health as would enable them to insure their lives at the tabular premiums, may have their lives insured at extra premiums.

LOANS granted on Life Policies to the extent of their values, provided such policies shall have been effected a sufficient time to have attained in each case a value not under 50*l*.

ASSIGNMENTS OF POLICIES.—Written notices of, received and registered.

MEDICAL FEES paid by the Company, and no charge will be made for policy stamps.

FIRE DEPARTMENT.—Insurances are effected upon every description of property, at moderate rates.

Losses caused by Explosion of Gas are admitted by this Company.

NEW GAZETTEER OF INDIA.

In one vol. 8vo., with Map, price £1. 1s.

A GAZETTEER

OF THE

Territories under the Government of the East-India Company,

AND OF THE

NATIVE STATES ON THE CONTINENT OF INDIA.

By EDWARD THORNTON, Esq.,

Author of the "History of the British Empire in India."

The work has been compiled by the authority of the Court of Directors, and though comprised within a single volume, it will be found to contain the great mass of information comprehended in the four volumes of the "Gazetteer of India," published by the same author in 1854. This result has been obtained by retrenching some few redundancies, and by adopting an enlarged page and distributing the matter into two separate columns. By these means space has been also acquired for the insertion of much new matter, rendered necessary by the political and territorial changes which have more recently taken place within our Eastern Possessions.

On the character of the work a few remarks will be sufficient. Its chief objects are,—

1st. To fix the relative position of the various cities, towns, and villages with as much precision as possible, and to exhibit with the greatest practicable brevity all that is known respecting them; and 2ndly. To note the various countries, provinces, or territorial divisions, and to describe the physical characteristics of each, together with their statistical, social, and political circumstances.

To these will be added minute descriptions of the principal rivers and chains of mountains; thus presenting to the Reader, within a brief compass, a mass of information which could not otherwise be obtained, except from a multiplicity of volumes and manuscript records. The volume, in short, may be regarded as an epitome of all that has yet been written and published respecting the territories under the government or political superintendence of the British power in India. Its merits have been frequently discussed in the General Courts of the East-India Company, where successive Chairmen have borne ample testimony to the utility of the publication, and where it has been characterized by the best-informed among the Proprietors as "a complete history of India, untainted in any degree by political bias."

A Bonus of Twenty per cent. from realized profits has been declared for the present year to all policy-holders on the profit scale who have paid five years' premium.

The advantages of this Society are as follow:—

Low Rates of Premium, calculated on the best and most recent investigations of mortality in India.

Annual participation in the profits after payment of premium for five years, by parties assured on the profit scale.

Immediate reduction of premium to the English rates in the case of a party assured proceeding to Europe for a permanency, and reduction after one year in the case of the party visiting Europe for a short period.

The civil rate only charged on the lives of parties in the military service, holding civil offices, as long as they continue in such office.

The Society also grants Deferred Annuities and Endowments payable at any given period.

Tables and full information may be had at the Office in Chatham Place; or on application to the Secretaries at Calcutta, Messrs. GORDON, STUART, and Co.; or to the Agents of the Agra and United Service Bank, at the other Indian Presidencies.

Allen's Maps of India & China.

MAP OF INDIA;

Showing the British Territories subdivided into Collectorate, and the position and boundary of each Native State; chiefly compiled from Trigonometrical Surveys, executed by order of the Honourable Court of Directors of the East-India Company. On six sheets—Size, 5 ft. 6 in. high; 5 ft. 8 in. wide. £2; or on cloth, in a case, £2. 12s. 6d.; or with rollers, and varnished, £3. 3s.

The object kept in view in compiling this Map has been to render it available to the greatest possible extent for popular use. For this purpose the names of all stations, civil and military, are inserted, as well as those of all towns and places of note likely to be looked for. To make clear the subdivisions of the whole of the country, both British and native, the limits of the various districts and collectorates, with their names, are distinctly indicated. The railways are laid down, and the trunk roads conspicuously coloured. The newly-acquired district in Burmah is included. To avoid, however, the confusion consequent upon over-crowding, and make the Map clear and easy for reference, the names of many small villages, and places of no present importance, have been omitted, and thus a very wide measure of comprehensiveness has been attained, while needless diffusiveness has been avoided.

A GENERAL MAP OF INDIA;

Compiled chiefly from Surveys executed by Order of the Honourable East-India Company. On six sheets—Size, 5 ft. 3 in. wide; 5 ft. 4 in. high. £2; or on cloth, in a case, £2. 12s. 6d.; or with rollers, and varnished, £3. 3s.

FROM THE "HUCKARU."

"Mr. W. H. Smoult has got up, with great trouble and expense, an edition of Dr. R. Baikie's account of the Neilgherries. The subject-matter of the work is of great interest, but the point we are most disposed to dwell upon is the admirable style in which Mr. Smoult has contrived to get the work illustrated. The large panoramic view of Ootacamund is a picture that well deserves a handsome frame, and is worth the price of the book itself.

FROM THE "ENGLISHMAN."

"The new edition is neatly printed, and is illustrated with maps and views, the latter being from original drawings taken on the spot, and lithographed by an artist whose work excels any we have yet seen in Calcutta."

TO LATE RESIDENTS IN INDIA.—TRUE MADRAS CURRY, and MULLIGATAWNEY PASTE and CHUTNIES.—Messrs. BARRIE and Co., Vepery, Madras, to enable their old correspondents returning from India to continue the use of the celebrated Condiments, have made arrangements to forward regular supplies of the above, packed in glass jars for family use, at 1s. 9d. and upwards, which may be had of CROSSE and BLACKWELL, Purveyors to Her Majesty, 21, Soho Square; FORTNUM, MASON, and Co., Piccadilly; and of the principal Sauce Vendors throughout the kingdom. Each bottle is labelled, and BARRIE and Co., Madras, stamped on the glass.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS singularly efficacious in the cure of Bile and Indigestion.—Daniel Dogherty, of Aghadoe, was so afflicted with indigestion and a disordered stomach, that life had become quite a burden to him; he could scarcely digest any kind of food, even bread alone would occasion faintness and other unpleasant feelings: he tried a variety of remedies without the wished-for relief, but a few doses of Holloway's Pills had a most miraculous effect, for in a few weeks a perfect and most excellent cure was effected by them.

Sold by all Medicine Vendors, at PROFESSOR HOLLOWAY'S Establishments, 244, Strand, London, and 80, Maiden Lane, New York; by A. Stampia, Constantinople; A. Guidicy, Smyrna; E. Muir, Malta; and by all European and Native Vendors of Medicine throughout the whole of the East Indies.

THE successful results of the last half century have proved beyond question that ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL possesses peculiarly nourishing powers in the growth, restoration, and improvement of the human hair, and when every other specific has failed. This celebrated Oil is now universally acknowledged to be superior to all other preparations for the hair. It prevents it from falling off or turning grey, strengthens weak hair, produces a thick and luxuriant growth, cleanses it from scurf and dandruff, and makes it beautifully soft, curly, and glossy. Its operation in cases of baldness is peculiarly active; and in the growth of whiskers, eyebrows, and mustachios, it is unfailing in its stimulative operations. For children it is especially recommended, as forming the basis of a beautiful head of hair. In dressing the hair nothing can equal its effect, rendering the hair so admirably soft that it will lie in any direction, and imparting a transcendent lustre.—Price 3s. 6d. and 7s.; family bottles (equal to four small), 10s. 6d.; and double that size, 21s.

NEW LABEL.—To prevent the substitution of spurious imitations for the genuine article by unprincipled shopkeepers, a new label from steel, by Messrs. Perkins, Bacon, and Co., is now used, upon which are engraved in white letters, the words "ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL," and the signature of the Proprietors in red ink, "A. ROWLAND & SONS." The whole, with the exception of the profile of her Majesty "the Queen," being covered with a lacework pattern in transparent colourless ink.

Sold at 20, Hatton Garden, London, and by Chemists and Perfumers.

WATCH, CLOCK, AND CHRONOMETER MANUFACTORY, 33 AND 34, LUDGATE HILL, LONDON. ESTABLISHED 1749.

J. W. BENSON, MANUFACTURER of GOLD and SILVER WATCHES of every description, construction, and pattern, invites attention to his magnificent and unprecedented display of Watches, which is admitted to be the largest and best selected Stock in London. It consists of Chronometer, Duplex, Patent Detached Lever, Horizontal, and Vertical Movements, Jewelled, &c., with all the latest improvements, mounted in superbly-finished engine-turned and engraved Gold and Silver Cases. The designs engraved upon many of the cases are by eminent artists, and can only be obtained at this manufactory. If the important requisites, superiority of finish, combined with accuracy of performance, elegance, durability, and reasonableness of price, are wished for, the intending purchaser should visit this Manufactory, or send for the ILLUSTRATED PAMPHLET, published by J. W. BENSON (and sent post-free on application), which contains sketches, prices, and directions as to what Watch to buy, where to buy it, and how to use it. Several hundred letters have been received from persons who have bought Watches at this Manufactory, bearing testimony to the correct performance of the same. The following extracts from the opinions of the Press will, it is hoped, be a sufficient guarantee to the public that they may secure at this House a good Watch at a reasonable price:—

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

AFTER an interval of only seven days, instead of the accustomed fortnight, another mail has been received from India. Its premature arrival is attributable to the arrangements made at the several presidencies for its earlier departure in anticipation of the delay which might possibly be occasioned from the setting in of the south-west monsoon. It brings intelligence to the 12th May. We are concerned to find that the mutinous spirit in the Bengal army has not, as we were induced to hope, been yet quenched. A jemadar of the 34th regiment Bengal Native infantry, it will be recollected, was hanged at Barrackpore on the 20th April for mutinous conduct, as was also one of the Sepoys who wounded Lieutenant Baugh; and it was hoped that these examples of just severity, coupled with the discharge of some of the disaffected Sepoys, and the entire disbanding of the 19th regiment Native infantry, would have had the effect of checking further outbreak, and of restoring a due sense of order and discipline throughout the service. These hopes, we regret to say, have been disappointed. From a telegraphic despatch received at Bombay, just before the departure of the mail, it would appear that the 3rd regiment Bengal Native cavalry were in open mutiny, that the lines and officers' bungalows had been burned down, and that several of the officers and men had been killed and wounded. It appears that a court of inquiry was held at Meerut on the 25th April last, Major Harrison, the judge-advocate, presiding, to investigate the conduct of this regiment with respect to the use of the newly-issued cartridges. The men who were examined stated, we are informed, that they could discern nothing impure in the composition or glazing of the paper, but that they had heard that it was impure, and believed it be so. Further, they expressed contrition for their disobedience in refusing to make use of the cartridges, and their readiness to use them when called to do so again. Yet a few weeks later we hear that this regiment is in open mutiny. It was also reported at Calcutta that a correspondence had been discovered in the possession of a native officer of the 22nd

ARRIVAL OF MAILS.

The Nubia, with a mail, left Calcutta May 4th, Sand Heads 5th, Madras 9th, Point de Galle 13th, and arrived at Suez May 27th. The Madras, with a mail, left Bombay April 12th, and arrived at Aden May 20th. The Cadiz, with the China mail, left Hong-Kong April 26th, Singapore May 3rd, Penang May 5th, and arrived at Point de Galle May 13th. The mails thus brought were taken on to Alexandria; they arrived at Malta June 3rd (per Jura), and Marseilles June 6th (per Cambria). The Jura, with the heavy portion may be expected at Southampton June 9th.

DEPARTURES OF EACH MONTH—MAILS FROM LONDON TO INDIA.

Via Southampton (from London), at 8 o'clock on the morning of the 4th and 20th. It is advisable to post letters in London on the previous evening; if the 4th or 20th be Sunday, then on the evening of the 3rd and 19th.

The Mails for China are despatched under the same regulations, and at the same rate of postage, as those to India.

* * The Marseilles mails of the 10th and 26th overtake the Southampton mails of the 4th and 20th at Malta; from which place they are conveyed by the same vessel.

Bengal Native infantry, proving the existence of a conspiracy for organizing a general rising of the entire army. Excesses of such character doubtless demand prompt repression. It behoves the Government, however, to bear in mind that the suppression of mutiny should be followed up by a speedy but cautious investigation into the causes of the disaffection, and by the adoption of vigilant precautions against its recurrence. If the Sepoy, like the rest of his countrymen, is under the influence of deep prejudices, those prejudices must be scanned with forbearance. Under mild usage he has always proved himself tractable and obedient, and it is both the duty and policy of the Government to see that his officers treat him with consideration and kindness.

From the north-west it was reported that the British mission to Candahar, whose progress by the fort of Koorun, under the escort of Major Lumsden, we noticed in our last, had reached the frontier of the territory appertaining to the southern capital of Afghanistan. It is stated, however, by the Madras Overland Atheneum, that upon attempting to prosecute the journey from Koorun, a force amounting to between six and seven hundred men, belonging to the Kookhee Khail tribe, had assembled for the purpose of barring the further progress of the mission. The fort chief is stated to have sent out five companies of infantry and three hundred horsemen to clear the way; but as no later intelligence than the above had been received, the result of this operation was not known. The same journal observes, "there could have been no more damaging comment on the frightful folly of sending a mission to Dost Mahomed than this event, as it shows that that ruler is powerless to provide for the safety of the gentlemen composing it, and that there are hostile men in sufficient numbers to extinguish it some of these days. The disastrous retreat from Cabul is recalled to one's mind by this transaction, and we may well ask, if the mission is compelled to force its way through the country after this fashion, what will be its fate when the destination is reached, and will it ever return?"

The rumour respecting the death of Gholab Singh gathers strength. It is now repeated by the Delhi Gazette, which hears, that in consequence of the rumour, and the train of events in the kingdom not being clearly foreseen, "officers at Peshawur who had obtained leave to visit Cashmere, have been interdicted from going thither."

A Madras paper announces the death of the Nizam, the ruler of Hyderabad. It appears, however, that that prince, though very ill, was alive on the 1st May. The telegraphic messages received at Bombay from Hyderabad down to the 8th make no mention of the death of the sovereign.

General Ashburnham, with his staff, arrived at Bombay on the 4th May, and, it was expected, would leave for China about the end of the week.

By advices from the Persian Gulf, it would appear that the expeditionary force is to remain within the Persian territory for the space of three months after the ratification of the treaty of peace. By that time, it may be presumed that the frontier city of Herat will have been abandoned by the Persians, and restored to the family of Yar Mahomed. The fact of its restoration must, however, be first ascertained. In the mean time the British troops will be exposed to the enervating influences of an unfavourable climate during the whole of the summer.

The head-quarters, staff, and the first division will remain at Bushire; the second division at Mohammerah.

From Hong Kong the advices are ten days later than those given in our last; but up to the latest date, the 25th April, no fresh operations had taken place in the Canton river. The viceroy, Yeh, is beginning to feel the inevitable consequences of his barbarous and short-sighted policy. Having ruined the trade of Canton, the prime source of his revenue, we are not surprised to hear that he is much embarrassed by want of money. Hopes are entertained that the efforts made to save her Majesty's ship Raleigh, of fifty guns, which we mentioned in our last as having struck on a rock near Macao on her passage from Singapore, will prove successful. The rock on which the Raleigh struck is said not to have been marked on the English charts. At Foo-chow-foo uneasiness had been caused by accounts of disturbances, and the presence of the rebels in the tea districts.

PASSENGERS BY THE PRESENT MAIL.

TO MARSEILLES.—Mr. T. C. Hope, Mr. and Mrs. Scovell, Lieut. Haig, Dr. Murray, Col. Goodwyn, Mr. Purdan, Mr. J. T. Barnes, Maj. Roberts, Mr. J. P. Blumb, Mr. Gordon, Mr. T. and Mrs. Pycroft and two children; Lieut.-Col. E. H. Atkinson, and Mr. Ross.

CASUALTIES BY DEATH IN THE ARMIES OF INDIA REPORTED SINCE OUR LAST PUBLICATION.

BENGAL.—Lieut.-Gen. C. R. Skardon, 44th Bengal N.I., at Hastings, aged 72, May 29; Lieut.-Col. E. Pratt, H.M.'s 9th Lancers, on board the Gosforth, April 8.

MADRAS.—Ensign C. Mellish, 5th N.I., at Berhampore, April 19.

INDIGO PLANTERS' ASSOCIATION.—Proceedings of meeting of the central committee of the Calcutta Indigo Planters' Association held April 25; Sir Albert Larpent in the chair. The acting secretary stated, that he wished for the opinion of the meeting as to the expediency or otherwise of obtaining from the Theobald deputation committee information respecting Mr. Theobald's movements and proceedings in London, with a view to circulate such information among the Mofussil members of the association. The acting secretary having previously obtained the permission of chairman of the Theobald deputation committee, placed before the meeting the letters received from Mr. Theobald, detailing his proceedings since his arrival in London. The letters were therefore read, and it appeared by his last letter that Mr. Theobald is preparing and printing for circulation in India a summary of his statements and arguments submitted to the President of the Board of Control, and other gentlemen, and that copies of his pamphlet will most probably arrive by the next steamer, it was considered advisable to wait until the pamphlets arrive. A member then referred to the correspondence that has lately taken place between the Chamber of Commerce and the Bengal Government respecting the Eastern Canals, and suggested that the Government of Bengal, as also the Government of India, be addressed on the subject, and urged to complete the new canal. The matter was discussed, and the acting secretary was requested to place himself in communication with the Government of Bengal and the Government of India on the subject as soon as possible, with the view of impressing on the Government the absolute necessity of their completing the canal or of throwing open its completion to private enterprise, if, as is reported, they are unable from want of funds to finish it themselves.

BENGAL.

HOW ANNEXATION PAYS.

It is a generally received maxim at home that the people are wiser than their rulers. Government is not only slow to embody new truths in practice, but the last to apprehend their significance and value in theory. The ablest minister is the demagogue's latest convert; the policy of to-day was advocated a score of years back. And like sunshine, the wisdom comes, as it were, without human help. Social instinct—law of progress—manifest destiny—call it what we will, the force that urges nations onwards comes from below, and not from above. It is at first a groundswell, and not a surface-current. Men are moved by it long before they can understand the nature of the impulse; the boat drifts on the voyage before the oars can be put out and the rudder got to act. The tide that flows without thinking, the skiff that must float with it, the helm that can only guide when the crew do their appointed work; how these typify the labour of our countrymen, the governors and the governed, at home and abroad! How it abates the pride of caste to discern the community of error! how charitable we can afford to be when it is found that we are all in the wrong!

A despatch from the Court of Directors half a century ago, urging the Government of India to enforce the law against adventurers, and a modern speech against the policy of annexation, stand in the same category of foolishness, the instincts of trade were wiser than the maxims of authority, the list of eastern exports furnishes the best argument for the increase of our dominion. We have heard enough of what a favoured few amongst the conquering race have gained by the extension of the red line on the map of Asia; let us now compute the profit, if any, that has been realized by the subject masses, and endeavour to strike a fair balance.

It is about thirty years since we obtained a footing on the eastern coast of the Bay of Bengal, and five years since Pegu became a British dependency. During this period, civilians and soldiers have had opportunities of distinguishing themselves at the expense of native lives and native treasure and at this moment the country, from Akyab to Maulmain pays for the security of life and property, for trade and teaching, say half a million sterling per annum. Let the whole truth be known as to the inefficiency of our courts of law, and the sternness with which revenue demands are enforced. Say that the police do not always protect; that the schools teach no good thing; and that our Christianity, like our wares in general, is bartered less for the profit of the receiver than for the advantage of the vendor. Still, it is a fact that for all which we do, to say nothing of what we only profess to accomplish, the charge to the three provinces is but fifty lakhs of rupees. That sum represents the entire wages paid to England for the labour of governing. What do we pay, on the other hand, for the privilege of trading with them? We are speaking of a single strip of coast, and are content to allude to a single article of export.

Two hundred and fifty thousand tons of rice were shipped last year from the Eastern coast of the Bay of Bengal. The average cost of the grain at Akyab was 5*l.* 10*s.*, and at the other ports 4*l.* per ton; the aggregate sum paid to the dealers amounting to 1,150,000*l.* Under the Burmese rule, the average rate would have realised for the same export, 150,000*l.*, and hence the extra million was clear gain. In other words, the people pay nothing for houses or lands, for soldiers or schooling. We return the whole amount of their taxation, with a bonus of 50 per cent. in addition.

And this marvellous change in the condition of the country is the work not of generations, but of a few years in the case of Arracan, and scarcely more than a few months in the case of Pegu. The distinguished man who has just vacated the post of Governor General's agent, which he has held so long in the latter province with signal credit to himself, has witnessed the progress of it from the beginning. He has seen in Rangoon and Bassin the cultivator leap from poverty to wealth almost at a single bound, and heard him express, in the fulness of his heart, his sense of happiness at the prospect of being held permanently in subjection.

Turn from Pegu to the Punjab; compare the current values of eastern exports in the markets of the world with the prices obtained in the time of native dominion, and then judge if annexation has not been more profitable to the people of every state than to their foreign rulers. If it is urged that for this result we deserve no credit, since it was not contemplated in the scheme of conquest, still it is not the less a fact, that the all but universal boon is only to be enjoyed under European domination. It is idle to suppose that in this part of the world trade is independent of politics. Commerce will open a bridge path through the thickest jungle, but it is the soldier who makes the broad highway, and the anniversaries which Exeter Hall would observe in sackcloth and ashes are marked with a white stone in the annals of the subject nations.

We cannot, if we would, impart to the people of Asia our institutions and ideas, the exigencies of civilisation will not permit us to tolerate their kings and nobles; but in lieu of the independence which was never more than transitory, we give absolute security, and enforce the observance of laws which are at least better than native codes. And to high and low we open the gates that lead to wealth, and offer a career which affords scope for the exercise of every faculty. For the first time in the history of the East the masses have had a beneficial interest in the Government, for it is the lordship of England that has affiliated them to the industry and riches of the Western world. The zemindar who owns a hundred miles of land, and the peasant whose little store of rice is the sum of all his possessions, are equally concerned in the maintenance of our rule, for with them it means peace such as was never before enjoyed, and prosperity to which there appears no limit.

And we may safely endorse the belief in the exhaustless extent of European wants and resources. There is a limit to the power of production, but there would seem to be no bounds to the faculty of consumption. The more that is sent forward, the greater the demand; the supply creates the want. Hitherto competition has excited fears and hatred, but now it is welcomed wherever the true interest of trade is understood. The soldiers of commerce fight a common battle, and must help each other to gain a common victory.

We look to the future of the East with deep satisfaction. Our countrymen have to atone for past shortcomings by new conquests, and the duty is not likely to be neglected. There is much of wrong to be repaired in the old dependencies, but in the new territory we start fair. We have yet to put the presidencies on the footing of Pegu, Arracan, and the Punjab, and when that is done, we may claim absolution for Clive and Wellesley, for Napier and Dalhousie. The evil that they have wrought is transitory, the good evolved from their actions will continue multiplying, so long as England holds her place in the universe.—Friend of India.

THE UNCOVENANTED SERVICE.

A few days ago we noticed that a proposition had been made by Mr. Dorin to import from England men to fill the various subordinate posts in the Uncovenanted Service. We regret that such a proposition has been made, as we think it one, the carrying out of which would involve a vast deal of suffering to the body from which the ranks of that service are ordinarily recruited.

There has been of late a tendency to overrate the value of Europeans, and to depreciate that of East-Indians, which has been productive of a good deal of injustice to the latter, and given them a juster ground than usual for representing themselves as a grievously oppressed body.

Up to this time, the tendency has manifested itself in a comparatively unimportant manner. This last blow, however, is of a very different nature. If it fell with full effect it would cut away at once all that supports perhaps three-fourths of the entire body of East-Indians, and involve them in inextricable ruin. Such a fate would be entirely undeserved, and we feel confident that Government has too just an appreciation of the claims of these men to sanction the proposed measure. The claims of the class in question we are by no means inclined to over-estimate, believing, as we do, that a directly truthful and moderate statement of them is not alone the safest, but that it is the only way in which they can hope to obtain ample justice, and that the extravagant demands which have been made in their behalf have retarded rather than accelerated a recognition of their just rights. That their position is not without its hardships cannot be denied, but that those hardships have been in many instances grossly exaggerated is equally undeniable.

We hear and read a great deal of the extraordinary prejudice entertained by Europeans generally against this class, but we look in vain for any evidence of its existence. Much of it is purely mythical,—where it does exist it is almost exclusively confined to men of weak and vulgar minds, and being so, cannot be productive of any injurious effect. People when they conceive an idea, rarely find much difficulty in heaping up a mass of what they consider to be conclusive evidence of the truth of their supposition; and we can readily imagine that many of the instances, which have been cited to prove the existence of this prejudice, are traceable to the cause which we have already glanced at, viz., a natural desire on the part of Englishman in this country to have their countrymen, rather than strangers, around them. This is a feeling which may exist in, and be yielded to, by a man, however cordial his appreciation of the good qualities of his new countrymen, and we are firmly persuaded that the great majority of East-Indians, if left to themselves, would gladly adopt such an easy and satisfactory solution of the matter.

There are persons, however, who find it their interest to fish in troubled waters, and to earn a comfortable, though hardly a reputable living, by ministering to the evil passions of a class. It may be urged that it makes no very material difference whether the preference given to Europeans, in the cases to which we have alluded, results from a partiality of feeling on the part of their countrymen, or from a prejudice against East Indians. It does make this very important difference, that if attributable to the former cause it would merely make itself evident in places where the influence of one man, or a small body of men, was all powerful; while, if traceable to the latter, it would pervade every branch of the service, both public and private. That it does not prevail in the latter will be evident to any one who takes the trouble of examining the rolls of the Uncovenanted Service. As far as practicable, we should like to find posts in the public service filled by East-Indians, whose priority of right, founded upon their being natives of the country, we have ever most cheerfully granted. Beyond a certain point we do not think it possible, nor desirable, to go at present; but we feel convinced that, in the space of a very few years, the measures which are now in progress for the diffusion of learning amongst the different races in this country will exhibit their grandest and most successful result, in a marked advance of East-Indians in intellectual power, and, as a necessary consequence, in an improvement in their social status. There is no lack of ability in their ranks, but they are strikingly deficient in energy generally speaking; and if the hopes of a brilliant future for the race, which are now entertained, prove deceitful, to this deficiency will their failure be justly ascribed.—Hurkaru.

A STAFF CORPS.

There is one point connected with the formation of a staff corps on which some misapprehension appears to exist in the public mind. It is assumed that such a change in the existing arrangements must be most expensive, and that it must still leave our regiments to be commanded by men who have had no regimental experience. Both objections seem to be the result of an incomplete apprehension of the plan proposed.

The popular plan at this moment is to strike off every officer selected for the staff from the regimental list, and fill up his place at once. Such a plan obviously would add greatly to the expense of the army. We should have instead of twenty-two from twenty-eight to thirty officers for every regiment, an expenditure the finances would scarcely be able to endure. But this proposal assumes that the strength of officers on a regiment is never to be reduced. The most experienced officers in the country, however, hold that, provided every soldier remained permanently with his corps, the strength might with safety be reduced. Suppose, for instance, that the twenty-two officers were reduced to sixteen; there would still be a commanding officer, an adjutant, one officer for each of eight companies, and four supernumeraries to supply the place of absentees on sick leave or on a furlough.

This would leave six officers, the present average, available for civil employ without increased cost. Meanwhile, the regiment would always, except in the event of unusual sickness, be adequately supplied with men who could never leave it, who must from sheer want of occupation attend to their soldiers, and who aware that their own profession offered the only chance of distinction or reward, would devote themselves to a study of its necessities. That unhealthy craving for staff employ which now sends the ablest of the service to civil work, or leaves them with their regiments discontented, would be finally abolished. They must live with their regiments, and the work which a man must do—the life task before him—is pretty sure to be tolerably done. Of course in such a revised organization we do not contemplate colonels living in England on full pay, useful only to interrupt younger men in their progress to brigade and divisional commands. Nor do we look forward to the perpetual existence of that fifth wheel of a coach, the regimental major, without duties or responsibilities, and useful only to fill up accidental gaps, which may be supplied as well by the senior captain.

A regiment thus officered would leave funds enough, not only for the staff corps, but for that redistribution of pay, which if the funds continue to be mismanaged, if expensive luxuries like bands continue in vogue, and if prices increase at their present rate, will soon be indispensable to the solvency of the army. Nor can we perceive that there would in consequence be any diminution of efficient strength. There are rarely more than ten officers present with a regiment. Even in a campaign, the number seldom rises above sixteen, and the small loss on service would be amply compensated by the improved tone of the remainder, the revived confidence between them and their sepoys.

As to the second point, we fail to perceive the necessity that men who devote their lives to administrative employ, should still be considered soldiers. Their pay and rank may run on, as the easiest mode of securing them a minimum of allowances, social status, privileges of leave and furlough. But there is no necessity for permitting them to resume regimental duty. They usually themselves regard a call which summons them to unaccustomed duties as an inconvenience. In their regiments they are of necessity almost useless.

There is no charm in the name of Colonel which can enable a man who has for thirty years never put on uniform, perhaps never mounted a horse, at once to assume command of a regiment. Many staff officers have never done any duty except in the one or two years during which, as escaped schoolboys, they learnt the mysteries of the goose-step. Every man in the ranks knows how the business of regiments so commanded is usually transacted. If there be a smart adjutant, the routine work is well done. If there be a lax adjutant, the routine work is badly done. But well or ill, there is nothing else done. To introduce improvements, to raise the tone of a lax regiment, to impart a high military spirit to men half out of order, is beyond the power of any officer of the kind. One or two commissioners may be possessed of the instinctive military genius which his friends attribute to Sir H. Lawrence, but we speak of the mass. What can a soldier who has been all his life teaching irregular verbs, like Col. Marshall, or mathematics, like the head of the Poona college, or reforming revenue details, like Major Phayre, know of the management of a regiment, any more than any other schoolmaster or collector? All India would laugh at the idea of sending Mr. Clint, or Mr. Thwaytes, or an old member of the Sudder board, to command a regiment. Why was it less ridiculous to send Col. Marshall?

It is often objected to this plan that staff officers wish to remain soldiers, that they dislike to lose the opportunity of distinction. The answer to this is simple. They cannot have what they like. If they prefer military glory let them stick to the red coat. If they prefer pay, a broader field of action, a larger space in the public eye, they must resign honours to comrades who look on them as their only reward. It may be prejudice, but we confess we do not see the fairness of an officer who has held high civil employ for a quarter of a century, putting himself into a battle with which he had no concern, and claiming for that act of disinterestedness a K.C.B. A knighted commissioner, not so long since, did that very thing. The staff officers must make their choice, between the bit of ribbon, and the bank balance, the momentary if magnificent excitement of battle, and the continuous interest an administrative officer with brains must feel in his work.

The immediate effect of such a plan, we submit, would be to give us a valuable administrative corps composed as at present without increase of expense; to leave the army with sufficient and sufficiently qualified officers, and to place at the head of every regiment on service an officer, who, whatever his defects, could not be lacking in experience.—Friend of India.

MAJOR LAUGHTON AND LIEUTENANT CHESNEY.

We heard months ago of a committee being appointed to investigate certain charges made by Major Laughton, superintending engineer, second Punjab circle, against Lieutenant Chesney, executive engineer. We have never heard of any progress having been made in the inquiry, and we now find that the delay has been caused by the prosecutor himself, who neglects to come forward to prove his case. We are certain that the Government cannot be aware of the injustice which they are permitting by not compelling an immediate settlement of the matters in dispute.

It would be an unprofitable task to enter into particulars of the controversy between the two officers. It commenced three years ago, when Major Laughton was superintending engineer of the Grand Trunk Road, and Lieutenant Chesney had charge of the Puttiala district. Since that time Lieutenant Chesney has been continually calling for an inquiry, which he had the more right to insist upon, since his denial of the charges made against himself involved charges against Major Laughton, which the Government were bound not to overlook. Sir John Lawrence at last consented that an inquiry should take place; but, with a most singular misconception of the duties of an impartial governor, he directed that Major Laughton should be required to bring forward only such charges as he chose, leaving any number of injurious statements or insinuations neither established nor withdrawn, and open to any opinion which any person might choose to form of them. A direct reference to the Supreme Government, however, had the effect of causing an order to be issued, directing that Major Laughton should, once for all, bring forward everything he had to say against Lieutenant Chesney, and that the court should investigate the whole of the charges.

One would have fancied, that so admirable an opportunity to establish the case, would have been at once seized. But here the difficulties on the part of the prosecution seem to have begun. Lieutenant Chesney was kept waiting at Umballa for six weeks after the date appointed, before the proceedings were commenced. The delays thrown in the way were of a most vexatious character. First, two of the members of the committee were objected to as being inexperienced, notwithstanding that they were members of a Court which had just finished investigating Major Laughton's charges against Captain Grindall, which duty they had performed in a manner that had obtained the high approval of the chief engineer. Then, the prosecutor found that he could not prepare his case without legal assistance, which, we believe, was refused to him, or should have been if it was not. At last, after some other objections by which, as in the case of the preceding ones, the prosecutor gained nothing but time, the case was commenced, and the prosecutor brought forward, as capable of proof, only two out of the scores of charges which he had made at various times. One of these charges, moreover, was worded in so invidious a manner, was so mixed up with insinuation, and other extraneous matter, that the committee rejected it in its existing form. Colonel Fraser approved of the rejection; but Sir John Lawrence over-ruled both the chief engineer and the committee, and declared that the charge should stand. And, as this was not the first instance of interference with the course of justice from the same quarter, Major Cobbe, the president of the committee, resigned his post in disgust.

At this crisis—whether from the effect of his active exertions in bringing forward the case, or from some other causes, we cannot say—the prosecutor has found it necessary to go upon the sick list, taking his charges with him of course, and when he will go off the list and on with his charges it is difficult to say. Perhaps he will get sick leave, and take the charges up to the hills with him, in order to increase their soundness and strength. Perhaps he will take his furlough, and take the charges home with him, in order to give them a constitutional airing, and the benefit of the best legal advice. All this is possible. But the general opinion is, that Major Laughton does not want to proceed with the charges at all, and that his object from the first, has been to let the affair drop, in which object he was assisted by Sir John Lawrence, until the inquiry was forced upon the pair.

This would have been by far the best way of settling the matter, had Major Laughton withdrawn the statements and insinuations which he so freely made. But, it was due to Lieut. Chesney's character, that either the one course or the other should be taken. As it is, Lieut. Chesney is kept waiting at Umballa, upon half allowances, until Major Laughton shall happen to be in a state of health and inclination to take another false step in the matter. What would be the length of that period if determined by Major Laughton and Sir John Lawrence, it would be difficult to say. But we should fancy that the Supreme Government would need only a hint of this gross abuse of subordinate authority, to give a healthy impetus to the proceedings which would render justice to all concerned.—Hurkaru.

MHAIRWARA IN MINIATURE.

Travelers' stories have long since yielded to the powers of steam and of the electric telegraph. We hear no more of an "adversum mare," an uphill sea,—or of an "ultima thule," the natives of which hear the hissing of the sun as, after the toils of the day, he bathes in the ocean. These lying wonders have gone by, and their place is filled, and worthily filled, by facts as strange as any which the gullibility of our forefathers credited. There are still spots unknown to fame, where the silent hand of improvement is hastening that time when the earth shall be cultivated as a garden, and the wilderness shall in its turn suffer invasion from the tilled field. Very few of our readers have heard of the Thurr and Parkar districts, or a people inhabiting those districts, who besought the English resident not to leave the country, or to deliver them to the Government of the Rao of Kutch. We, living in Bengal, are apt only to regard the spots and moles upon the face of our Government, and to lose its manliness of form in the ugliness of some of its features. This, we are happy to say, is not the case of all in India. There are many who regard the Company's administration as the plank which alone separates them from the waters of tyranny and confusion.

Geographically, the districts of Thurr and Parkar are nothing more than the southern extremity of the great desert which, from the Ruin of Kutch to Ferozepoor, separates the valley of the Indus from the rest of India. These districts, bounded on the north by the great desert, on the south by the Ruin, on the east by Marwar and an arm of the Ruin, and on the west by an almost uninhabitable tract which separates them from the fertile district of Lower Sind, are in their geological formation and physical appearance essentially distinct. The Thurr, composed of sand-hills shaped, probably by volcanic action, like the waves of the sea, is, in the south, covered with coarse nutritious grass. In the Parkar district, which is situated to the south-east of the Thurr, and forms a sort of peninsula jutting into the Ruin, rocks of primitive formation take the place of sand-hills. The population of Thurr, according to the estimate of Lieutenant Raikes, amounts to 23,700. Of these, 13,700 are Hindoos, and 10,000 Mussulmans. Parkar contains 26 villages, and about 10,700 inhabitants. The staple commodities are ghee, gum, googul, and grain which is exported to Kutch. Antiquarian remains, and tradition point to a period when the inhabitants of these districts were under a strong government, and when they were much more advanced in civilization than at present. Till within the last few years, however, they have only been known to their neighbours as robbers and cattle-lifters. A change has been effected, and they are now as orderly and quiet as they were before lawless and restless. This has been brought about by Captain (now Colonel) Roberts at the time he was in command of a body of irregulars forming part of the Kaswa detachment, who will take his place amongst that band of Indian administrators the utility of whose works have only been equalled by the silent and unassuming manner of their performance. To the value of Captain Roberts' services Mr. Frere, the commissioner of Sind, whose report is now before us, bears impartial testimony. He says:—

"A complete history of Colonel Roberts' proceedings would form an instructive chapter in that most interesting portion of future Indian history which will record the gradual civilization of the wilder parts of India by its English conquerors. He appears to have guided the operations of the detachment with a sagacity and vigour which secured the invariable success of his operations, while he used the influence acquired as a daring sportsman and a successful soldier, to give to the wretched people about him their first experience of power used for other purposes than tyranny and oppression, and of intelligence directed to protect the right and punish the wrong-doer."

On the conquest of Sind much alarm was created by the rumour that these districts were to be governed from Hyderabad. The principal men accordingly went in a body to Colonel Roberts, then resident at Bhooj, and requested that they might be governed by him. Their petition was forwarded to the governor of Sind. As the resident of Bhooj was then subject to the government of Sind, no more politic arrangement could have been made. Colonel Roberts accordingly set himself to effect three objects: 1st, To raise a body of irregular horse, to perform the duties of police; 2nd, To provide some means of subsistence for the Soda Chiefs; 3rd, To abolish the transit duties. The abolition of the transit duties was a great boon. In seasons which formerly would have been years of famine, and in which all the inhabitants would have left the country; now a few men only leave, and feed their families, who remain behind, with imported grain. To the chiefs grants of land have been given with the best effect. The Thurr and Parkar districts are now far from useless possessions. They are great cattle-breeding districts, and afford a direct line of passage to the trade between Manvaree and Marwar. The expenses, however, of the Thurr and Parkar districts considerably exceed their income. In 1853-54 the Revenue was 6,515 Rs., expenditure 42,794, leaving a deficit of 36,279 Rs. In 1854-55, the revenue was 7,172, and the deficit Rs. 28,220 in 1854. On this account, there was in 1854 a proposition to make the Government of these districts over to the Rao of Kutch. When this became known to the inhabitants, they said "that the supposed wish of the government to get relieved from so unprofitable an acquisition was not unreasonable, that the Rao was an excellent ruler, and that they had great confidence in his governing them with justice—but that he was mortal, and they had no guarantee for the character of his successor; that they had been for many years under the British government, in the enjoyment of such a degree of peace and good government of which the memory of man, in their remote corner of the world, afforded no precedent; person and property were more secure than in any of the provinces around; and they wound up with the most urgent prayer that Government would leave them under Lieut. Raikes, and not sell them to any one; neither to the Rao of Kutch nor to their own chiefs collectively, nor to any one of them." On this point the chiefs and the people were unanimous.

The Government, we are glad to say, complied with their wishes. They did not sell their subjects either to the Rao of Kutch or to anarchy. They recognized their destiny, and were as ready to fulfil it when at a loss to themselves as when to their own immediate advantage. And what political Cobden, whose sole estimate of patriotism and generosity is what they will bring in the market, will say that Government have acted wrongly in fulfilling their trust, and refusing to desert these poor people. What English fanatic with such facts as these staring him in the face will not acknowledge our Eastern rule to be a blessing, will deny that the sooner our influence extends over China so much the better will it be for a nation whose spawning power and industry but preserves their existence in the internal sea of fraud, violence, and cruelty in which they are immersed.—Friend of India.

THE CIVIL SERVICE.

A day or two ago we published some specimens of the orthography of the "competition wallahs" for the Civil Service at home. They are finer—in a comic sense—that anything of the kind we have seen in India, including the instance of the major who obtained a painful degree of notoriety about two years ago for habitually spelling the word "rabbit" with only one b. But they are altogether beaten out of the field by the historical blunders of these youths of parts, who long to be small placeholders. We publish some of these modern instances as given by the commissioners:—

"To remove, say they, any possible impression that we may have, in these divisions, assumed too high a standard, we think it right to state that some of the answers in history which were presented to us in the papers of the rejected candidates were such as these—namely, that 'the Star Chamber consisted of twelve members, whose business it was to invent torments for the prisoners whom they thought were against the safety of the country;' that 'trials of ordeal were employed in the trial of Warren Hastings, and were legally prohibited in the reign of George I.;' that 'George II. is the sovereign to whom the name of the English Justinian has been sometimes applied;' that 'Marlborough fought a battle against the Spanish Armada, and completely destroyed it in Elizabeth's reign (1588 to 1563);' that 'Hotspur was the principal leader of the army in the reign of Henry VIII., 1509;' that 'Richard II. was a bad king, who, after arranging the peace of Versailles, entered into a second treaty with the King of France;' that 'the Roman walls in England were built to keep the Tartars from invading the country;' that 'the great plot which was discovered in the year 1678 was the South Sea scheme;' that 'William Wallace invaded England in the reign of Henry VIII.;' that 'the battle of Culloden was between the Earl of Leicester and Edward IV., and Marston Moor between Bruce and Edward IV.;' that 'in the Seven Years' War the Danes were opposed to the Britons in consequence of the massacre of the former Sovereign;' that 'the Thirty Years' War was between England and America in consequence of the unjust taxation;' that 'the war of succession was that between the Pretender and George I.;' that 'Bannockburn was a battle in which the Scots were defeated,' and 'Marston Moor a contest between the Roses.'"

We fancy that an irruption of Indian youths into the Home Civil Service has never been contemplated, and therefore no measures have been taken to keep them out. We mention this as a hint to Young Bengal, the youngest of whom would beat any of the above answers by chalks of no ordinary length. We had an opportunity, the other day, of seeing some answers given to random questions from English History, by the students of the Hindoo Metropolitan College; and we are assured that, if they have only to fear competition of the above kind, they might take their passage by next mail, and walk into any of the "open" offices where there was a vacancy, and perch themselves upon their high stools at once, without any chance of being eventually dislodged. We should be glad to see an onslaught of this kind made by some of the aspiring youths in this city, and can assure them that Government employment in England would be a much pleasanter position for them—as well as for us—than that of an Indian doctor or a judge, in either of which situations Europeans wish to have as little to do with them as possible.—Hurkaru.

THE CAUSES OF MUTINY.

The following is from a marching correspondent of the Englishman:—

The mutinies, and the mutinous spirit in the line regiments of the Bengal native army, have not been caused by pig's fat, or bullocks' suet, or fear of conversion to Christianity, or of loss of caste; nor by anything else recently springing up in the mind or the apprehension of the native soldiery, Hindoo or Mussulman; but they have been caused by the Government, which is now naturally perplexed and alarmed by them; that Government which General Hearsey, the other day, in his speech to the misguided mutineers and the brigade at Barrackpore, truly, and without exaggeration characterized as "the most just, and kind, and liberal to its soldiers and servants, in the world." Here, then, you will say, is a fatal incongruity to commence with! No such thing. Have a little patience; it is the very pith and pivot of my explanation. When I say that the Government has caused these mutinous outbreaks, and is very deeply responsible for them, I do so on a principle which can never be fairly set aside, or ignored in cases where a Government administers its military affairs, as almost all free Governments must, through intermediate instruments or officials acting between the State and its soldiers for the former, and over the latter. This principle is the well-known one that "qui fecit per alium, fecit per se;" the application of which in the present lamentable state of affairs as regards the Bengal regiments, I will proceed to explain. During the last twenty years or more, the Indian Government, acting through the instrumentality, and accepting and sanctioning the acts and orders of the general officers of the Queen's army, commanding that of Bengal, has been steadily and perseveringly mining the character of the Bengal sepoy, and in the vain and ignorant endeavour to assimilate him to the British soldier, has changed the simple, obedient, and humble sepoy of former times into a cunning, intractable, litigious, and self-sufficient armed man. These general officers, totally and profoundly ignorant of the native character, have, by a series of concessions, grants, indulgences, and flatteries, by humouring every whim and caprice, and even by anticipating or inventing all kinds of claims and privileges, so raised the ignorant sepoy in his own opinion and estimate, that he has at length learned to look upon himself as the employer of the Government, an item in the aggregate of a military dictatorship, the master, not the servant of the State. He has been pampered into insolence, flattered into very unfounded pride, and bribed into doing his duty by pecuniary largesses; and even history itself has been made to lie, in order to turn his head, and urge him into a position false as regards himself, and dangerous to the State which he has sworn to serve, and the officers which he is bound to obey. The sepoy is, like every one else, subject to the impulses of human nature, and consequently is ready at a moment to assume a position higher than he is entitled to, especially when urged and coerced into it by those whose duty it is to keep him at his proper level; and it is their fault, not his, if, ignorant and semi-barbarous, he is drawn into false ideas of his own importance and power by mistaken indulgence and uncalled-for concessions, until he no longer recognizes or recollects his real position and intrinsic insignificance. Any other soldier, or any other class of society similarly treated would be similarly spoiled; and here let me observe, in passing, as the solution of the question so often and so warmly discussed in the journals and military circles of this presidency, viz. whether or not the Bengal sepoy of the present day has deteriorated from the sepoy of former days? The man has not changed, the system has; and the change has ruined the soldier. The sepoy who now enlists, is, at the time of enrolment, the same as was his father or his grandsire, ignorant, primitive rustic, simple, and ready for any impression; but the impressions he receives now-a-days on entering the lines of his regiment, are very different indeed from those which impinged upon the mind of his father or grandfather; and the ruin of his character as a good and useful soldier commences from the day he takes the oath of fidelity to the best and most liberal of masters. Formerly the sepoy saw, on first joining his regiment, a commanding officer invested with almost summary power and authority; feared, respected, and almost invariably beloved and looked up to; supporting, and supported by subordinate officers, whose favour or disapprobation influenced the fate and welfare of every sepoy who came under their orders, control or notice; and in his lines he heard these officers, the service, and the Government, spoken of with deference, respect, and fear. It pains me to reverse the picture, and sketch the relative position of the rustic just enlisted now-a-days into a native regiment of the line in the Bengal army. He sees a colonel with scarce the slightest power to punish or reward, officers who can neither promote nor degrade, stripped of all supremacy and of all the privileges which elevated them formerly in the eyes of their soldiers,—mere automata to carry out the forms of a lax and ridiculed discipline, rendered nerveless by the paralyzing influence of army headquarters. These officers represent the Government in the eyes of the sepoy: need anything more be said on this point? It has, then, been the policy of the Government, acting through the commander-in-chief of the royal army, steadily to depress for many years past, and to strip of all the privileges that elevated them in the eyes of their soldiers, the officers of the native army of Bengal; and it has, through the same agency, simultaneously carried out the policy of pampering, flattering, and fooling the sepoy to the top of his bent, and to overflowing, as at Berhampore and Barrackpore. Never on earth was effect more certain from cause, than that the steady depression of the sepoy officer which has been studiously carried out for the last twenty years or more, and the senseless pampering of the sepoy himself, would end, as they now have, sooner or later, and turn the ignorant and low-born rustics and villagers of Oude into praetorian mutineers, flying in the face of the Government, alarming the country, and endangering the British empire in India.

But the military secretaries, and other such advisers of the Government, who have been during this time mainly instrumental in reversing the position of the officers and soldiers of the native army, conceived and represented that the sepoy would see with pleasure his officer stripped of all his power and his few privileges; and that he would also understand, appreciate, and receive in a proper spirit of humility and gratitude, the novel indulgences, immunities, and even largesses, conferred upon himself. Never was a greater error. The good old sepoy of former days saw with regret his officer gradually deprived of all the attributes of authority, and of all those regimental privileges, which, in times gone by, kept him and his soldiers in constant contact and association; and to the present moment he cannot, like an Asiatic as he is, attribute to any other motive but fear, indulgences of which he never dreamed, favours now assumed to be rights, and concessions which have ended in mutiny. A sepoy cannot look further than his officer. He sees the Government in him, and through him. It was not wise to degrade the medium of vision; and in lowering the representative, to destroy the reverence for the represented. It has been asked, how is it that the irregular regiments have taken no part in the recent mutinies, and appear to be loyal and untainted? They are loyal and untainted, and the reason is obvious. The irregulars are still, as regards the officer and the soldier, somewhat like what native infantry regiments of the Bengal army were in times gone by; the former has present power and prospective influence; the soldier obeys and likes him, and they are in constant association together. Is not the example most apposite and to point, taken as it is from the very circumstances of these unfortunate and deplorable mutinies? You and other editors have blamed the staff system, and the paucity of officers with native infantry regiments, as the cause of these mutinies; but, believe me, you are mistaken, and that a thousand cypher officers in each regiment would in no way check the disease, which lies not in fat or suet, but deeper in an evil system, and an army ruined by pampering and indulgence. I, however, am one of those who see in almost all agitation or commotion something ultimately productive of benefit and amelioration, of improvement for that which is im-provable, of dissolution for that which is unsound and bad; and I shall rejoice at, rather than regret, these mutinies, if, as I anticipate, they should hasten the moment when the days of the Bengal sepoy as at present constituted shall be numbered, and his power of mischief and turbulence at an end. I assert that the mischief is now irradicable; that this mutinous spirit will manifest itself again on pretences as trivial as those put forward on the present occasion; and I only hope that the appeal to arms may not hereafter be raised upon wider and higher grounds than pigs' fat, bullock's suet, or coloured cartridges. It is time, then, and it deeply behoves the British and Indian Governments, to prepare the counterpoise, and be ready with their resources. Every one will understand what I mean. The native army must be rendered obviously subordinate, auxiliary, powerless for successful mutiny or mischief, and repressible or frangible in a moment.

THE DISCONTENT AMONG THE SOLDIERS.

THE 3RD CAVALRY AT MEERUT are in open mutiny. They have burnt down the lines and officers' bungalows. Several officers and men killed and wounded; names unknown.

On the 23rd of April, Col. Smyth, commanding the 3rd cav., ordered a parade of the skirmishers of his regiment with carbines, to show them the new way of loading, without biting the cartridge, thinking the men would be much pleased to hear of it. He had the havildar major and the havildar major's orderly at his house to show them how it was to be done; the latter fired off a carbine twice; and at night his tent was burnt down, and also a horse hospital close to the magazine, and at ten o'clock at night, Colonel Smyth was informed that some of the men would not receive their cartridges, and one officer wished him to put off the parade; but considering it would be giving in to the men, and supposing they would think better of it by the morning, this was not done.

The men assembled on the parade; the havildar major fired off one cartridge to show them how it was to be done, but out of 90 men, only five would receive the cartridges, though they were the very same they had been using the whole season, and not the new cartridges! The circumstance was immediately reported to the officer commanding the station, and 85 men have been put off duty, and ordered to remain in their lines; and it is to be hoped the Commander-in-Chief will order them all to be dismissed the service. A court of inquiry has been ordered by the general.

UMBALLAH, APRIL 21.—“For some days rumour had it that the sepoys were dissatisfied, and would not receive the cartridges when the time came to offer them. About 8 P.M., 16th, an alarm of fire was given, and found to proceed from the N.I. hospital that was given over to the European portion of the musketeers, and vacated by them but a few days ago, when they proceeded to join their regiments. The artillery and 9th lancers' engines were sent to the spot (from 1 to 1½ miles from their lines); I cannot vouch for the truth, as I was not on the spot, but hear that the sepoys were very apathetic in endeavouring to put the fire out. About half-past ten the engines returned, and as nearly everybody had made up their mind that this was only the beginning of a series of fires, we were on the qui vive: about two or three,

A.M., alarm was again given, and the fire was found to be at the 2nd barrack (from the left) European infantry lines, in which were 400 hogsheds of beer. The fire commenced at the rear end next the N.I. lines. The station engines played on the other barracks to prevent their catching fire, and sepoys and Europeans worked well; it was useless trying to save the barrack on fire; about twenty casks of beer only were saved; they were dragged out by hooks and chains, well scorched. The wise people said that it was the intent to harass the Europeans, and when the lancers were at the infantry barracks, to fire the lancers' barracks, which would bring out the artillery to the rescue, and then fire the artillery barracks.

17th.—During the day orders were issued that no man except the fire picquet was to leave his barracks when the alarm sounded. A mounted and dismounted picquet of the 9th were held in readiness. 8.30 P.M. The alarm sounded through the lines. Lieut. Whiting's bungalow (empty) on fire, Col. Yule and his troops went down and patrolled the station; 3 A.M., some butts in the Sepoy lines on fire; soon out. 18th. Line parade for General Order about the Sepoys Bhoolleall Tewarrey and Bhubadur Sing, all quiet this night. 19th. The cartridges are to be served out to-morrow to the musketry Depôt, they are to grease them themselves; 8 P.M., a fire at the 60th Lines (said to be) Captain Coare's stables—1 A.M., the huts beyond the bridge on the Telegraph Road, near where the Chobham camp lay, on fire; the 9th lancers' picquet were patrolling in the E. I. Lines, and galloped to the spot; the two sowers on duty there, or living there, were made prisoners; the picquet of the 4th lancers and sepoy guard soon after arrived, and saw the fire out. Next morning (20th) the two prisoners sent to the Cantonment Magistrate; since the fire at the beer godown, a chain of sepoy sentries are posted round the E. I. barracks, and the cross road between the European and Native Lines. Here is an extract from the Station Orders, dated 20th April, 1857:

“The Officer Commanding the 5th and 60th N. I. will be pleased to cause picquets to mount at sunset in the different streets of their respective lines (Officers), and to take measures to prevent the men leaving their lines after dark; any sepoy not on duty found out of his lines after dark to be confined. Lieut.-Colonel Greathead will be pleased to adopt similar measures to prevent the men attached to the Depôt quitting their lines after the time specified. Officers' servants returning from mess to be directed to keep along the main roads.”

The 6th light cavalry marched in yesterday, the 20th. Committees ordered to assemble to cast sepoys and horses unfit for active service. The niggers have it, the chief is coming down.

On Saturday night, about eleven P.M., a man of the 9th lancers, by name Brunton, called out that he was stabbed (as he lay in his barrack on his cot), by whom not known (of course laid to the niggers); strict search was made, but nobody found; the mounted picquet was going to the horse lines at the time, and could not find any strangers or see anything to throw a light on the subject. The man is in the hospital, doing well; there are two or three scratches, and one hole, about one and a half inch long, on his left side over the spleen, his shirt and flannel have two holes in them. I hear he says he did not do it himself, but that a native did it.

Another letter says:—“The man of the 9th lancers, said to have been stabbed, is generally believed to have done it himself, and I think it likely he will be tried by court martial yet. I was at the brigadier's yesterday to see the new general, who is staying until he suits himself with a house, and met Col. Greathead, who stated that none of the sepoys refused to fire the cartridges greased, but I found on inquiry they were left to themselves to grease previously to the day of firing.” The precaution taken, I really believe to be the means of saving the cantonment from being fired, and the sepoys, although no proof as yet has been brought home to them, I verily believe to be the guilty parties, and I think it the opinion of all the European inhabitants. Several of the N.I. officers have all their good traps packed in boxes in their verandahs, ready to pull out at a moment's notice.

NOTICE JUST OUT.—One thousand rupees will be paid by the Chief Commissioner of the Punjab, to any person who will give such information as may lead to the conviction of any party or parties of creating such conflagrations as have lately taken place at the station.

By Order,
(Signed) A. S. JONES, Lieut.,
Acting Adjutant, 9th Lancers.

Umballa, 21st April, 1857.

A COURT OF INQUIRY.—The Court of Inquiry, regarding the 3d cavalry, took place at Meerut on the 25th, the Deputy Judge Advocate, Major Harriott, presiding. All the men stated they could see no objection to the cartridges, but that they had heard there had been something put on the paper, and they believed it to be true. Some men of the artillery, in Meerut, have refused to use their cartridges (of one squad), but as they were recruits, the commanding officer had the power to dismiss them, and he did so at once. It is said they have not tried any of the other squads, and the infantry are not using any cartridges at present; it is said they have received a hint not to do so. All is very quiet, and it is reported that the men of the 3d cavalry are very sorry for what they have done, and would fire now if ordered to do so.—Mofussilite, May 5.

AN OFFER.—A correspondent at Nagode, Central India, says:—"A sepoy of the 37th, at Benares took a letter from the Havildar of the 34th to the Reewah Rajah, offering the support of 2,000 men if the Rajah would rise against the English. The Rajah, on the contrary, seized the sepoy and sent him in to Nagode, where he is now under confinement. The sepoy pretends madness. He holds a leave certificate from the 37th B. N. I.—Mofussilite, May 5.

THE SUBADAR MAJOR OF THE 34th has been arrested. He is shortly to be tried by court-martial. The jemadar who was lately hanged, made certain disclosures which have implicated this man. There is a rumour at Barrackpore that the late 19th regiment is to be re-organized, and the men re-admitted to the service. This requires confirmation. The Government have had hitherto no reasons to suspect the subadar major.

THE PLOT TO TAKE THE FORT.—A correspondent of the Hurkaru says it seems clear that there was really a plot to take the fort on the night first fixed for Scindiah's party at the gardens. The plotters did not know the party was put off, nor did Colonel Cavanagh, the town-major, whose departure from the fort was to be the signal for men to go out and try and get the guards in Calcutta to come in and join in the assault.

THE ENGLISH SHIP William Parker capsized, and was lost in the Mutlah.

MURDERS AT FEROZEPUR.—During the last month no less than eight murders have been committed in Ferozepore. A lad of eighteen years murdered a boy of fourteen, for the sake of his silver ornaments, in the presence of a child only six years old. He buried the body. After some time, dreading discovery, he exhumed the body, buried it in another place, and substituted the body of a goat, which he had killed for that purpose, in the former grave.

THE DAINMARREE CASE.—The following is the result of the Dainmarree case. A murder was alleged to have taken place within the Dainmarree tannah district. The darogah reported to the magistrate, and five men were sent in as being either the murderers or accessories. They were all tried by Mr. G. D. Wilkins, sessions judge. He deemed the case fictitious and would have released the prisoners. The Moulvie, however, differing in opinion, the case was referred to the Sudder. The prisoners were admitted to bail in Rs. 100 each. After two or three months, the Sudder decision was announced. One man was to be hanged, two imprisoned for life, and two for seven years! The men when called for quietly accompanied the summoning peon, being told that they were about to be released from their bail.

THE PUBLIC WORKS DEPARTMENT.—Men enlisted as subordinates in the Public Works Department are not liable or rather seizable for debts under Rs. 400. The Delhi Gazette publishes some extracts from certain letters of Mr. A. A. Roberts and Captain Ludlow, showing that the system works admirably. The officials attached to this department cannot get into debt, because no one will trust them.

CAPT. McDUGALL AND ENSIGN KNATCHBULL, the two officers alluded to in the last number of the Indian Mail as being concerned in an affray at Serampore, have undergone their trial for manslaughter. They have been acquitted. There was no evidence to criminate them. They were also charged with causing an affray; on this count they were fined fifty rupees.

THE GOGRA is to be bridged over by boats during eight months in the year. Lieut. Anderson, of the engineers, is collecting boats for the purpose.

THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF has ordered that the applications of all officers desirous of selling out shall be accompanied with certificates of the commanding officer, to the effect that all pecuniary claims have been paid. When the commanding officer cannot satisfy himself that all claims have been paid by the officer about to sell out, then some portion of the proceeds shall be lodged in the agent's hands, to liquidate any possible claims.

SERIOUS CHARGES.—We regret to learn that certain charges of a serious nature have been brought against a principal assistant commissioner in the Arracan division, and we sincerely hope for the sake of the valuable services rendered by this gentleman to this country, that they may prove false. We understand that the matter is now under the consideration of the local government.—Hurkaru, April 29.

CHAIR OF GEOLOGY.—It has been definitely settled that the professorship of geology shall be attached to the Presidency college. The Supreme Government has approved of the terms upon which Mr. Blanford has been engaged to deliver a course of lectures on geology and natural history in the college. Before deciding whether the attendance of the students upon these lectures shall continue to be compulsory or not, the Supreme Government desired to have a report on the subject from the principal of the college after the expiration of a session.—Hurkaru, April 30.

MAJOR RICHARD OUSELEY is going home as agent to the king of Oude.

MR. G. MACKINTOSH, Accountant-General to the Government of Bengal, will, it is said, in the course of the next month, proceed to Europe on leave for fifteen months, and will eventually retire from the public service on his annuity, for which he has applied.

LIEUT.-COL. D. SEATON.—Our readers are probably aware that some time ago Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel D. Seaton published a pamphlet in the form of an appeal to the sympathies of the army and the public at large, on the score of an alleged grievance suffered by him in regard to the promotion made in the corps of the 1st Bengal Fusiliers, on the retirement of Major Bennett. On the publication of this pamphlet, the Governor-General of India in Council called upon Lieutenant-Colonel Seaton to explain his conduct in having put forth this improper and unmilitary publication, and that officer was obliged to tender an apology to Government, a copy of which will be found among the general orders published in our columns to-day.

URGENT PRIVATE AFFAIRS.—The Hurkaru instances the following bona fide case of "urgent private affairs," as the groundwork of an application for leave:—"We learn that an officer recently applied for a month's leave on u. p. a., and availed himself of it with the punctuality usual in such cases. A fortnight after its expiration, he made another application for another month's leave upon the same grounds. In reply he was reminded, that it was not usual for renewed leave to be granted after so short a period, and was requested to state the peculiar nature of the u. p. a. which again called him from his duty. The officer thereupon rejoined in an official letter, to the effect that his object in making the first application was to make an offer of marriage to a young lady, and since she had done him the honour of accepting him, his object in making the second application was to be united to the object of his affection, since his intentions, he begged to state for the information of the Commander-in-Chief, were of a strictly honourable character."

FUZZ ALI.—A doubt has been thrown on the death of the notorious malefactor Fuzl Ali. A correspondent of the Mofussilite favours that journal with the following from Lucknow:—"From all that I can learn, and from pretty good authority too, the general opinion is, that Fuzl Ali is still in the land of the living. It is true that Clarke's party came upon them, and let drive at them, knocking over three of the outlaw's party, but we have no further information, although further information has been promised for some time by the Oude paper. On our side one man was killed, and two or three wounded, including Clarke; and I am informed, that Fuzl Ali had at least 100 men with him, and if this be true, is it not strange that three brothers should have been the only persons knocked over? Should it be true that Fuzl Ali is really alive, between ourselves, Clarke must have studied 'Box and Cox,' 'Heads I win, tails you (John Company) lose.' I can tell you my authority regarding Fuzl Ali should not be slighted."

ANOTHER STIR AMONG THE SANTHALS.—A correspondent at Raneeunge, whose letter is dated the 22nd instant, informs us that there is another stir up among the Santals, which, if not put down at once, may cause much bloodshed. "From information received from Mr. Wilson's talooks, near Komerabad, it would appear that money was being collected for some Rajah or Suba, and that the Santals were in an excited state. This led to an inquiry, when it was ascertained that all the Santals in the Raneeunge quarter had also paid, and one of them who is working at Mr. Wilson's, gave information of the Maha Rajah Matab Narain Singh being somewhere in the Raneeunge bazar. Messrs. Biddle and Wilson having quietly ascertained the fact, and marked the house, gave information to Mr. Broadhurst, the magistrate, who immediately accompanied them, and the Maha Rajah with all his papers was seized. These show that communications have been made to all the Santal villages from Cutrack to Bhagulpore; Purwannahs ready sealed for despatch to different Purgunnahs having the amount to be paid, as also accounts of the receipts of money from the different villages. In these Purwannahs the Maha Rajah Suba Bahadoor states, that Mr. Clarke and others having won their case in the Supreme Court, it is necessary to pay all law charges before the order will be carried out; that the decree in their favour is that they are to have jageers, that the Government will restore all their cattle, as well as all money extorted from them by the Mahajans. This rascal's proceedings are very dangerous; had the whole of the money been paid, the Santhals would, even if they do not now, refuse paying rents to the Zemindars. Enough mischief has already been done to put the Government and authorities on their guard, for truly these poor wretches know not what they do. Mr. Broadhurst is going through the papers seized, and will doubtless find enough in them to convict all the principals, who should be sent through the fleet—that is, get flogged in every Santhal village, and then hanged; the code is for such men as the Santhals, better get a good police." These good people are thus deceived and incited to insurrection by scoundrels who are making a trade of the grievances. It is to be hoped that this rajah will be made an example of for the benefit of all extortionate Zemindars in Bengal.—Hurkaru, April 25th.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

BREVET LIEUT.-COL. D. SEATON.

Head-quarters, Simla, April 11, 1857.—Brev. Lieut.-col. D. Seaton, 1st European Bengal Fusiliers, having published a printed pamphlet containing an appeal to the sympathies of the army and the public, on the score of an alleged grievance suffered by him, in regard to the promotion made in this corps in succession to Major Bennett, retired; and representing as unjust and untenable the decision of the Supreme Government of India and the Hon. the Court of Directors, by which his claim to the majority on this occasion was disallowed;—this officer was, by order of the right hon. the Governor-General of India in Council, called upon to explain his conduct in having put forth this improper and unmilitary publication.

2. In reply, Lieut.-col. Seaton tendered the following apology, which the Government has accepted, but desired that it shall be published in General Orders to the army:—

"His excellency the Commander-in-Chief concurs with the Government of India in thinking I have committed a grave military offence in putting forth this pamphlet, and calls upon me to apologize for doing so, and to withdraw the document. To this expression of opinion I defer unreservedly, and beg to apologize for the act, to express my regret for the same, and to withdraw the pamphlet, which I request may be considered as cancelled.

"I respectfully beg his Excellency to make this expression of my regret and apology acceptable to the Right Hon. the Governor-General in Council.

"I trust I may be permitted to add that, in putting forth the pamphlet I had not the remotest intention of impugning the acts of the Supreme Government or the Hon. the Court of Directors, either collectively or individually. I utterly repudiate any such intention, or any such motive, as that of attempting to enlist the sympathies of the army or the public in my behalf.

"I further beg to express my regret and apology for having, in the pamphlet in question, commented upon the official acts of the Secretary to the Government of India in the military department."

CIVIL LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Fort William, Financial Department, April 24, 1857.—Notification.—Extract from a letter addressed by the Secretary to the Government of India in the Financial Department, to the Civil Auditor, Fort William, dated the 24th April, 1857.

Para. 1. I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter No. 852, dated the 6th instant, forwarding copy of a correspondence with the Honourable R. Forbes, Civil and Sessions Judge of Tirhoot, who inquires whether preparatory leave to reach the port of embarkation can be taken by a civil servant before resigning the service.

4. The Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council thinks it will be but reasonable to allow the same preparatory leave to officers retiring from the service as is allowed under the notification* of the 14th November last to officers proceeding on furlough on private affairs, provided it can be granted without detriment to the Government service.

C. HUGH LUSHINGTON,
Sec. to the Govt. of India.

COURT MARTIAL.

LIEUT. FREDERICK RICHARD NORMAN FORTESCUE, 73RD N.I.

Head-quarters, Simla, April 9th, 1857.—At a general court martial, assembled at Fort William on F-b. 24th, 1857, Lieut. F. R. N. Fortescue, interpreter and quarter-master of the 73rd N.I., was arraigned on the following charge:—

Charge.—For conduct unbecoming the character of an officer and gentleman, and to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, in the following instances: viz.—

1st. In having, some time during the month of Feb. 1856, dispatched to Banda from Secroa, in Oude, Rikhaee, quarter-master's lascar of the 73rd N.I., with instructions to sell a quantity of serviceable ammunition appertaining to the regiment, and then in store at Banda; in pursuance of which instructions the said Rikhaee sold about twenty-six thousand rounds of serviceable ball cartridges, about one hundred and five thousand percussion-caps, about seven hundred and fifty pounds of gun-powder, about seventy-eight quires of cartridge-paper, and about four pounds of twine: and the money produced by the sale of which articles was retained by him, Lieutenant Fortescue, until about the 29th of July, 1856, with the intention of appropriating the same to his own use.

2nd. For having, on or about May 1, 1856, at Secroa, for the purpose of concealing the sale of ammunition referred to in the first instance of the charge, falsified the half-yearly return of arms, accoutrements, ammunition, camp-equipage, &c., attached to the regiment, by returning as having been expended at target practice, or at exercise, the ammunition which had been sold at Banda by Rikhaee, as alleged in the first instance of the charge.

Finding—

On the first instance of the charge, guilty of having retained, until about the 12th July, 1856, the money produced by the sale of stores at Banda, as alleged in this instance of the charge; but the court find Lieut. Fortescue not guilty, and acquit him of having given instructions for the sale of such stores; and not guilty, and acquit him, of retaining the money with the intention of appropriating the same to his own use; and the court also find that the classic was despatched by Lieut. Fortescue from Baraitch, on 1st March, 1856.

On the second instance of the charge, guilty; and guilty of the preamble of the charge.

Sentence.—To be severely reprimanded, in such manner as his excellency the commander-in-chief may be pleased to direct, and, in addition, to be placed one step lower in the list of lieutenants of the 73rd regiment Native Infantry.

Approved and confirmed.

(Signed) GEORGE ANSON, General,
Commander-in-Chief, East Indies.

Simla, April 8, 1857.

Remarks by his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief.—The Court, besides the loss of rank to which Lieut. Fortescue has been sentenced, have awarded him to be severely reprimanded. No further reprimand seems called for from the Commander-in-Chief than the publication of this trial in General Orders, and with it this expression of his full approval of the finding, and an intimation to the army, that had it not been for the previous high character borne by Lieut. Fortescue, a consideration which no doubt had much weight with the Court, General Anson would have returned the proceedings for revision of the sentence, which is quite inadequate to the modified offence of which Lieut. Fortescue has been convicted; and had the revised award been dismissal from the service, that sentence should have been carried out.

Lieut. Fortescue is to be released from arrest, and directed to return to his duty, and his name is to be transposed in the list of lieutenants of the 73rd regiment of native infantry, in accordance with the sentence of the Court, and will in future stand next below that of Lieut. E. Dandridge.

The Commander-in-Chief cannot allow Lieut. Fortescue to retain his staff appointment, and he is accordingly removed from the situation he held of interpreter and quarter-master of his regiment.

By order of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief.

C. CHESTER, Colonel,
Adjutant-General of the Army.

PROPOSED IRRIGATION OF BELLARY.

On the 7th March the chief engineer addressed the following letter to Government:—

I do myself the honour to invite the favourab'e consideration of Government to a very interesting report, with appendices (to be obligingly returned), from the superintending engineer Central Circle of Public Works now on circuit, respecting the irrigable capabilities of the southern talooks of the Bellary district, which I persuade myself that the Government will peruse with considerable pleasure and satisfaction.

The papers now sent compose the second of a series of reports on projects which Captain Collyer, from personal inspection and general professional investigation, considers deserving of the future support of Government; but there being numerous discrepancies in the cultivable areas assigned by the engineer and reported by the revenue authorities of the province, the first report has been returned to Captain Collyer for correction or further explanation, and, when received, it also will be placed before Government.

It perhaps is an unavoidable attendant upon the necessarily hasty and imperfect examination of a superintending engineer whilst on a tour of inspection, that his reports shall be wanting in the minute detail, and accurate precision that are indispensable for projects recommended for practical execution.

But whatever character of vagueness or speculation the Government may attach to Captain Collyer's able and zealous labours, when viewed as supplying undertakings for entry in the annual budgets, it will be admitted, I think, that a great deal has been accomplished even in those confessedly imperfect examinations, a portion of which is now forwarded for the information of Government.

The hydraulic posture of Bellary is shown to be, in fact, more embarrassing from the ample but undeveloped facilities which it actually possesses for being placed almost beyond the reach of the fearful scarcities and famines that have marked the past and recent history of that fine province, than difficult of improvement by the niggardliness of its natural advantages.

I apprehend, therefore, that the chief practical difficulty will be that of selection, especially at a political conjuncture when it might be too sanguine to expect that large assignments of funds can be set apart for works of internal improvement, however greatly required, or however promising in results.

In this belief, I would venture to suggest, that, accompanied by whatever instructions the Government may think proper to issue, all Captain Collyer's reports should be relegated to the Collector of Bellary for his own careful consideration, and above all for his ascertainment of cultivable areas and population, and agricultural stock, to utilize the abundant supplies of water which it is represented can be so easily turned upon the ground.

A very few weeks might enable Mr. Pelly to decide to what set of works preference should be first given; and this point once settled on authentic data, guaranteed by the revenue authorities, it would then be the duty of the district engineer, of whom Capt. Collyer has frequently reported very highly, to take the general views of the superintending engineer for his guidance, and by his own investigations, or those of his subordinates, to complete the projects in detail, and to prepare them in so satisfactory a manner as may admit of their entry in the budget of the year.

But, abounding as Bellary even now is in means of extensive internal improvement, it is not too much to expect that on the approaching visit of Col. A. Cotton, his affluent professional resources will strike out yet other and perhaps even more comprehensive measures, vast as are those now suggested, for placing Bellary beyond the reach of future devastation by famine, as he is understood to still cling to his first belief that the Soondoor range of hills can be pierced or turned by a first-class navigable canal from the Toombudra.

I will close such general observations as have been called forth by the papers now forwarded, by bringing to the notice of Government, how not only desirable but indispensable it is, that the proceedings and intentions of the Department of Public Works in Mysore should be made known to the local officers in Bellary. All Captain Collyer's computations of his catchment basins, and of his surfaces drained by the various affluents of the Toombudra and the Huggry, comprise the space in Mysore which, for what we have any official means of knowing to the contrary, may have been appropriated already for hydraulic works which the Mysore departments may have projected for construction. As an apparent case in point, the executive engineer (of Chittledroog, I believe), but who resides at Toomcoor, Mr. Addis, assured me a few days ago that a gigantic reservoir was about to be formed only a few miles to the south of the Bellary frontier, at a cost eventually of six lacs of rupees; and from the position

IMPORTS (Calcutta, May 2).—Mule Twist.—Since our last there has been a pretty fair amount of business done, particularly in Nos. 30, 40, and 50, at prices showing an advance of about 1½ to 2 pie per morah. The demand is entirely for Lower Bengal: there is scarcely anything doing for the Upper provinces. Coloured Yarns.—Turkey Red, German and British Red Twist have continued to engage the attention of buyers from the neighbouring districts, but without any improvement in price. Chintzes and Prints.—The market continues inactive in the absence of demand from the Upper Provinces, as is generally the case at this season. The sales now effected are of some select styles, suitable for local wants. The late advices of large shipments from home have induced sales of some goods to arrive, which have caused an impression in the minds of buyers that the market will shortly be overstocked: this has caused a reduction in price. Shirtings.—Grey 39 to 40 inches, 5 to 5½ lb. weight, have lately been sold at a reduction of about 2 annas per piece; 6 to 7 lb. makes have also been placed in the market at about 1 anna per piece lower. Heavier descriptions are neglected. 45 inches are in a better position, and have realized full former prices. 50 to 54 inches are not much inquired for. White of fine qualities have been taken to a small extent at Rs. 8-2 to 10-4; lower qualities are not much sought for, and sales have taken place at Rs. 4-6 to 5-7 per piece. Figured are moving off in small parcels at Rs. 5-12 to 5-13 per pice. Madapolams.—Grey, middling and low qualities, continue to sell at Rs. 1-15-6 to 3-5 per piece. Heavy makes are neglected, and scarcely fetch former prices. Jaconets.—Both Grey and White continue selling moderately, the former at Rs. 1-6-6 to 2-7-6, and the latter at Rs. 1-13 to 2-13 per piece.

EXPORTS (Calcutta, May 2).—Raw Silk.—A moderate amount of business has been done since last mail, and prices are easier by Rs. 1-8 to 2 per seer, on good qualities, while the finer sorts remain as before. About mds. 300 of good to fine Hurrpaul March and April Bunds are at present in the market. There is scarcely any Cossimbazar or Gonatea. Jute and Hemp.—Supplies of Jute in the market are not large, particularly of good qualities, and prices are gradually improving. We have heard of transactions in Sberazundge, fair quality, at Rs. 3-11 to 3-13, and mixed at Rs. 3-5 6 to 3-9-6 per bazar maund. The new crop will not come in till October next. In Hemp there is scarcely any business. Silk Piece Goods.—Stocks of Corahs are moderate, and chiefly of very inferior qualities, and prices remain same as before. Some transactions have taken place in Cossimbazar, at Rs. 122-8 and 105 per corg. In Choppahs and Bandanoes there is little or nothing doing. In Tussers a few purchases are reported at Rs. 132 per corg. Saltpetre.—The decline in price at home has checked operation here, but as stocks continue light, prices have been maintained, and may be quoted.

Mr. Addis showed me on the map, the main feeder of this extensive lake is the Chinna Huggry one of the very affluents entering into Captain Collyer's and Lieutenant Fisher's calculations. If it be questionable whether the restoration of the old dam across the Cauvery at Nerinjepett, sixteen miles above Bhowany, can be permitted, without compromising vested interests in Trichinopoly and Tanjore, still more must it be doubtful whether any such gigantic work as that described by Mr. Addis can be constructed in the Toomcoor district, without prejudice to the province of Bellary. But however this may be, operations on the same stream surely ought not to be prosecuted simultaneously by different administrations in ignorance of each other's proceedings, when the one set may possibly vitiate or modify that of the other; and I trust that the Madras Government will adopt such measures as may be thought sufficient to prevent miscalculations or virtual interference with the schemes now in contemplation for the improvement of Bellary.

Government on the 7th April passed the following order:—The Right Honorable the Governor in Council resolves to forward the foregoing letter and its inclosures to Colonel A. Cotton, with a request that he will, during his approaching visit to Bellary, report on the projects referred to by Captain Collyer, after communication with the collector, to whom a copy of the papers will also be furnished for consideration. In para. 10 of his letter, Colonel Faber refers to a "gigantic reservoir" about to be formed in Mysore, the main feeder of which is the Chinna Huggry, one of the affluents entering into Captain Collyer's calculations; and adverting to the case of the Nerinjepett anicut across the Cauvery, he questions the propriety of the Mysore authorities undertaking a work which must affect the interests of the Bellary district. The Government are unable to view this matter in the same light as Colonel Faber. They observe that the Nerinjepett anicut does not appear to be at all a case in point, in the question as to whether the Mysore authorities are justified in appropriating the water of the Chinna Huggry on its passage through that country. In the Nerinjepett case, there were very large vested interests at stake, while in that of the Chinna Huggry there are none at all. While, therefore, the Government might well hesitate before they consented that the waters of the Cauvery should be diverted from Trichinopoly and Tanjore, which had been supplied for centuries, they do not see on what sufficient grounds a protest could be made against the use of water passing through Mysore, of which this Government had hitherto made no use. Apart from this question, however, it is not sufficiently obvious that the proposed work in Mysore will materially alter the schemes in contemplation in Bellary, as the catchment basins are distinct, and there is, therefore, no reason to apprehend, that, under good management, enough water may not be secured both for Bellary and the Mysore country.

BERHAMPORE (20th of April. 1857).—Cholera is very prevalent in the upper portions of Ganjam district, scarcely a village being free from it for 20 miles round Berhampore. Major Strange's camp had left the latter station on the 13th, and the party had returned to Cuttack, having had many casualties from hill-fever and cholera whilst in the neighbourhood of Berhampore. It is stated that Major S. and every man that accompanied him, had had fever, which brought the survey season to a close much sooner than was anticipated.

MALABAR (April).—The weather is insupportable; the thermometer, under shade, ranges at 88° at 2 p.m. The troops continue healthy, although there are a few cases of fever and dysentery here and there. Cholera made its appearance in one or two talooks, but it did not spread. From last accounts only three cases terminated fatally, and there have been no fresh cases. Our collector, Mr. Robinson, is constantly out on his tour of circuit, visiting the several talooks, all the public works, surveying lands, assessing lands, consulting the interests of the hitherto-injured ryots, and, in fact, doing all he can towards the interests of the state and the welfare of the public. The civil courts are closed since the 15th instant, in consequence of the hot weather. This though seriously impedes the transaction of business, as it greatly affects the interests, in many cases, of parties in litigation. No such adjournments are usual in the Queen's courts, and it is but lately that the Lieutenant-Governor of the N. W. Provinces did away with the adjournment system in the courts in that presidency. That the adjournment of the courts here is prolific of serious inconveniences, and returns no good, is beyond question.

BANK OF MADRAS.—A general meeting of the proprietors of the above institution was held on May 4, for the purpose of electing two directors in the room of J. B. Key and W. R. Arbuthnot, Esqrs., resigned. Messrs. W. U. Arbuthnot and R. O. Campbell were elected.

MOVEMENTS OF MADRAS CORPS.—A correspondent informs us that the supreme authorities have expressed, in terms more forcible than pleasant, their disapprobation of the movement of so many Madras corps during the hot season; and the rumour gains confirmation from the fact that the march of the left wing of the 49th N.I. from Secunderabad, to join headquarters at Kurnool, has been countermanded. The Commander-in-Chief is not perhaps so much to blame as his official advisers, the Adjutant-General and Quartermaster-General of the army; and with a view to enable these gentlemen to speak more "feelingly" on future occasions, it is suggested by our friend that they should be required to accompany the sepoys and their families, especially in a season of sickness, while marching from one station to another, in the very pleasant months of March and April. It is really impossible to manage things so that all the ordinary annual reliefs might be effected at a proper season of the year. Under any circumstances, a long and tedious march must be distressing to European and native troops; and it is undoubtedly the bounden duty of those who govern these matters, to take care that all needless annoyance and vexation should be spared to the men and their families.—Spectator, May 1.

MADRAS MEDICAL COLLEGE.—The distribution of prizes, &c., to the pupils of the Madras Medical College took place in May. Lord Harris presided. Dr. Scott read the report on the past session. It first notices the changes among the professors that have occurred during the year. These were the retirement of Mr. Blacklock, the professor of medical jurisprudence, the appointment of Dr. Urquhart in his place, and the change from Mr. Shaw to Dr. Paul in the midwifery and diseases of the eye department. Dr. Van Someren's lectures on natural philosophy are then adverted to: owing to that gentleman's illness, the Rev. Mr. Halley continued the course. The prizes were distributed by Lord Harris.

A SEAMAN OF THE "ZENOBIA" has assaulted the chief officer and fractured his cheek-bone. The assaultee is in the general hospital, and as soon as he is able to attend at the police to give his evidence, the case will be heard and disposed of. The reason for the assault is stated to have been a "previous grudge."

"THE NIZAM OF HYDERABAD," says the Spectator, "is said to be dangerously ill, suffering from dysentery and diarrhoea, and his recovery is spoken of as more than doubtful. His death is likely to be the signal for some disturbance amongst the Arab and Rohilla mercenaries; but this, should it occur, can easily be put down. His Highness has, we believe, two sons; so that want of heirs cannot in this case form a plea for annexation."

MATERIAL FOR PAPER.—With regard to the specimens of the plant, and paper made from it, forwarded to Dr. Royle by Mr. Underwood, Dr. Hunter has reported that he considers the plant (Pandanus odoratissimus) one from which excellent paper for ordinary purposes may be made, though the strength is not equal to paper made from hemp or linen rags; by mixing other materials with it, he believed that papers of several qualities might be prepared. He stated that steps would be taken to procure good large specimens for transmission to England.—Athenaeum, May 2.

UNCOVENANTED DEPUTY COLLECTORS.—The Governor-General in Council, at the urgent request of the Madras Government, has sanctioned the employment of eighteen deputy-collectors. These are to be uncovenanted servants. The whole expense of this increase will be about Rs84,000. a year. The employment of uncovenanted agency stimulates the members of a close service.

A MADRAS SEPOY REGIMENT requires 600 carts to carry the baggage of the sepoys on their march. The baggage appears chiefly to consist of wives and children. What did the sepoys do with their families under a Wellington or a Napier?

THE SUPREME GOVERNMENT has sanctioned the employment of an additional police force in the Madras presidency. The additional police will not put down dacoity, but they will give rise, perhaps, to a few more cases of torture. Sadder evidence will thus be more complete.

CENTRAL PRISON FOR EUROPEANS.—The Court of Directors on the 19th August last sanctioned the erection of a jail on the Neilgherries, capable of accommodating 100 Europeans. When the proposition was first submitted to the Court, it objected to the plan of a central prison, and directed that each presidency should have its own, on account of the inconvenience that would be experienced in sending prisoners to such a distant place as the Neilgherries. The Government of India in reply pointed out that the Neilgherries were more accessible from Calcutta than Meerut, the station proposed by the Court, and that it was equally convenient for Madras and Bombay, besides being a healthy climate. The Madras Government has called upon the inspector of prisons and the engineer of the Coimbatore district, and the other authorities, to submit the plans and estimates for the proposed jail buildings, for which the Government of India is now waiting.

THE RAILWAY is now open to Vellore. A change has been made in the time of starting the trains.

PROMOTION.—The Madras papers mention the promotion of an officer, who originally came to India as a private, to the rank of major in the Company's army. Such promotion has only been instanced in the Madras army.

COLONEL COTTON'S PROPOSAL FOR A BREAKWATER for the port of Madras.—It will perhaps be recollected that Messrs. Saunders and Mitchell's proposed pier was referred to Colonel Cotton for his report, and it appears that he took the opportunity of suggesting a breakwater in preference. The project is considered as to its practicability, its effect, and its cost. The construction of such a work is pronounced to be a matter of great ease: when constructed, it will afford secure shelter in all weathers. There is no danger of the breakwater filling up by the projection of the coastline, and the cost is roughly estimated at 250,000*l*. This sum, it is calculated, will provide a breakwater 2,000 yards in length.—Athenæum.

SMALL CAUSE COURT.—The Madras Spectator gives the results of the annual report of the Court of Small Causes in that presidency. The number of suits instituted in 1856 was 22,869, and the amount under litigation was Rs. 3,29,043-13 6. The appearance of parties to suits was, by attorneys 496, by vakils 1,384, and in person 20,989. The court was opened for 289 days. The expenses of the court amounted to Rs. 75,294, or Rs. 31,616 9-6 more than its income. The number of suits in 1856 was less by 3,330 than those in 1855. No reason has been assigned for the falling off in the number of the suits. It tells badly for the efficiency of the court.

DEATHS FROM DRINKING BAD WATER.—It has long been known that bad water loaded with organic matter is a fruitful source of disease. The death of Capt. W. T. R. Rolston, police magistrate of Cannanore, as announced by the Bombay Times, illustrates our position. He was returning to Cannanore via Bangalore, with his sister, the wife of Col. Stevenson, of the 1st Madras Fusiliers, and child. Before reaching Bangalore, he imprudently drank some bad water, as also did Mrs. Stevenson and the child. They were shortly afterwards seized with cholera, and both Capt. Rolston and Mrs. Stevenson died. The child recovered.

HIGH-CASTE SYSTEM.

We make no apology for the prominent insertion of the subjoined letter. Its subject is of too vital interest to allow of its being left in the back-ground, and we are glad of the opportunity afforded us to recur to its consideration. The fatuity which could suggest an attempt to assimilate our army to the Bengal one at the very moment when mutiny is rife from Calcutta to Lahore, through the very system we are required to introduce now for the first time on this side, is so hopeless, that we almost despair of making its subjects comprehend anything we say. But there is the Government, and there is the public left to us, and we turn to them. Do you then, my Lord Elphinstone, approve the senseless folly which affects to regard the high-caste man as more eligible for enlistment in our ranks than the low-caste one, and which has issued instructions to every recruiting officer in this presidency to act conformably thereto, by rejecting the one for the other? If your lordship does not, pray tell the fools who are the authors of this madness, to withdraw these instructions, and let us preserve at least one army free from the mutinous element of caste. The pretence that the feeding of the low-caste man is detrimental to his physical capabilities is the purest moonshine, and contradicts every conclusion of the most able modern chemists on the economy of food. Let these sapient gentlemen go and tell Liebig that a man fed on rice, plantains, and ghee, will develop more force than one fed on beef and mutton, and come back to us with the answer they will get.

But our correspondent expresses his surprise that Col. Green should not have interposed in the matter. What are we to think? Has the scholar so soon forgotten the lessons of his great master in Sind? Is he recurring to early mistakes? We are reminded that Colonel Green belongs to the 21st regiment native infantry, and we thank our correspondent for the fact. Now Colonel Green was for many years adjutant of that regiment, and our correspondent tells us that it contains an unusually large proportion of high-caste men, while our memory recalls the strange fact that it is this very regiment which mutinied only a few years ago, when half a dozen native officers were cashiered. This may be a simple coincidence, but it looks ominous, and we bring it to the notice of Government:—

"To the Editor of the Bombay Times."

"Dear Sir,—I read the remarks in your issue of the 27th ult. anent the late Enlistment Circular with much pleasure, and they will doubtless be approved of by a great majority of Bombay officers, whose warmest thanks you certainly deserve for exposing, in your ably-conducted and widely-circulated journal, an attempted innovation, on the part of Sir Henry Somerset, which, if successful, will go far to make our gallant and hitherto admirably-behaved little army as troublesome and difficult to manage as that of Bengal. The wonder is, that Col. Green did not interpose by pointing out the ruinous effects such an order is likely to produce in the course of time, and thereby prevent its publication. It is true he belongs to a corps, the 21st Bombay N.I., which contains an unusually large proportion of Hindostanese,—Purdees, as we are in the habit of calling them; but it is to be hoped he did not allow this fact to sway his judgment. All regimental officers of any experience, on our side, who have at all studied the question, are perfectly aware that the wholesale mixture of high and low caste men, as it now stands, is the salvation of the Bombay army. Introduce a greater proportion of Brahmins and other high-caste sepoys than at present, and by-and-by we may expect to see your columns crowded with accounts of cartridge mutinies, &c. &c., such as are, unfortunately, to be persued daily, just at this time, in those of your Bengal contemporaries. All Sir Henry Somerset has now to do, if he wishes to assimilate us more closely still, is to introduce the weekly-guard plan, and system of promotion by seniority. We might then say 'farewell' at once to the present highly efficient discipline of our army, which has hitherto very much approximated to that of the Queen's. Your correspondent has had considerable personal experience of the manner in which military duty is carried on in the armies of both Bombay and Bengal, and while perfectly unprejudiced, has not the slightest hesitation in saying, that the troops of the larger presidency are years and years behind those of our own, in all that tends to make an army efficient; and this superiority is doubtless owing in a great measure to an utter disregard of caste. Why, the very first question a Bengal commandant puts to a young native aspirant, is touching his caste; and if it be not approved of, he is sent to the right about ek dum, never mind whether he be a fine-looking man or the reverse. It may be, and I believe, is really the case, that the commanding officer of a regiment has no choice, being tied down in regulation even in this matter, but it is to be hoped we may never see such a vicious taste introduced into the army of the western presidency. Ask any unprejudiced Bengal officer whether, in the event of a sepoy being of higher caste than all the native and non-commissioned officers of the corps, that man would not have more influence for good or evil than his superiors in rank, and he cannot help replying in the affirmative.

"Again, look at the consequences of the high-caste enlistment fashion. A Bengal commandant would as soon think of requesting Brahmins to eat beef, as order them to clean out drains in the regimental lines, for the purpose of carrying away the rain, or any other labour of the nature alluded to, even though it be for their own comfort, as he knows too well they would possibly, nay probably, object. Yet the relatives of the very same men are to be found in a Bombay regiment cheerfully taking their tour of duty whenever a working-party is required for the above or any other similar purpose. Why do many Bengal commandants, and more particularly those of the old school, support the seniority system of promotion? Because, as they will tell you, 'young native and non-commissioned officers obtain too much influence in a corps!' And so they might, doubtless, if they are all high-caste Brahmins.

"It is a mistake to suppose that a tall lanky Bengal sepoy will go through more work than a sturdy little Konkannee; and the latter, as a general rule, lives on more substantial food than the former, although the Commander-in-Chief would appear to be otherwise informed.

"In conclusion, it is much to be regretted such a para. as the one more particularly referred to in the circular, should ever have been issued for the guidance of the Bombay army, and that too at a period when the evils of the high-caste system are being brought most painfully to public notice in Bengal.

"As You Were."

DISPUTE BETWEEN THE GUICOWAR AND KATTYWAR CHIEFS.

A dispute has arisen between the Guicowar and the Kattywar chiefs. Lieut. Barton, the assistant to the resident at Baroda, has been deputed as arbitrator. The expenses attendant upon the services of Lieut. Barton will be borne equally by the two native states. The dispute, we presume, regards the payment of the chouth.

THE DAOODPOOTRAS.—The Scinde Kossid states that the Doodpootras, the old rulers of the Bahawalpore territory, "have risen almost to a man against the British." It is more probable that the Doodpootras have become disaffected to the Government of the Nawab, whose administration is anything but paternal. The Doodpootras have no connection with our Government.

TROOPS FOR CHINA.—The Scindian affirms that in consequence of the peace with Persia, the 25th N.I. and the 10th N.I. will shortly be ordered to China. Captain Marston, of the 25th, has therefore been ordered to join his regiment; he has hitherto held the appointment of Captain of Police in the Kurrachee collectorate.

The coal discovered in Scinde, by Captain Phillips, after being tested and analysed by the several scientific gentlemen of Kurrachee, has been pronounced to be of the best quality.

RAILWAY RECEIPTS.—The amount received on the G. I. P. Railway, for the week ending the 26th ultimo, was Rs. 13,475-6-4; the sum collected in the corresponding week of last year, on a line of fifty-one miles, was Rs. 5,371-12-6.

EMIGRATION OF COOLIES.—Orders have been given at Bombay for the reopening of the Coolie Agency in Bombay, from the 1st May.

IMPORTS (Bombay, May 10).—Cotton Piece Goods.—The amount of business transacted during the period has been limited. Grey Shirtings are in weak inquiry; Grey T. Cloths are very scarce; Grey Jaconets are not in good demand; Grey Domestics have been in fair inquiry. Grey Twills have improved in prices during the running fair season. Bleached and Fancy Goods.—Bleached Madapolams are very dull of sale; Shirtings in very limited demand. Book Muslins have been inquired for, and Lappets have sparingly changed hands. Yarns.—In both Mule and Water, prices have improved generally, and a large amount of business has been done during the week. Metals.—Iron is in less demand than at the date of last report; Spelter has also declined. The value of Tin Plates continues firm; Pig and Sheet lead are both scarce.

EXPORTS (Bombay, May 10).—Cotton Wool.—The rates of this article have fluctuated much during the period under notice. The prices advanced temporarily, but have again settled down at the rates last reported. Oil Seeds.—The prices have declined, in consequence of free arrivals of linseed.

CHINA.

EXPEDITIONS TO IM-TIN, CHEK-CHU, AND COWLOONG.

Ho Apo, the coolie accused of murdering Mr. Markwick, is now safely lodged in gaol for trial; and as the circumstances connected with his escape and apprehension have led to the discovery of other crimes in contemplation, we propose to give a brief account of the affair.

First, then, it would appear from what has lately transpired, that more than one were engaged in the murder and robbery, Ho Apo maintaining that he took no part in it. For a day or two after the murder, he remained concealed in the colony; and meanwhile the Auckland had visited the village of Im-Tin, the one next to his native village, and brought away two of his relatives, or clansmen, as hostages.

In the course of certain investigations entered into by Government, it came out that the Tepo of Chek-chu had treasonably confederated with a band of ruffians, in conjunction with two Madarins stationed at Cowloong, to seize Colonel Caine and Mr. Caldwell, and carry them off in boats to Canton—the reward offered being a peacock's feather for the Tepo, and the sum of 50,000 dollars, to be divided amongst the conspirators. The plot was discovered by some other Chinese, who chanced to overhear the conversation betwixt the Tepo and Ch'an-kwai-chik's emissaries, who, it appears, had visited Chek-chu, for the purpose of consulting with the Tepo, and concluding their arrangements.

Two expeditions were planned—one to Chek-chu on Saturday, to apprehend the Tepo and secure the stolen property; the other to Cowloong on Tuesday, to endeavour to get possession of the mandarin emissaries.

The expedition to Chek-chu was accompanied by Mr. Caldwell and Mr. Jarman, who, on arriving at the village, found that the orders sent to the soldiers had been punctually obeyed, but that the birds had flown. On searching the houses, however, besides the papers above alluded to, several of Mr. Markwick's gold trinkets were found concealed in a bed—two watch-keys, a ring, and a pen-knife, wrapped up in a note purporting to be addressed by Ho Apo to the head watchman, and desiring him to dispose of them; also a daguerreotype portrait—all of which have been identified. The missing pistol and gold watch and chain had also been seen at Chek-chu, the former having been pawned to pay a gambling-debt, but were not fallen in with by the police.

The expedition to Cowloong was accompanied by Dr. Bridges, Mr. Caldwell being confined to his room with illness; and though the inclemency of the weather prevented it from starting till daylight, several hours after the time contemplated, the soldiers were within a hundred yards of the fort before the Chinese thought of even closing the gates. The doors were instantly scaled, the gates opened, and the fort taken possession of, without the slightest violence being used toward the Chinese. The commandant was of course in a state of great alarm, and, we are told, tried to escape, but was secured; and the persons of the two emissaries, and of the runner, who had been the medium of communication betwixt them and the Tepo of Chek-chu, demanded of him. This demand he said he was unable to comply with: he knew that such individuals had been in the town, planning mischief; that he had endeavoured to the best of his ability to put a stop to their projects, being aware of the risk which he himself would run, even if they were successful; but they had proved too powerful for him: he did not know where they then were, and therefore could not produce them.

As nothing more satisfactory could be got from him, it was deemed advisable to bring the old man over to Hongkong, where, after receiving a severe lecture from Sir John Bowring, for allowing such people to locate themselves and hatch mischief within his immediate jurisdiction, he was set at liberty, with a warning that he need not expect a second time to escape with impunity, should the offence be repeated.

Previous to the above expeditions being undertaken, the elders of the village of Im-tin had notified our authorities of the apprehension of Mr. Markwick's coolie, Ho Apo, and that they were anxious to render him up on the liberation of his two clansmen. The reason why no steamer was instantly sent to fetch him was, that Admiral Seymour had at the time none at his disposal; but Mr. Walker, on being applied to, placed the P. and O. Canton at the disposal of Government; and Mr. May, Mr. Cluff, and Mr. Dann, with the jail-guard and a party of police, were despatched in her to the village. On their arrival there, some objections were made to producing the coolie, and Mr. May was invited to go inland and fetch him; but this he positively declined. It was then said that Apo had a widowed mother, of whom he was the sole support, and she had requested the 500 dollars reward offered for her son's apprehension should be granted to her, which was also refused. But at length, when some threats were held out against the village, in the shape of a levy of provisions for the support of the steamer's crew during a protracted stay, the coolie was brought down to the beach, and handed over to the police, and the steamer returned to Hongkong.—China Mail, April 23.

CHINESE OUTRAGES IN SARAWAK.

The Chinese who attacked Rajah Sir James Brooke at Sarawak, murdered Messrs. Wellington and Nicoletts, and wounded Mr. and Mrs. Crookshank, have suffered a fearful retribution at the hands of the Malays, having been nearly extirpated from the country by their relentless pursuers. It appears that, not contented with the mischief they had already done, they returned to the town in greatly increased force; but the whole Dyak population was in arms, and the Chinese had to retreat, closely pressed by the Malays. A letter in the Pinang Gazette says:—

"About 1,000 to 1,500 Chinamen have had their heads taken off by the Dyaks, who are in arms in all directions. The Chinese had held possession of the town for about two days before the steamer Sir James Brooke arrived, and were in the forts and about the town. The first shot from the steamers's long 18-pounder cleared the fort, and in a short time they were all swarming out of the town, the steamer all the time hard at work with guns and rifles, which did considerable execution. Every day boat-loads of heads were arriving in Sarawak, the Dyaks were flocking in in thousands, and cutting the Chinese off in all directions. They are all cleared out of the Sarawak territory, only 150 or so out of some 2,000 to 3,000 having escaped. All the Chinese women went over safe, about 700; and of all the booty they got in Sarawak, they possess very little now. One of their ruses of trying to get quit of the Dyaks was to throw money among them. The Chinese were marching in a body of about 2,000, including 700 women and children, and the Dyaks hovering about them, occasionally making a dash at a corner, detaching 40 or 50 from the main body, and whipping off their heads with great zeal. The Chinese have had a terrible lesson in Sarawak. Their manner of going about it, was to take hold of a Chinaman by his tail, and whip off his head with great dexterity; one blow sufficed. I hardly expect the slaughter will stop here, the Dyaks having their blood up, and expecting the Chinese to have a deal of booty, will pursue them till not a man is left."

Only ten or twelve Malays and Dyaks had been killed in the pursuit. Mr. and Mrs. Crookshank were nearly recovered from their wounds, and quiet had been restored. Mr. Russell, a metallurgist, was in the interior of the country at the time; but he was saved by the fidelity of ten Malays who accompanied him. The Dutch resident at Pontianak, who had been applied to for assistance, instantly despatched a war-steamer to the assistance of Sir James, but it did not arrive until all danger was happily over. The Straits Times says,—

"Much as we regret letting loose the Dyaks to commit the most savage decimation, or rather destruction, of a whole people, we cannot sympathize with the diabolism of the Kungsi, who both, individually and collectively, have always received at the hands of Sir James Brooke Borneo justice—a code regulated by circumstances. The diabolical attempt of the Chinese Kungsi has met with the punishment it deserved; no reasonable being will pity them, however much they may regret the frightful sacrifice of human life."—China Mail, April 16.

IMPORTANT DOCUMENTS FOUND AT DEEP BAY.

Memorandum of the information contained in certain papers seized by a party of seamen and marines engaged under command of Commodore the Hon. C. J. G. B. Elliott, in the capture of some junks on the 4th April, 1857.

Amongst much that was of no importance, was taken a tolerably complete file of the correspondence, some in original and some in copy, of one of the principal leaders of anti-barbarian agitation in San-on, the district opposite Hong-Kong.

The letters speak, in terms more or less explicit, of the contemplated destruction of Victoria, the seizure of steamers, and the capture and decapitation of Englishmen. A large number are devoted to the steps taken, or to be taken, for the stoppage of supplies; a measure which, in two cases, has recoiled, as will be seen, somewhat seriously, on those employed to carry it out. The great Poisoning Case is twice alluded to, but not in a manner calculated to implicate A-lam, who is mentioned but as "the Heung-shan man." If, as has been generally supposed, he were a principal in that case, he would almost certainly have received his instructions from the committee of his own district, and not from San-on. At any rate there are no words in the papers now under review which can be construed as at all laying the onus of the offence upon him.

They contain, on the whole, a singular mixture of truth and exaggeration, but are even more remarkable for the misapprehension both of our means and motives, the standing and opportunities of some of the writers considered.

Ch'an Kwei-tsik, the agitator-in-chief of the district of San-on, is a man of distinguished literary eminence. He graduated as a doctor (tsin-sz') in 1841, and was appointed a subordinate of the sixth grade in the Board of Revenue at Peking. His age must be between forty and fifty. He resides ordinarily at Sha-tsing, about two miles from the district city of San-on, but appears to be found, at present, mostly at the latter place, where he is president of the central district committee of hostilities.

Ch'an Tsz-tin, his third brother, may be termed chief of the executive. It was his portfolio that was taken, and his letters and papers introduce us to various names of more or less respectability.

Su Ting-kwei, who corresponds with both brothers from Canton, is a subordinate Censor, now in mourning for a parent, and consequently living in retirement in Kwang Tung, his native province. He appears to be Yeh's channel of communication with the San-on gentry.

There are, besides the above, letters from the nephew of the Ch'an; from Man-hing, the nephew of Man Tsap-shin, a gentleman the author of an unsuccessful project to burn or blow up the city of Victoria, and the probable agent in the destruction of Duddell's store, of which his nephew is stated in one letter to have given notice to Ch'an Tsz-tin, two days before it occurred. A very active gentleman named Yü Ki-nin, and Wong Sui-shang, chief agent of an attempt (it is supposed) upon the merchant steamer Unicorn, also figure in the correspondence. The capture of the Queen and the demand of the Portuguese government for her, are likewise mentioned; but the fact of gravest interest, to us, is the announcement that heads, stated to be heads of Englishmen, had been, on more than one occasion, forwarded to Canton, and that a reward, in amount so much below the captors' expectation as to cause serious discontent, was paid for them.

There is, on the whole, indisputable evidence that none of the recent rumours of impending danger, general or particular, were without foundation; that we have been fully justified in every precaution that has been taken, and that peril is only to be apprehended in the event of a relaxation of our vigilance.

The earliest paper of importance is dated the 4th December last. The Canton committee direct two gentlemen, not of this district, to repair to Kaulung (Cowloon), and take measures for its defence.

On the 21st January, Ch'an Tsz-tin informs his brother that his braves are so planted at Sha-tin and Tai-wei, in rear of Cowloon, as to command all the approaches to the latter place, which is separated from the others by the steep range of hills facing Hong-Kong. Victoria, he hears, is in great perplexity. "A proclamation is issued once a day, and three sets of regulations, every two days. People abroad at night are taken up in haste, and discharged with equal precipitation." No one is allowed out after eight o'clock; the shops are forced to take out tickets (passes?), and to pay sixteen dollars a ticket; and these have to be changed every few days. Boats passing to and fro between Cowloon and Victoria are not searched, but a bakery (it is not here stated whose) had been closed, and some forty people imprisoned for poisoning a number of English devils.

We are styled in all the papers, barbarians, devils, barbarian devils, or rebellious barbarians.

The people of the San-on, Heung-shan, and Tunk-kun districts, the writer goes on to say, are all alarmed, and meditate a return home; but those of Nam-hoi and P'un-yü, on the confines of which Canton is situated, and of Shun-tak, deride the submission of the others to the authority of the officials and gentry. He closes with a complaint that Hongkong is drawing supplies from Canton, Kong-mun, and Macao.

On the 24th January, he reports an improvement in the working of the interdict to the eastward; in the region overlooked by his pickets. Two of his braves have visited Victoria, and counted 110 foreign vessels in harbour, but declare that there is not one-tenth of the usual quota of native craft belonging to the province. There are from other provinces (viz. north and east coasters). The west end of the city is quite deserted, and the English, by the unanimous declaration of the Chinese, thoroughly dispirited. All mat and wooden buildings had been demolished towards East Point. He also reports a great burglary in the centre of Victoria; the burglars had escaped with several thousand dollars, over the hills.

The people of Kwei-shin, the district east of San-on, continue perversely to supply Hong-Kong. At the latter place, the English protect the harbour by cruising night and day, north and south of the island, but do not venture to land on the opposite side.

The braves that accompany the writer, Ch'an Ssz'-tin, are only 140; but with the local trainbands, it presently appears, a body, real or nominal, of 1,000, is assembled in rear of the Cowloon hills.

On the 2nd of February, a man calling himself Wong Amuk, dressed in "devil" clothes, and boots armed with a devil fowling-piece, and speaking devil language fluently, came over the hills by Ch'an Tsz'-tin's position, shooting, and was made prisoner. He declared that he had been in business at Hong-Kong, had kept the Tak Lung pork butchery, and the Hing Lung fish-shop. There is some reason to suppose that this man was a Macaist. Strange to say, he was bailed out by the gentry of Sai-kung, a place which our data lead us to mark in the neighbourhood of Hebe Haven, and released with a slight punishment.*

* There is also a Sai-kung, called by the Nam-t'au traders Sai In, the western road, or lay; but this is a spot near San-on.

On the 5th February, Ch'an Tsz'-tin writes to his elder brother, Ch'an Kwei-tsik, that an intended expedition of the braves across the water (to Hong-Kong) had failed. The English were too well on their guard. Cannon are fired by night at intervals to keep their spirits up. Cruisers constantly sweep the harbour. The black troops who have come on, drill incessantly. "Such being the doubt and alarm of the English rebels, we must wait until they tire a little; a blow will then be sure."

He had intercepted a large quantity of supplies en route to Hong-Kong, and had seized an English row-boat with two Chinese of the five in her. She was left in charge of the head-borough of Cowloon. A few days later he expresses his apprehensions that the English will come to Cowloon to look for the boat, and had directed his own braves not to go into Cowloon for the time being.

At this time, 7th February, both Ch'an Kwei-tsik and the district magistrate issue orders to the braves to abstain from molesting the people. They are to be forward in action; to report all seizures to their officers; not to cut down trees near the villages; to be alert on their posts; and to refrain from insulting the women.

Ch'an Tsz'-tin has farther news from Victoria. After admitting his misgivings above mentioned, he thinks that we are "so utterly broken," that we shall not venture to disturb Cowloon. The Americans, at Hong-Kong, look on the present state of things as full of danger, and are sending their ships away.

He had himself been to Cowloon to meet three of the parties about to undertake something at Hong-Kong; these men insisted on having a written guarantee of their remuneration. He then enlisted ten braves secretly (it is to be presumed, for co-operation in the proposed plot), and these were to be supported by another body. They would probably cross the water in a day or two.

He closes his note with the announcement that eleven English rebels have been, to his great joy, made prisoners. [These were probably Portuguese belonging to a lorchia seized off Lantau by pirates, and by them exchanged against one of the piratical body then in the hands of the Mandarins. A Chinese, who escaped, brought the intelligence to Macao, on the 10th February]; and that pirates, or other outlaws, were the captors, is manifest from Ch'an Tsz'-tin's exultation in the prospect of "the English rebels and vagabonds of the country not being able to bear each other, if matters are managed thus; each party will get to suspect the other, to the advantage of the main issue."

The interdict, he writes, on the 13th February, is being more steadily enforced to the east. On the 16th, a letter from his brother, Ch'an Kwei-tsik, evidently in answer to more than one from Ch'an Tsz'-tin, explains that, about the end of December, a man named Ch'eng Tsik was directed by the Canton Committee to go to Cowloon, and collect persons together for the purpose of firing Victoria. The plot had fallen through. After other matters, he states that Tsé Fung-shan has brought down thirty gilt Mandarin buttons, and 1,000 dollars, to be distributed in rewards. This Tsé is a gentleman associated with him in anti-barbarian operations. Either against him, or another Tsé, as a dangerous man, he warns his brother, in a subsequent note. Later still, a Tsé is dismissed by the younger brother with his braves, for quarrelling with some one. The rewards to be disbursed out of the 1,000 dollars, he says, in an interlineation, "are 300 dollars for the lorchia, and thirty taels for every devil's head." Then, in a postscript,—"The price of devils' heads has been reduced this year."

On the 17th February, Ch'an Tsz'-tin writes that Victoria is reported to be more on the qui vive than ever; no one is allowed out after six o'clock; no communication permitted between the shipping and the shore after dark; soldiers and sailors both co-operate with the police. Three principal rice shops had been closed.

He had heard of the destruction of four war junks at Tung-chung, on Lantau; and presumes that the English had done this to satisfy the feeling of spite which they could not vent in any other direction.

"It is now said that the barbarian merchants of the different nations have deputed some one to England to denounce the English devil chief (governor or admiral)."

He is sanguine about the safety of Cowloon, and his confidence is strengthened on the 21st February, when an English steamer brought over seventy-two pirates and surrendered them to the fort. Cowloon was in great alarm, and the garrison stood to their arms. The English went away, however, without doing any mischief. "What their purpose (or intention) may be, it is indeed difficult for any man to divine."

The Indian reinforcement is, at the same time, stated to be in a very miserable condition; sickly and unserviceable; "five or six tenths without breeches to wear; and all swathed in ragged blankets and coverlids. Mat barracks are being built on the parade-ground for 3,000 men that are expected. Arms are being embarked, it is believed, for an attack, first on Nam-t'au, and then on Canton."

"The police (green-jacket devils) say that there is to be this one fight more; by it they are to stand or fall; if they are beaten, they will be ready to sue for peace; if they cannot obtain peace, they will go home to England."

Six vessels, with supplies for Hong-Kong, had been seized at Ts'in Wan (a small place a little to the west of Victoria Harbour), and ransomed for seventy-two dollars. A flour-mill there is said to be working again, and it is recommended that a party of braves should be sent to close it.

The opening of this shop had been announced in a letter from Yü Ki-nin, who also states that the execution of a plot discussed between him and Ch'an Tsz'-tin on the 20th February is deferred. What this was, does not appear.

On the 21st February, Ch'an Man-sin, nephew of Ch'an Ssz'-tin, writes to his uncle to inform him that the San-on Committee had forwarded to Canton an English head taken from an English cruising boat (it is believed he means to say near Aberdeen, on the south side of the island). The rest of the crew escaped to land. "The Canton Committee are giving now only 30 taels for devils taken, dead or alive." [It will be remembered that Yeh's earlier proclamations promised 100 taels reward for Englishmen taken alive. He then interlines,] "For a devil's head they may possibly give but 30 dollars; the San-on Committee [consequently] do not now much prize devils' heads." He goes on to mention, that some days had elapsed before the braves consented to receive the reward lately sent; requests his uncle, if he is going to employ his own braves in the getting of heads, to tell them plainly the state of the case; and, finally, recommends him not to be keen in the head-hunting, as it is unremunerative.

There is some doubt about the date of the next document. It is either of the 21st February, or the 22nd March. Assuming it to be the former, the proper place of the note in the series is here. In it Ch'an Kwei-tsik promises from 500 to 600 dollars if an attempt, apparently,* to blow up some place, succeeds. It must be done in three days, and notice is to be given. The barbarians are spreading a report that they are coming to attack San-on. He, Ch'an Kwei-tsik, is preparing to defend it. [The expenses of the braves are evidently pressing the Committee's exchequer. Reductions of their number are proposed and effected.]

On the 23rd February, a man whose surname is not given, but whose name is Yü-nam, writes that [the Representatives of] Portugal and France have addressed a letter to Yeh to the effect that the rebel vessel seized (evidently the Queen) was not English, but Portuguese (interlined). This is to be kept very quiet. The inquiries made by the writer or his superiors establish nothing to their satisfaction, one way or the other. Things were not well at Nam-t'au, the trade of which place was suffering much from the interdict on supplies to the foreigner. This was causing discontent and cavilling. The braves, commanded by the man before mentioned as dissatisfied with the amount of head-money awarded, were deserting. There was also trouble at Sai-kung.

On the 25th February, Yu ki-nin writes to Ch'an Tsz'-tin to say, that Man Tsap-shin's attempt [at fire-raising] had failed on the 23rd. [He means after midnight. Our police record an attempt on a shop named Tungli, at the other end of the town, on the 24th.] It was made behind the Tung-li, a mat-building establishment in the Ha-wan, but was to be renewed again in three or four days in the shops to the left of the Police Station by the Commissariat (Webster's Bazaar), when the whole line of hongst in that vicinity could be burned; or in the Canton Bazaar, or in both places at the same time. [An attempt was made on the Canton Bazaar, but on the 19th February.]

On the 26th, Ch'an Tsz'-tin reports to his brother that several of the shops which had been closed at Hong-Kong [for the new year] are open again, and that supplies come in from Macao, Ch'an Ts'un, a place in Shun-tak, well up the river, and T'ai-ping, in Tung-kun, near the Bogue.

Then he receives news from Tang Chiu-yune, that the steamer [Queen] seized near the Ning Islands, was a passenger ship [that is, not a war-steamer]; that she had gone up to Canton to Cheung Tak-ngung [a civilian much distinguished in the troubles of Kwang Si, where he was judge, in 1851-4, and now chief, or one of the chiefs, of the Canton Committee of hostilities.]. He will report her capture to Yeh. There are other emissaries, adds Chian, at hand, who are ready to make another swoop. He had been to Cowloon to confer with three. Wong Sui-shang's design [against a steamer], for the execution of which he was to have received 3,000 dollars, it was thought, would fail—Wong was so slow. He had written to hurry him. The sum being large, and there being no "head and neck" to produce in proof, he, Wong, was to bring the vessel to a particular spot, &c. &c.

Ships were few at Victoria. The soldiers before estimated at 1,000 turned out to be a small body. The building of the mat barracks had been discontinued.

On the 27th February, he reports an increase of vigilance at Victoria. People are shut up in their houses at five o'clock, and, even at noon, few seen about. He has inspected Cowloon, and finds thirty heavy guns fit for use, and about one hundred and ten soldiers in garrison. He complains that the interdict is not rigorously enforced by the authorities, either civil or military. He would himself plant a picket on some high ground about two miles from Cowloon, in a place well suited for purposes of surveillance, but is afraid, if his tents are seen by the English, that "they will pick a quarrel with him." He has seized a junk coming with supplies from Kwei-shin.

A note express from Tang Chiu-yung, without date, begs him to come to Cowloon at once to meet five friends, who engage that something shall be undertaken and accomplished at once. [These are probably the men with whom he has conferred at Cowloon, according to his note just quoted. The plot was most likely to destroy the Unicorn.]

* The word go here perplexes the translator. If it stand for ho-yo it means powder; if for yo-t'ai it means medicine, drugs, poison. The former, all things considered, is most likely what is intended.

† The Commissariat, Messrs. Fletcher and Co.'s, &c.

The opposition of the people of Wong Kong, who persist in supplying Hong-Kong, now begins to give serious trouble; but deferring this and other similar matters to a later period, our next paper is a letter from Su Ting-kwei, the ex-Censor, who writes from Canton that the English barbarians are said to be about "to acknowledge their transgression, and that the different nations are united in their entreaties for trade." Incendiaryism and the seizure of vessels may, therefore, be postponed, as it might give some trouble to the Governor-General were similar acts to drive the barbarians "to such a struggle as beasts make when surrounded." The stoppage of supplies is to be as strictly insisted upon as ever, as this is "a means of keeping the rebellious barbarians well in hand."

On the same day, 4th March, Ch'an Tsz'-tin (who has been the pupil of Su Ting-kwei, that is to say, has sat at his feet as his literary patron), writes to his brother that he has heard from Su that "the ruler of the rebels [H. M. Queen Victoria] had written back blaming the military devil-head altogether for commencing the disturbance of last year;" and that Yeh had issued orders to the train-bands to suspend offensive operations. The taking of heads, he suggests, may therefore be let alone with even greater propriety. The credit of taking a head, now about to be forwarded to Canton, he requests may be assigned, in the memorandum accompanying it, to Cheung Chanmu, a relative of his own.

On the 7th March, Ch'an Tsz'-tin writes to his brother that he had sent Man Tsap-shin to him, and reports the burning of Duddell's store on the night of the 6th; great destruction of flour, biscuits, and spirits; and the death of a black man in the flames." As soon as the fire broke out, the English devils fired some guns and knocked down the Christian Church by the side [of the flour store]. The barracks and powder-magazine were guarded by several hundred devil soldiers. The spy "saw with his own eyes that the building on fire was Duddell's store, and not the great devil building [Government House or Offices]. Ever since the closing of Cheung Alam, the Heung-shan man's bread-shop, the greater portion of the devil soldiers' rations have been ordered of Duddell." The burning of his store is an excellent measure, "of more value than the interdict itself." In a separate letter he mentions that Man-hing, nephew of Man Tsap-shin, had given notice on the 4th March, that the deed was to be done. As there is now no doubt of it, news should be sent post-haste to Canton.

Three ships are believed to have come to Hong-Kong with troops; and arms have been issued to these, for what purpose is not known.

He then expresses great regret at the failure of Wong Sui-shang's enterprise on the night of the 5th March. Two of his underlings had been seized; the rest had escaped to Cowloon.

The town of Sham-chun [a little east, and below San-on] is denounced for supplying Hong-Kong, and Ho Tsei-luk, of Wong Kong, is specially mentioned as the villain-in-chief. We hear more of him in time.

The [Ch'an?] Yü-nam, before mentioned, writes on the 8th March, that the English wish to treat, and that other foreign nations are giving [Yeh] to understand that they wish [the English] to confess their fault.

On the same day Ch'an Tsz'-tin writes to the Sai-kung committee to hold their hands in respect of the graver acts of aggression, but to continue strict in stopping the supplies. Also to his brother, congratulating himself on the prospect of the speedy and satisfactory termination of the campaign that is before them, now that the English are about to kiss the rod. He proposes reducing his braves by near half their strength.

In another letter of the same day he alludes to the fact, that the business was done on the 6th March (evidently the burning of Duddell's store). About the same time, Tang Chiu-yung, believed to be an ensign of the Cowloon establishment, reports the failure of an attempt to destroy a steamer on the 5th March. [This was, doubtless, the Unicorn. A man was apprehended on the 6th March by Mr. Caldwell, on suspicion of his privy to a plot in contemplation against that vessel.] The master had detected the plot, and had seized one man; four, however, whose names are given, had made their escape. They know Victoria well, and have a large number of adherents, who have been, or are, in foreign employ, either in dwelling-houses, or on board ships. They would be useful in any future incendiary undertaking, and Ch'an is recommended to retain them, on militia rations, as they have no other means of subsistence.

On the 10th March, he writes that he has been obliged to dismiss Tse, the man before mentioned, and, in the same letter, adds, that the rebellious barbarians do not now look as if they meant to ask for pardon and sue for peace. Every important place must, therefore, be well guarded; but if there be no movement observable before the end of the moon, he will disband ten more braves. [The expense of this force very possibly accounts for Yeh's readiness to believe that we were contemplating a course which would have enabled him to dispense with them.]

On the 24th of March, Ch'an Kwei-tsik tells his brother, that on the night of the 19th, he had sent on an English head to Canton. "This is the 4th victory announced." He has understood that in the English attack on Tung-chung (the Auckland's affair, of the 1st April), ten English were killed.

On the 29th March, the elder brother, Ch'an Kweitsik writes very earnestly to the younger, Ch'an Tsz'-tin regarding the capture of a vessel, about to be taken by Tang Chin-yung. He fears the amount of remuneration has been reduced at Canton, but he will himself make up whatever is allowed to 1,000 dollars. He must have four days' notice, and the vessel must be brought up to the Mau Chau shallows, opposite Shatsing (a little above San-on, where Ch'an Kwei-tsik resides), in which case he will send out to meet her. Under these circumstances she need not be set on fire. "Any money and merchandise on board her are to go to the captors, but devils, flags, muskets, telescopes, letters, and arms, must be given up [to Government]." A black devil was taken on the 28th, and the twelve devils (whose capture has been noticed before) are removed, by the Governor-General Yeh's desire, to the Wan-lam Pawnshop. [These are most likely the Portuguese, who, after being two months in durance, have just been sent back to Macao.]

On the 3rd April, the same authority states that on the 1st the English had made another attack on Tung-chung, on the north of the island of Lantao, and had carried off a fast-boat. Their fire had only killed one man. He hears that T'am, a sergeant of the Cowloon garrison, well known as a thief-taker, &c. had been seized in Victoria by Mr. Caldwell in person. He, Ch'an Kwei-tsik, is moving a large force on Ts'in-wan.

[This was to punish the people of that place for their contumacy; they persist in supplying Hong-Kong.]

The remaining papers, with one exception—a list of the shops and tradesmen in parts of the centre and west of Victoria—all relate to collisions between the people, and the braves and their superiors, on the same ground, in the month of March.]

At Ts'in-wan, which lies on the other side of our bay, although a little west of the limits of the harbour, the braves, attempting to stop seven supply-boats, were beaten off with the loss of a life. A recreant graduate named Ch'an Tsi-kün led on the rioters, who surrounded the public meeting-house, tied up the undergraduate in charge of the braves, beat the latter, and robbed them of everything; and finally threatened that, unless the said undergraduate signed a statement to the effect that his braves had killed one of their people by mistake, they would carry the whole party to Victoria, and get a reward for them from the English. They also extorted 140 dollars ransom.

It is remarkable that in the letter detailing all this (which is from Ch'an Tsz'-tin, and urges Ch'an Kweitsik to put down these people) there is a detached slip of paper in a different hand, with the words, "On no account destroy the temple of Jesus of the West at Ts'in-wan." Reports on the fray at Ts'in-wan come in from various quarters; and we have now an edict of the district magistrate desiring the district committee to move a force upon Ts'in-wan, Wong-kong, and Sai-kung. In a separate paper are given the names of the sub-committee charged with these operations.

There is a village named Wong-kong about ten miles higher up the Canton river than the city of San-on; but this can hardly be the place, which appears to be not far from Sham-ch'un, a town higher up the stream on which San-on stands. As before observed, Sai-kung lies in one of the small bays east of the headland which forms the eastern side of Hebe Haven.

At the former place boats load for one Ho Tsei-luk, stated to have almost a monopoly of our supply market. Some braves interfering with these, were fired upon. The village elders were summoned to give up Ho Tsei-luk, but evaded compliance. The magistrate had himself gone to Wong-kong; but the people were assembled by beat of gong, the official was refused admission, and obliged to fall back on Ch'ik-mi, a place a little east of Sham-ch'un.

[The dates here are not very clear, but the whole must have taken place about the beginning of March.]

At Sai-kung, on the 6th March, a salt-boat, passing from Kwei-shin to Victoria, with fuel, was seized. Information was sent to Victoria, and twenty salt-boats came to the rescue; their crews retook the prize, ransacked the public hall, or meeting-house, and threatened the braves that if they continued at Sai-kung, they would hand them and their leader over to the English at Victoria.

14th April, 1857.

THOMAS WADE, Chinese Secretary.

H.M.S. RALEIGH.—The Raleigh is ashore, beached near the Typa, in sight of Macao, having struck on a sunken rock on Tuesday (the 14th), and knocked a hole in her bottom. The French steamer Cattinat, with the Bittern in tow, has gone to her assistance; and the Coromandel has taken over the Calcatta's fire-engine to assist in pumping her clear of water. It appears that Captain Keppel, as he hove in sight, first discharged two guns as a signal of distress, and then saluted the French admiral before running her ashore.—China Mail, April 16.

INTELLIGENCE has reached Macao to the effect that a rebel force have possessed themselves of a place a few miles distant from Fatshan, and that considerable excitement prevails in Canton on account of their contiguity.

THE Lady Mary Wood, on her passage down, fell in with a piratical fleet of junks, who were having a very warm engagement with some Chinhai traders. The Lady Mary Wood put a stop to the engagement, and took two of the junks, with 19 men very severely wounded, and 9 killed, into Amoy.

GOVERNOR YEH has lately seized upon and imprisoned a large rice merchant for refusing to sell that article to the poor at the price which he has limited. We have not been able to ascertain the exact limit fixed, but believe it is 3.50 dollars per picul. The heavy rains which we have experienced the last few days will tend, more than anything else, to carry out Governor Yeh's wishes, as there is no doubt that these long wished for showers will rapidly bring down the price of rice.

We learn that late advices from Foo-Chow-Foo express considerable apprehensions regarding the rebels. The remittances to the tea districts had been sent back, in consequence of the locality being menaced by the insurgents. The manipulation of the tea-leaf would, it was feared, be greatly retarded, and the quantity for sale be much reduced, owing to these disturbances.

BURMAH.

THE CONDITION OF AVA.

Recent intelligence from Ava is not of a nature to hold out hopes of prolonged tranquillity in that part of the world, and we need scarcely say, that a civil war at Ameerapoor would compel us to look closely to the state of our munitions of war at Rangoon. The king, who was once so popular from his mildness of character and for the anxiety which he exhibited to lighten the burdens of his people, has committed the fatal mistake of creating a monopoly in his own favour of every branch of export trade in his dominions. He is sole merchant as well as monarch, and understands, as well as the keenest member of the Peace Society, how to buy in the cheapest and sell in the dearest market. Perhaps it would scarcely be correct to say, that in any sense the man who buys is the enemy of the man who sells, but there is a natural antagonism in trade, which is wholly at variance with the paternal relation which a king should bear to his subjects. His majesty of Ava cannot keep both his Crown and his customers; and when the former passes to his brother, the news from Burmah is likely to prove interesting in Calcutta and elsewhere.

Since the conclusion of the last war with England, the internal commerce of Burmah has undergone a complete change. Rice, which used to be imported from Pegu in large quantities, is now almost entirely home grown, the enormous advance in price consequent on the European demand making it far too expensive for native consumption. In 1855-6 the increase was not less than a thousand per cent., and much misery was the consequence amongst merchants and consumers, but the evil has worked itself out, and at the latest date grain was cheaper at Ameerapoor than at Rangoon. Thus both sides of the border have benefited by the change, the Peguers by the enormous access of profits, and the Burmese by being made self-sustaining in the important matter of the supply of food.

In all other respects, however, the prospects of the Burmese are the reverse of favourable. The king's short-sighted policy is ruining alike the trade with China and Rangoon. Up to a recent period, the export of cotton from Ava was very great, the Chinese imports of silk and gold, the former amounting to upwards of twenty-two lakhs yearly, being mostly paid for in that article; but since his majesty has drawn all the supply to himself, and charged two hundred per cent. profit on the sale, the trade has dwindled to the verge of total extinction. Upon lead, he makes a profit of three hundred per cent., upon cutch, about the same. The Petroleum wells, time out of mind the property of private families, are now worked for the royal benefit. The king takes the oil at fixed rates, and vends it at an enormous advance. As a matter of course, all classes of producers are discontented with this state of things.

They may know but little of public affairs in their own country, and nothing of those which transpire beyond it, but neither great sagacity nor foreign information is requisite to instruct them as to the loss they sustain by the king's trading. And when we add to this wide-spread cause of disaffection, the disgust occasioned by the recent order to vacate Ameerapoor, and found a new city in its stead, together with the artful complaints of the partisans of the heir apparent, it will be easily understood that the chance of a revolution is by no means remote. It is rumoured that the king's brother recently attempted to leave the town, which would have been equivalent to an act of treason in Burmese estimation, but the story wants confirmation. Meanwhile his majesty studies price currents, and has engaged a respectable European firm to send him translations of all the English papers. It would be strange enough, if he should learn through these columns, the first tidings of the disaffection of his people.—Friend of India.

THE ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER AT PEGU, Capt. J. S. D. White, of the 40th N.I., has resigned his civil appointment. His services will, doubtless, be placed at the disposal of the Commander-in-Chief. We trust that the health of Capt. White will be improved by the change.

ANOTHER FIRE AT RANGOON.—A report has reached town, brought by the ship Cornwallis, that the whole town of Rangoon was burnt down on the 11th inst. That there was a serious fire is believed, but that it destroyed the European portion of the town is doubted.

The Sind Kossid says, "We have lost the services of two of our conductors by the unerring hand of death." Since the hand of death does not appear to err, we suppose that in this case the "services of the conductors" were worthless. Really, the English is almost as bad as in an educational report.

ERRATUM.—In the review, in our last number, of a work by Mr. W. Nassau Lees, "On the Study of Oriental Languages," the words per annum were inadvertently introduced in alluding to Mr. Lees' estimate of the expense of the East-India Company's College at Calcutta. The half-million sterling therein mentioned is the total cost of the maintenance of the students, from the foundation of the college to its abolition in 1854.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON.

TUESDAY, June 9, 1857.

SIR LAWRENCE PEEL.

WE are happy to announce that the expectation held out in our last number, that Sir Lawrence Peel, late Chief Justice at Calcutta, would be selected by her Majesty's Government to fill the vacant seat in the Direction of the East-India Company, has been realized. Sir Lawrence is now a member of the Court.

SIR JAMES OUTRAM.

WE have the satisfaction of announcing that her Majesty has been pleased to signify her sense of the services recently rendered by Sir James Outram in Persia, by conferring upon him the honour of Grand Cross of the Bath.

The Court of Directors, also, and her Majesty's Government have concurred in further recognizing his claim to high distinction by appointing him a member of the Supreme Council of India.

EAST-INDIAN RAILWAY COMPANY.

IN case an injurious report regarding the financial affairs of the East-Indian Railway Company, which has been going the rounds of the papers, should have reached any of our readers, who may not have seen the letter from Messrs. Freshfield, the solicitors to the company, contradicting the same, we are glad to be able to state that the rumours in question are entirely unfounded, and that the financial position of the company is as sound as the largest shareholder could desire. We cannot indeed, understand how, under the system of supervision which is exercised by the officers of the East-India Company, any deficiency could occur. The capital, as soon as it is paid by the shareholders, is deposited in the treasury at the East-India House, and sums are only withdrawn from thence for payments which have been previously sanctioned by the East-India Company and the ex-officio director. By this means, not only is a strict control provided against extravagance, but an examination takes place into each particular expenditure, to see that the sum sanctioned for a special purpose is not exceeded.

THE CHRISTIAN MISSIONARIES OF BENGAL.

A NEW element of government is springing up in India. Its earliest manifestations may be traced in an address which has been presented to the local Government by the Christian missionaries of Calcutta, proposing the appointment of a commission to inquire into the condition of the rural population of Bengal. That the country labours under a vast amount of social disorganization no one seems to doubt. Much of this, however, even the missionaries allow, may be traced to the fearful superstitions of the people, and the debasing effects of a popular mythology. These unfavourable causes admit of no very speedy removal, and must necessarily await the comparatively slow advance of general civilization and improvement. Other ills, however, are enumerated, the remedy for which lies altogether within the province of the Government. The missionaries declare their belief that in many districts neither life nor property is secure; that gang-robberies of the most daring character are perpetrated with impunity, and that constant affrays take place between landed proprietors regarding the disputed boundaries of their estates. These evils are chiefly ascribed to the inefficiency and corruption of the police, and to the defective constitution of the courts of justice. Another cause assigned for the violence and exactions to which the people are exposed is the alleged oppressive character of the land-revenue system. The working of the law of landlord and tenant, it is averred, leads the cultivators to despair of obtaining redress for the greatest wrong that may be inflicted. Under such an impression, the people, it is said, exhibit a spirit of sullen discontent, and entertain so bitter a hatred towards the Government as to have impressed the memorialists "with alarm as well as sorrow." The picture, though highly exaggerated, contains much painful truth. All parties are agreed that the social existence of the rural population of Bengal is sadly disordered; all practical men have come to the conclusion, that whatever remedy can be applied by the Government should be no longer delayed; but whether the course suggested by the memorialists would advance the object desired, is open to the gravest doubt. The Government of India participating in this doubt, declined to issue the commission. The missionaries, dissatisfied with the decision, resolved to appeal to Parliament. Their memorial, which we see has been ordered to be printed, furnishes a sketch of the grievances of the people, and prays for the appointment of a royal commission to institute the inquiry which the framers sought to obtain through the local Government. In our judgment there are many obvious objections to the issue of such a commission in England. In the first place, the field of selection would be too limited. The memorialists require that the commissioners should be men of independent minds, unbiassed by official or local prejudice. Such men are doubtless to be found in the United Kingdom, but they would probably be deficient in two important qualifications: experience of the people, and a knowledge of the vernacular language. There is, we believe, but one precedent for the appointment of an Indian commission at home. This occurred so far back as the year 1768, when Mr. Vansittart, Mr. Sraffton, and Colonel Forde were vested with extraordinary powers, and took their departure for Bengal. But even in this instance the commissioners were nominated by the East-India Company, and not by the Crown. Their commission, moreover, was never opened; the ship in which they took their passage failed to reach its destination, and was supposed to have foundered at sea. To those conversant with the subject, it must be obvious that a commission of local inquiry, if appointed at all, must be appointed in India: but is there, after all, any need for its institution? It appears to us that such a commission was virtually and substantially issued when Mr. Halliday was selected for the office of lieutenant-governor of Bengal. One of the first fruits of his administration was an elaborate report on the whole question of criminal justice in the territories included within his jurisdiction. The Friend of India speaking of this document, says: "The Lieutenant-Governor sets out with a frank and full admission of the great evils to be reformed. Such a sketch indeed has rarely proceeded from an official pen. Not one evil is glossed over, however old, not one blunder concealed, however deeply interwoven with our official system. Nothing that we have ever ventured to assert, no invective that has ever proceeded from the fiercest radical in Bengal, approaches in severity to this quiet but clear-cutting denunciation. We have been accused frequently of drawing our picture of the existing system for the repression of crime in too dark colours. It is radiant compared with this terrible deguerreotype. It is proved on evidence absolutely incontrovertible, that our police system from beginning to end, from the Sudder to the village Chokeydar, is utterly and inconceivably rotten. You cannot touch it without such palpable evidence of decay, that disgust is lost in astonishment at the mysterious principle of cohesion by which it is still held together. The village police, the root of the system, it is said, is utterly corrupt. The men live in a permanent state of starvation. They are found guilty before the courts of heinous crimes, more frequently than other men are of the most trivial offences. They are all, concludes the Lieutenant-Governor, thieves and robbers of necessity, or leagued with thieves and robbers, insomuch that when any one is robbed in a village, it is most probable that the first person suspected will be the village watchman." After so searching an investigation, after so complete an exposure of the defects of the judicial system, what need is there for the appointment of a commission of inquiry? What can there be to inquire about when everything is known? As the wisest of men has taught us, there is a time for all things. There is a time to investigate and a time to act. Investigation has been pushed to the utmost, and the time has arrived for the application of the remedy. Under recent orders from England, the entire police of India is now being remodelled. The force will be distributed into two separate bodies—the preventive and the detective. Higher allowances have been awarded to each class, and the management of the force in each district will be transferred to the charge of a European officer having no other duties to perform. Such are among the remedies proposed to be applied to the prime cause of much of the social evil which exists in Bengal. Measures also for the improvement of the courts of law are under the consideration of the Indian Government, and a bill for amending the law of landlord and tenant was some time since brought before the Legislative Council. Upon these three conditions—a strong and uncorrupt police; a simple, pure, and cheap judicial system; and a more equitable law between landlord and tenant—the amelioration of the rural population, so far as the Government are concerned, seems to depend. These conditions, aided by a powerful engine—a wide-spread system of national education—are about to be accorded. The rest must depend upon the people themselves, and upon their advancement in the scale of civilization. Defects in the civil administration of the country may be amended by the Government, but habits of slavish submission on the part of the people, a want of self-reliance, and the absence of physical and moral courage, are not matters to be dealt with by legislation, nor corrected by the labours of commissions of inquiry.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

SIR,—In the 745th page of Mr. Thornton's Indian Gazetteer (last edition), it is to be inferred from the context, that Colonel Elrington's force assaulted, and took the fortified town or city of Pahlunpore, on the 10th of October, 1817. You will, therefore, greatly oblige me by inserting this note in your next number of the Mail, as a correction; that is to say, that Colonel Elrington's force had nothing to do with the taking of Pahlunpore by assault on the 10th October, 1817, and that his force did not come up to Pahlunpore until two days after it was taken; that, moreover, it was taken by me, and Yaroo Jemadar, of the Guicowars, Mihie Kaunta force, which consisted of about 1,000 men of all arms, and 100 rank and file of the 8th Bombay Native infantry, under Lieut. Holland, of that regiment.

I have the honour to remain, Sir,

Your most obedient servant,

WM. MILES, Major-General, H. E. I. Service.

June 4, 1857.

P.S. I do myself the honour to enclose copy of a letter to me from Col. Elrington, on the subject of my communication.

SIR—I have had the satisfaction to receive your letter of yesterday announcing the reduction of Pahlunpore, and occupation of that city by the Guicowar troops, and beg to offer my sincere congratulation on this brilliant termination of your operations. I request you will communicate to Lieut. Holland, and the detachment under his command, my warmest thanks for the zeal and gallantry displayed by them upon this occasion. My movements will be guided by the information I may hereafter receive, but it is my present intention to take up a position between Pahlunpore and Deesa.

I have the honour, &c.,

R. G. ELRINGTON,

47th Foot, Lieut.-Col. Commg. D. F. F.

Capt. W. Miles,

Camp, Donja, 11th Feb. 1817.

L A W.

Several causes have been tried in the law courts recently, in which the suitors were connected with India. In Pace v. Dear, on a bill transaction, tried in the Court of Exchequer on the 4th inst., the plaintiff was described as an India merchant, carrying on business in Austin-friars, and the defendant a furniture-dealer. Both plaintiff and defendant admitted themselves to be bill-discounters. The action was brought to recover the sum of 48*l.* odd, the difference between a bill of exchange for 25*l.* odd and another for 300*l.* The latter bill was given by the plaintiff to the defendant to get rid of the previous bill. The defendant said he had agreed to take the risk of the 300*l.*, as he was to receive the difference between that and the 25*l.* bill which had been dishonoured, as a bonus for so doing. The bills of Sadleir and George Hudson had been brought to him by the plaintiff for discount, but he (the defendant) had refused to meddle with them. The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff for 35*l.* 11*s.* 3*d.*

THE CASE OF PACKMAN V. VIVIAN was decided by the Master of the Rolls on the 3rd inst. on a very short point. The bill was filed by Dr. Packman, who was formerly in the East-India Company's service. On his return to England he went about to Matlock, Cheltenham, Bath, and other places amateur doctoring. He never received fees. Among the intimate friends of the doctor was the Hon. Mrs. Vivian, who enjoyed the benefit of the plaintiff's medical aid in 1854, and up to her last illness in 1855. Mrs. Vivian died in May, 1855, having by her will appointed the doctor a legacy of 300*l.*, and a contingent interest in 7,000*l.* She also left a letter (not regularly executed as a will), by which she desired her executors to remunerate the plaintiff liberally for his attendance. Dr. Packman had never sent in any bill to Mrs. Vivian during her life, or in any way claimed payment; but after her death he claimed several hundred pounds as medical fees. This bill was filed against Captain Vivian, the husband, and the trustees of the will, to enforce the claim. The Master of the Rolls held that the attendance was meant to be gratuitous, and dismissed the bill with costs, except the costs of certain irrelevant evidence, which the defendants were to pay.

HARTLEY V. PONSONBY.—This was an action brought by a seaman, Robert Hartley, against the defendant, Henry Ponsonby, who was master of the ship Mobile, which in 1852 sailed from Liverpool to Port Philip, and thence to Bombay, performing the latter part of the voyage under difficulties, consequent upon the desertion of several of the crew in Australia. The plaintiff signed articles "to assist in taking the ship from Port Phillip to Bombay, with a crew of nineteen hands," for which service the defendant Ponsonby agreed to pay, in Liverpool, the sum of 40*l.*, and gave his promissory note for that amount (see L. Mail, Feb. 17). The plaintiff obtained a verdict in Hilary term last; but the defendant obtained a rule for a new trial. The court now confirmed the original verdict, Mr. Justice Erle observing, that although it was his conviction that sailors ought not to be encouraged in a moment of difficulty to insist on higher wages, yet he was ready to admit that it was unreasonable for the master of a vessel to require the crew to go on under circumstances like those connected with the voyage of the Mobile; it was, therefore, he (Mr. Justice Erle) had directed a verdict for the plaintiff on the first trial, which the judges now decreed was not to be disturbed.

PENINSULAR AND ORIENTAL STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY.

THE thirty-third half-yearly report notifies a dividend at the rate of three and a-half per cent. for the half-year ending 31st March last, making five per cent. on the share capital; these payments to be made together, clear of income-tax, on and after the 26th June.

In their last report the directors referred to the despatch of the Alma, Aden, Ava, and Azof, to the India and China stations; and they have now the satisfaction to announce that the three first-named vessels reached their respective destinations in safety, and are now in active service. The Azof, on her arrival at Mauritius, was chartered by the contractors for the mail service between that place and Aden, also alluded to in the last report, and is now running on that line, which is already becoming of importance in bringing additional traffic into the company's main lines at Aden.

The Precursor, Pottinger, and Chusan, were stated, in the last report, to have been engaged by the Indian Government as transports, for the purposes of the expedition to the Persian Gulf, then preparing. Since that time, the Sir Janettee Seejebhoy, the Haddington (sailing ship), and the Oriental, have also been chartered and employed in operations connected with the Persian war. The services of the Bentinck, Aden, and Bombay have likewise been temporarily availed of for the conveyance of troops and despatches; and the directors state, that the mail service has suffered no interruption in consequence of these extensive demands on the company's resources.

The intention of the Directors to establish a semi-monthly line between Bombay, the Straits, Hong-Kong, and Shanghai, was announced in the last report. The arrangements then referred to were completed early in the spring, and the second line was opened in correspondence with the steamer which left Southampton on the 20th of March. The state of affairs in China makes the re-establishment of a fortnightly communication with that country a matter of much public importance, and the Directors trust the result of the working of this commercial line may be such as to enable them to continue it throughout the year. An issue of new shares has just been completed, by which a fund of about 17,000*l.* has been realized.

EAST-INDIA SUGARS.—834,423 cwt. of sugar (not equal to the white-clayed of the West Indies), and 802,590 cwt. (not equal to the brown) were imported from the Mauritius last year; from the East Indies the importation amounted to 666,967 cwt. (not equal to white-clayed), and 508,289 cwt. (not equal to brown clayed).

COLONEL WAUGH, late of the London and Eastern Banking Company, on an application to the Bankruptcy Court, made on the 5th inst., obtained an enlargement of time to surrender. The application was granted on the ground of the alleged illness of the bankrupt.

OPIUM IN THE EAST INDIES.—It appears from a return to the House of Commons, printed on Saturday last, that the amount of all expenses incurred in the growth and manufacture of opium at the Benares opium agency in the year 1854-55 was Rs. 3,23,27,490; the amount realized by the sale was Rs. 10,52,74,279, and the amount of profit, exclusive of presidency charges, was Rs. 7,29,46,790. In the Behar agency the total amount of expenses appears to have been Rs. 90,24,183.

THE EUPHRATES VALLEY ROUTE TO INDIA.—A correspondence has taken place through the medium of a morning contemporary on the subject of the practicability of the Euphrates valley route for the purposes of the Euphrates Valley Railway Company. Major-General Chesney answers the objections raised in his letter published in the Times of the 6th instant. A correspondent of that journal (the Rev. G. F. Badger) having alluded to the mischievous inundations of the Lower Euphrates, General Chesney remarks that those inundations have been long known to him, and he considers them to be only the natural result of the neglect of the river's embankments. The reparation of these embankments formed a prominent part of the negotiations which he (General Chesney) carried out recently at Constantinople with reference to the proposed navigation of the river and railway.

A MEMORIAL from the commercial community in the City to the Post-master General, pointing out the constant delay in the transmission of the Indian Mails from Marseilles, has elicited the reply that "the arrangements for the conveyance of the Indian Mails through France rests with the French post-office;" and that the authorities on this side could therefore do nothing more than make the necessary recommendations. A further communication has been transmitted to the Duke of Argyll on behalf of the commercial community, in the hope that he may be induced to address another appeal (previous appeals having proved ineffectual) to the French Government. It is stated in the memorial of the city merchants that any increase of postage that might be necessary consequent on the means adopted for accelerating the Indian Mail at Marseilles would be cheerfully submitted to.

THE NEILGHERRIES: including an Account of their Topography, Climate, Soil, and Productions, and of the Effects of the Climate upon the European Constitution. By R. BAIKIE, M.D. Second Edition, revised and enlarged, with new Views, &c. By W. H. SMOULT, B.C.S.

FROM THE "HUKKARU."

"Mr. W. H. Smoult has got up, with great trouble and expense, an edition of Dr. R. Baikie's account of the Neigherries. The subject-matter of the work is of great interest, but the point we are most disposed to dwell upon is the admirable style in which Mr. Smoult has contrived to get the work illustrated. The large panoramic view of Ootacamund is a picture that well deserves a handsome frame, and is worth the price of the book itself.

FROM THE "ENGLISHMAN."

"The new edition is neatly printed, and is illustrated with maps and views, the latter being from original drawings taken on the spot, and lithographed by an artist whose work excels any we have yet seen in Calcutta."

FROM THE "PHOENIX."

"A most interesting work on the Neigherry Hills, compiled by Dr. Baikie, but edited, and, in fact, altogether remodelled, by W. H. Smoult, Esq.

A Bonus of Twenty per cent. from realized profits has been declared for the present year to all policy-holders on the profit scale who have paid five years' premium.

The advantages of this Society are as follow:—
Low Rates of Premium, calculated on the best and most recent investigations of mortality in India.

Annual participation in the profits after payment of premium for five years, by parties assured on the profit scale.

Immediate reduction of premium to the English rates in the case of a party assured proceeding to Europe for a permanency, and reduction after one year in the case of the party visiting Europe for a short period.

The civil rate only charged on the lives of parties in the military service, holding civil offices, as long as they continue in such office.

The Society also grants Deferred Annuities and Endowments payable at any given period.

Tables and full information may be had at the Office in Chatham Place; or on application to the Secretaries at Calcutta, Messrs. GORDON, STUART, and Co.; or to the Agents of the Agra and United Service Bank, at the other Indian Presidencies.

NEW GAZETTEER OF INDIA.

In one vol. 8vo., with Map, price £1. 1s.,

A GAZETTEER
OF THE

Territories under the Government of the East-India Company,

AND OF THE
NATIVE STATES ON THE CONTINENT OF INDIA.

By EDWARD THORNTON, Esq.,
Author of the "History of the British Empire in India."

The work has been compiled by the authority of the Court of Directors, and though comprised within a single volume, it will be found to contain the great mass of information comprehended in the four volumes of the "Gazetteer of India," published by the same author in 1854. This result has been obtained by retrenching some few redundancies, and by adopting an enlarged page and distributing the matter into two separate columns. By these means space has been also secured for the insertion of much new matter, rendered necessary by the political and territorial changes which have more recently taken place within our Eastern Possessions.

On the character of the work a few remarks will be sufficient. Its chief objects are,—

- 1st. To fix the relative position of the various cities, towns, and villages with as much precision as possible, and to exhibit with the greatest practicable brevity all that is known respecting them; and
- 2ndly. To note the various countries, provinces, or territorial divisions, and to describe the physical characteristics of each, together with their statistical, social, and political circumstances.

To these will be added minute descriptions of the principal rivers and chains of mountains; thus presenting to the Reader, within a brief compass, a mass of information which could not otherwise be obtained, except from a multiplicity of volumes and manuscript records. The volume, in short, may be regarded as an epitome of all that has yet been written and published respecting the territories under the government or political superintendence of the British power in India. Its merits have been frequently discussed in the General Courts of the East-India Company, where successive Chairmen have borne ample testimony to the utility of the publication, and where it has been characterised by the best-informed among the Proprietors as "a complete History of India, unfaint in any degree by political bias."

Allen's Maps of India & China.

MAP OF INDIA;

Showing the British Territories subdivided into Collectories, and the position and boundary of each Native State; chiefly compiled from Trigonometrical Surveys, executed by order of the Honourable Court of Directors of the East-India Company. On six sheets—Size, 5 ft. 6 in. high; 5 ft. 8 in. wide. £2; or on cloth, in a case, £2. 12s. 6d.; or with rollers, and varnished, £2. 3s.

The object kept in view in compiling this Map has been to render it available to the greatest possible extent for popular use. For this purpose the names of all stations, civil and military, are inserted, as well as those of all towns and places of note likely to be looked for. To make clear the subdivisions of the whole of the country, both British and native, the limits of the various districts and collectories, with their names, are distinctly indicated. The railways are laid down, and the trunk roads conspicuously coloured. The newly-acquired district in Burmah is included. To avoid, however, the confusion consequent upon over-crowding, and make the Map clear and easy for reference, the names of many small villages, and places of no present importance, have been omitted, and thus a very wide measure of comprehensiveness has been attained, while needless diffusiveness has been avoided.

A GENERAL MAP OF INDIA;

Compiled chiefly from Surveys executed by Order of the Honourable East-India Company. On six sheets—Size, 5 ft. 3 in. wide; 5 ft. 4 in. high. £2; or on cloth, in a case, £2. 12s. 6d.; or with rollers, and varnished, £2. 3s.

MAP OF INDIA:

From the most recent Authorities. On two sheets—Size, 3 ft. 10 in. wide 3 ft. 3 in. high. 10s.; or on cloth, in a case, £1. 1s.

MAP OF THE ROUTES IN INDIA;

With Tables of Distances between the principal Towns and Military Stations. On one sheet—Size, 2 ft. 3 in. wide; 2 ft. 9 in. high. 9s.; or on cloth, in a case, 12s.

In this Map are given the whole of the military and civil stations, together with the principal towns, the villages being omitted, so as to make the stations more prominent. The colouring defines the boundaries of the three Presidencies.

A MAP OF THE WESTERN PROVINCES OF HINDOOSTAN;
THE PUNJAB, CABOOL, SINDE, BHAWULPORE, &c.

PAYNE'S INDIAN CURRY POWDER, unequalled for its delicious flavour and stimulating qualities, 1 lb. bottles, 3s. 6d.; 7 for 21s. Curry and Mulligatawny Paste—1 lb. jars, 3s. 6d.; 7 for 21s. The following Condiments and Preserves are imported direct, and strongly recommended:—Indian Curry Sauce and Taponian Sauce, Fine Pickled Mangoes, Tamarind Fish, Nepal Chilly, Green Mango Chutnee, Bengal Club, Cashmere, Delhi, and Oseille. Preserved Mango, Golden Apple, Limes, Green Sweetmeats.—PAYNE and SONS, Foreign Warehouse, 323, Regent Street, and 46, Mortimer Street, London.

TO LATE RESIDENTS IN INDIA.—TRUE MADRAS CURRY, and MULLIGATAWNEY PASTE and CHUTNIES.—Messrs. BARRIE and Co., Vepery, Madras, to enable their old correspondents returning from India to continue the use of the celebrated Condiments, have made arrangements to forward regular supplies of the above, packed in glass jars for family use, at 1s. 9d. and upwards, which may be had of CROSSE and BLACKWELL, Purveyors to Her Majesty, 21, Soho Square; FORTNUM, MASON, and Co., Piccadilly; and of the principal Sauce Vendors throughout the kingdom. Each bottle is labelled, and BARRIE and Co., Madras, stamped on the glass.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS singularly efficacious in the cure of Bile and Indigestion.—Daniel Dogherty, of Aghadoey, was so afflicted with indigestion and a disordered stomach, that life had become quite a burden to him; he could scarcely digest any kind of food, even bread alone would occasion faintness and other unpleasant feelings: he tried a variety of remedies without the wished-for relief, but a few doses of Holloway's Pills had a most miraculous effect, for in a few weeks a perfect and most excellent cure was effected by them. Sold by all Medicine Vendors, at PROFESSOR HOLLOWAY'S Establishments, 244, Strand, London, and 80, Maiden Lane, New York; by A. Stampa, Constantinople; A. Guidici, Smyrna; E. Muir, Malta; and by all European and Native Vendors of Medicine throughout the whole of the East Indies.

UNDER THE PATRONAGE OF ROYALTY AND THE ARISTOCRACY THROUGHOUT EUROPE.

ROWLAND'S KALYDOR, an Oriental botanical preparation, for improving and beautifying the Complexion. It eradicates all redness, tan, pimples, spots, freckles, discolorations, and other cutaneous visitations. The radiant bloom it imparts to the cheek, and the softness and delicacy which it induces of the hands and arms, render it indispensable to every toilet. During the heat and dust of summer, or frost and bleak winds of winter, and in cases of sunburn, stings of insects, chilblains, chapped skin, or incidental inflammation, its virtues have long and extensively been acknowledged.—Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle. SOUND AND WHITE TEETH are not only indispensably requisite to a pleasing exterior in both sexes, but they are peculiarly appreciated through food. ROWLAND'S ODONTO; or, Pearl Dentifrice, compounded of Oriental ingredients, imported by the Proprietors at a great expense. This Powder is of inestimable value in preserving and beautifying the teeth, imparting to them a pearl-like whiteness, strengthening the gums, and rendering the breath sweet and pure.—Price 2s. 9d. per box. CAUTION.—The words "ROWLAND'S ODONTO" are on the label, and "A. ROWLAND and Sons, 20, Hatton-garden," engraved on the Government stamp, affixed on each box. Sold by them, and by Chemists and Perfumers.

WATCH, CLOCK, and CHRONOMETER MANUFACTORY, 33 AND 34, LUDGATE HILL, LONDON. ESTABLISHED 1740. J. W. BENSON & SONS.

MANUFACTURER of GOLD and SILVER WATCHES of every description, construction, and pattern, invites attention to his magnificent and unprecedented display of Watches, which is admitted to be the largest and best selected Stock in London. It consists of Chronometer, Duplex, Patent Detached Lever, Horizontal, and Vertical Movements, Jewelled, &c., with all the latest improvements, mounted in superbly-finished engine-turned and engraved Gold and Silver Cases. The designs engraved upon many of the cases are by eminent artists, and can only be obtained at this manufactory. If the important requisites, superiority of finish, combined with accuracy of performance, elegance, durability, and reasonableness of price, are wished for, the intending purchaser should visit this Manufactory, or send for the ILLUSTRATED PAMPHLET, published by J. W. BENSON (and sent post-free on application), which contains sketches, prices, and directions as to what Watch to buy, where to buy it, and how to use it. Several hundred letters have been received from persons who have bought Watches at this Manufactory, bearing testimony to the correct performance of the same. The following extracts from the opinions of the Press will, it is hoped, be a sufficient guarantee to the public that they may secure at this House a good Watch at a reasonable price:—

Dec. 5th, 1856.

HANWELL COLLEGE, MIDDLESEX,
SEVEN MILES FROM LONDON.

INDIA AND THE COLONIES.

The increasing importance of the cultivation of the LANGUAGES of the EAST, and the immediate advantages that result from their acquisition, have induced the Principal to make arrangements for affording INSTRUCTION therein.

The rudiments of Hindustani, Persian, and Arabic, will be taught to all who are intended for employment in our Eastern Possessions; and the more advanced Pupils will be prepared for their examination on their arrival in India.

The course of instruction includes not only that which is necessary to pass at Addiscombe or Haileybury, but all that may be requisite for those who are destined to pursue an Indian career.

The history and geography of the country, and the general features of Anglo-Indian life, are taught by a gentleman whose perfect acquaintance with India, from long residence there, peculiarly qualifies him for the duties he has undertaken.

The great advantage to Parents in India of an Institution of this kind must be evident. At a short distance from London, in a proverbially healthy locality, they may place their children from an EARLY AGE under a system from which there need be no departure until their education is completely finished; a class being expressly formed for the matriculation at the University of London, wherein they may matriculate at sixteen years of age, and graduate two years after that time.

Prospectuses, with full particulars, may be had on application to the Rev. J. A. EMERTON, D.D., Hanwell College, Middlesex.

OUTFITS FOR INDIA.—EAST-INDIA CADETS ASSISTANT-SURGEONS, &c., SUPPLIED with every requisite for their OUTFIT, of superior quality and workmanship, at 20 per cent. lower than any other house; also every description of Camp and Cabin Furniture. ILLUSTRATED PRICED CATALOGUES, containing Estimates for either Service, as required, forwarded on application, from B. WOOLF and Co., Military, Naval, and Diplomatic Outfitters, Army Contractors, and Cabin Furniture Manufacturers, 45, Old Bond Street, one door from Piccadilly.

CADETS and OFFICERS of CAVALRY and INFANTRY, WRITERS, and ASSISTANT-SURGEONS, having appointments for India, can be completely equipped, on the most reasonable terms, at MAYNARD and HARRIS'S, 146, Leadenhall Street.

The Articles supplied at this Establishment are of the best quality, and strictly correct to Regulation, under guarantee both for the Cavalry and Infantry. Samples, with Prices and detailed Lists of Necessaries, may be seen at the Warehouse.

Overland Trunks, Field or Cabin Furniture, with every article of Personal Outfit, ready for shipment.

MAYNARD & HARRIS, 126, Leadenhall Street, opposite the India House.

OVERLAND ROUTE.—STEAM to INDIA and CHINA, &c., via Egypt.—The PENINSULAR and ORIENTAL STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY BOOK PASSENGERS and receive GOODS and PARCELS for the MEDITERRANEAN, EGYPT, ADEN, BOMBAY, CEYLON, MADRAS, CALCUTTA, the STRAITS, and CHINA, by their Steamers leaving Southampton on the 4th and 20th of every month. For further particulars, apply at the Company's Offices, 122, Leadenhall Street, London; and Oriental Place, Southampton.

MESSRS. W. H. ALLEN & CO., in addition to their business as Publishers and Booksellers, beg to remind their Friends and Correspondents in India, that they continue to undertake AGENCY of every description, as well as the execution of Orders from Regimental Messes, Book-Clubs, &c.

Messrs. ALLEN & Co., from their long experience in the East-India Trade, and knowledge of the requirements of residents in India, feel confidence in executing all commissions entrusted to them; and as their mode of business is, to give personal attention to all orders, and to charge the same at the lowest remunerative prices, they must request to be favoured with a remittance (or reference for payment in London) from those parties who may desire to avail themselves of their services, and who have not, at present, accounts with the house.

Leadenhall Street, London, May 20th, 1856.

LADIES' OUTFITS TO INDIA.

JOHN BESEMERES and CO., Manufacturers of LADIES' READY-MADE LINEN, Under-clothing, Baby-linen, and every article required for a family proceeding to India, are now compiling Outfits at their Manufacturing Prices, thus effecting an important saving in the outlay. Wedding Outfits on the same terms.

Ladies' Long Cloth Chemises, 1s. 6d., 2s., 2s. 6d.; Filled Night Dresses, 2s. 6d., 3s., 3s. 6d.; Long Cloth Drawers, 1s. 6d., 1s. 9d., 2s.; Petticoats, 1s. 6d., 2s. 6d., 3s. 6d.; Dressing-gowns, 7s. 6d., 8s. 6d., 10s. each. A detailed Priced List of every article may be ordered by post. The Outfit Department is entirely superintended by young women of competent skill, aided by dressmakers of taste and experience.

All the Under-clothing is made up by selected classes of carefully-trained private hands, needlewomen, who receive constant employment throughout the year, at a liberal and fixed rate of wages. This system, ORIGINATED BY THIS THE OLDEST ESTABLISHMENT OF THE KIND IN LONDON, has effectually redeemed the character of Ready-made Linen for strength and neatness, while its admitted usefulness and economy for garments for family and general home use, have placed it among the successful manufactures of the day.

To the Merchant exporting to Australia and other settlements, these goods, from the high character they bear, are very attractive, and rank among the safest shipments to those parts.

Ready-made Linen Warehouses, 61, 62, 63, and 64, Houndsditch, London.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE present mail brings intelligence of a serious crisis in India, though the details, we are happy to find, are somewhat less alarming than we had been led to expect from the telegraphic communications received in London on Saturday. In our last number we mentioned that a telegraphic message had been received at Bombay just before the departure of the mail, announcing that the 3rd Bengal light cavalry were in open revolt at Meerut. The report unhappily turns out to have been but too true. Eighty-five men of this regiment, who had refused to handle the new cartridges, had been tried by court-martial and sentenced to various terms of imprisonment with hard labour. Their sentences were read out on parade on the 9th May, and the offenders marched off to gaol. On the evening of Sunday, the 10th, while most of the Europeans were attending divine service, the men of the 11th and 20th regiments of native infantry, which were also stationed at Meerut, assembled upon the parade-ground in armed and tumultuous bodies. Upon becoming acquainted with the fact, the European officers hurried from their quarters with a view to pacify the insurgents. Colonel Finnis, of the 11th, appears to have been the first victim of the outbreak. This gallant officer, while addressing a party of the 20th regiment, was shot in the back by a sepoy. Some other officers of the 11th shared the fate of their colonel. At this time the troopers of the 3rd cavalry rushed from their quarters and joined the revolted infantry. The next step of the rebel force was to liberate their comrades in the gaol, which they accomplished, together with the release of about a thousand or twelve hundred ordinary prisoners. Meanwhile the European portion of the brigade was called out. This consisted of her Majesty's 6th dragoon guards, the 60th rifles, and the artillery. But before these troops could be assembled, half the station was in flames; every residence was fired, and every European, man, woman, or child, who fell in the way of the mutineers, was massacred under circumstances of remorseless barbarity. Happily many of the officers' families had already escaped to the European lines, where they took refuge in the artillery school of industry. Mr. Greathed, the commissioner, and his wife, were saved, it is said, by the fidelity of their native servants. Each officer as he hastened to call back the men to their allegiance was cut down, and by the time the European force had reached the native lines, the bloody work of the mutineers was pretty well completed. At the second volley of the 60th rifles, the rebels fled precipitately, and were followed some miles out of Meerut by the dragoons, who sabred a considerable number; but by some oversight the pursuit was discontinued; and to this circumstance may be attributed the perpetration of a similar tragedy at Delhi. The rebels reached that city early on the following morning, where they were instantly joined, as if by previous concert, by three other native regiments, the 38th, the 54th, and the 74th native infantry, and by the artillery, which, however, is said to have done so with much reluctance. Unfortunately no European troops were cantoned at Delhi, and the city was now at the mercy of the insurgents, who ran riot through the streets, reproducing the bloody scenes of Meerut. The arsenal and magazine were fortunately saved from falling into their hands by the gallantry of Lieut. G. D. Willoughby, of the artillery, who blew them both up, and, notwithstanding the report that he had perished, appears, on the authority of the Bengal Hurkaru, to have escaped after accomplishing the gallant feat. All the Europeans of the place, except the few who rode for their lives to neighbouring stations, are said to have been butchered; but as the place remains in the hands of the mutineers, it may be hoped that others, of whose fate we have no certain news, have also escaped. Thirteen European fugitives from the city are reported to be in safety at a place called Khekurak, near Bagput, in the Meerut district. It is feared, however, to be only too certain that Mr. Fraser, the commissioner, has fallen, together with Captain Douglas, commandant of the palace guard; Mr. Jennings, chaplain of the station, with his daughter, and many others of all degrees, including Sir Theophilus Metcalfe. Those who are believed to have escaped from Delhi, are—

3rd Light Cavalry.—Dr. Christie.

6th N.I.—Lieut. Templer, badly wounded.

20th N.I.—Lieut. Lewes, slightly.

Captain Fraser, whose name appears among the killed at Meerut, was commandant of the Bengal Sappers and Miners. He was marching down from the head-quarters of his corps at Roorkee to Meerut with a body of his men. On reaching their destination, the sappers fell out among themselves, probably in discussing the propriety of following the mutinous example that had been set them; and when their commanding officer attempted to compose their quarrel, one of their number shot him through the head. They then broke and fled, but were pursued by parties of the carabinieri and 60th, and for the most part killed or captured. At Delhi the mutineers having got rid of the English, plundered the bank and the city; and its treasures being at their disposal, they proceeded to set up a king, and proclaimed the son of the late Mogul emperor the new sovereign of India.

On the part of the Government the most active measures have been taken to suppress this revolt. The 34th Native Infantry were disbanded on the 6th May. Meerut has been entirely delivered from the mutineers. An outbreak among the troops cantoned at Ferozepoor was summarily quelled. If Lahore has not been free from the contagion of mutiny, the decisive steps taken there by Sir John Lawrence are sufficient to crush all further symptoms of insubordination; and, according to the latest private account the Punjab may be regarded as secure. At Lucknow the 7th Oude Irregular Infantry refused to obey, but were speedily coerced by the stern promptitude of Sir Henry Lawrence. The mutineers had no sooner beheld the artillery with their matches lighted than their courage failed them. They threw down their arms and fled in fear and trembling from the parade-ground. At Agra and the neighbouring stations the garrisons remain stanch, and detachments were advancing towards Delhi. The Commander-in-Chief had moved down from Umballa with a strong European force, consisting of her Majesty's 75th regiment, the 9th lancers, the 1st fusiliers, and two troops of European horse-artillery; while a cordon of troops of the Gwalior, Bhurtpore, and Patteala contingents was being drawn around Delhi to prevent the escape of the mutineers. One of the first acts of the Lieutenant-Governor was to issue the vigorous proclamations which we publish elsewhere, placing under martial law the districts around Meerut and Delhi. The conduct of some of the native regiments stands out in gratifying contrast with that of the rebel force. Upon the whole, we are disposed to trust that the storm is subsiding, and that the chief movement is likely to be confined to Delhi. Still the first measure called for is an immediate accession to the strength of our European army in India. Were the Euphrates Valley Railway completed, the dispatch of twenty regiments from England would prove an easy matter. With the circuitous route round the Cape, the accommodation of four or five regiments will be attended with difficulty; and these, moreover, instead of reaching their destination in three or four weeks, will probably not arrive in Calcutta for the next four or five months.

The ruler of Hyderabad, or, as he is sometimes, called the Nizam of the Deccan, whose illness we noticed in a former number, died at Hyderabad on the 16th May. The city was perfectly quiet, and the eldest son of the departed monarch was proclaimed as his successor on the 17th instant, a royal salute being fired on the occasion.

The Court of Directors have sanctioned the introduction of the new tunic for the infantry and artillery of the Company's service.

Great distress is caused in China by the scarcity of food. The neighbourhood of Foochow continued disturbed by rebels. It is feared that serious injury will thereby be caused to trade.

MUTINY IN THE ARMY.

THE disaffected Regiments.—The following regiments belonging to the Bengal army have, during one month, either been disbanded, or have openly arrayed themselves against Government:—

Mutined at Meerut:—

The 3rd Regiment Light Cavalry.
The 11th Regiment Native Infantry.
The 20th Regiment do.
The Sappers and Miners.

Mutined at Delhi:—

The 30th Regiment Native Infantry.
The 54th Regiment do.
The 74th Regiment do.
A Native Battery of Artillery.

Mutined at Ferozepore:—

The 45th Regiment Native Infantry.
The 57th Regiment do.

Disbanded at Barrackpore:—

The 19th Regiment Native Infantry.
The 34th Regiment do (7 companies).

DESPATCH OF EUROPEAN TROOPS FROM BOMBAY AND MADRAS.—The opportune return of our European forces from the gulf, enabled us to despatch, without landing, H.M.'s 61st and 78th regiments to Calcutta some days ago, and the troop of Madras horse-artillery which was waiting here for transports to convey it to Madras. This force left Bombay a week ago by the steamers Assaye and Queen Victoria, and the transports Ruby Castle, Avalanche, and Kingsdown. In addition to these troops the 1st Fusiliers have been despatched up the Indus; so that the good conduct of our native army and the perfect confidence we have in its discipline and loyalty, have enabled us to despatch a force of four thousand Europeans to the Bengal side in the last ten days. Madras also is readily furnishing its contingent, and within a month the European army of Bengal will be strengthened by an increase of ten or twelve thousand men from the other presidencies. The Semiramis is going to Ceylon immediately, to embark part of H.M.'s 37th foot for Calcutta.—Bombay Times.

SURAT.—It has been widely rumoured in town for the last three days, that a Mahomedan outbreak has taken place at Surat; but according to last advices from that place, everything was quiet there, and it was not expected that any disturbance of the peace would take place. As a measure of precaution, however, the garrison had been reinforced by a wing of the 9th regiment N.I., which must have arrived two days ago. There is, therefore, reason to believe that the rumours spread here are altogether without foundation.—Bombay Times.

LETTER FROM THE 7TH OUDE MUTINEERS TO THE 48TH N.I.—A correspondent informs the Hurkaru that the intercepted letter from the 7th Oude mutineers to the 48th regiment contained the following pithy sentence:—"We are ready to join in any tumasha—tell us what we are to do; if you tell us we ought to surrender our arms, we'll do so; if to fight, we are ready."

NEEMUCH AND NUSSEERABAD are said to be implicated.

AGRA.—We have received the following extract from the manager of the Agra branch of the Delhi Gazette:—

We have received from the best authority the following satisfactory intelligence:—

"The Commander-in-Chief is moving down from Umballa with a very strong force, including four or five European regiments, besides European artillery, which will join him from Meerut. The Pateela horse, under Captain McAndrew, have reached Meerut, and are keeping open communication with Kurnaul. The Commander-in-Chief will be met, probably at Bhagput, by half the Meerut brigade with nine guns, all manned by Europeans. The Ghoorka regiment (Sirmoor battalion), will be at Boolundshuhur to-day, and are prepared to check flight in that direction. The country around Delhi will be cleared by the Pateela and Sheend horse, who will communicate with the Ulwah and Bhurtapore forces, now moving on Pulwah, so as to shut the mutineers up in Delhi.

"The news from Cawnpore, Lucknow, and Allahabad is quite satisfactory. One hundred pensioners from Chunar have been added to the garrison of Allahabad. A spy was found in the lines of the 9th native infantry at Allyghur, exciting the sepoys to rise and release the prisoners in the jail. The sepoys immediately seized him and carried him off to the commanding officer. He will no doubt be hung at once. The conduct of the 9th native infantry has been admirable both at Allyghur and Etawah, and their loyalty will not be forgotten when the proper time comes for rewarding the faithful."

From the Mofussilite extra, dated the 20th, we take the following:—

(By Electric Telegraph.)

SAHARUNPOOR, May 16.—"The Goorkhas have just passed through in the highest spirits, and only too glad to get a chance of fighting. They are as much to be depended on as our own men. The Rajah of Pateela has sent all seditious letters to the commissioner. The Commander-in-Chief was in Umballah yesterday evening, and two more European regiments from the hills."

EXTRACT from a private letter from an officer at Calcutta during the late disaffection of certain regiments there:—

"The 70th light N.I., I am proud and happy to say, has behaved like true British soldiers, and are known among their brethren in arms as the 'Ghora puttun' (the European regiment),—an honourable distinction, though meant as expressive of the extreme contempt that the other N.I. regiments feel for them; they nickname them 'eunuchs and renegades,' because they remain faithful to their governors, and do not join them in revolt; they are a fine set of fellows, and this makes me like them better than ever. Such is the confidence placed by Government in our men, that to their care, and theirs alone (not another regiment shares the honour), are committed all the prisoners of the 34th, and the band and colours of the disbanded 19th N.I.

"Our quarter-guard is now full of prisoners handcuffed, who will, I expect, be eventually tried and shot as traitors. They selected our regiment to furnish the guard for Government House and other responsible duties in Calcutta. This is complimentary and gratifying to us all. The men are worked very hard now, and have to do double duty; they are hated by the other regiments, who, they know, would never miss an opportunity of mobbing them; but they do not grumble at all, and, I think, feel flattered by this show of confidence. We had a guard of our grenadiers over the prisoners at the quarter-guard, and I expect you would not see many such in any army. I don't think there was a man under six feet, well dressed and set up.

"We are all very glad that the 70th has behaved so well, as you may imagine. There was a row reported the other day, and the general at once ordered that the 70th should be got under arms; the men were equipped, armed, and ready on parade in ten minutes.

THE MASSACRE AT DELHI.—A lady, an eye-witness of the terrible scene, thus describes it:—"When the officers rushed out to call the men to their allegiance, the men turned on them and shot them down. When our troops got down, the three regiments were on their way to Delhi (where there are no European troops) to call on the king and city to rise. By some mistake they were allowed to go, and not followed up and cut off; but they had first gone to the jail, and they let eighty-five of the 3rd cavalry troopers free, and one thousand two hundred other prisoners. They murdered ladies in the most brutal manner, burning them half, and then cutting them up, and stripping them naked, and leaving them to be found by our men the next day. They rushed into every house to murder every white face. We escaped for our lives to the European barracks. Our house escaped by a miracle, and in the morning we went back with a guard to save a few valuables. The Greatheeds had a very narrow escape of being murdered. The people were in the house burning and plundering it. They escaped to the roof and remained there until the heat was too great to bear, and then they managed somehow to get into the garden, where they remained all night in danger from straggling parties of plunderers. The whole station is deserted for one part. All the women population are put in a large square—the artillery school of instruction—and are guarded, while the troops are concentrated in one part, as we have not Europeans to guard the whole place."

MEERUT, May 17.—"The sappers and miners, 800 strong, arrived from Roorkie yesterday morning, and after having killed their commanding officer, Captain Fraser, last evening, 400 of them made off for Roorkie, 50 were shot in the attack, which of course followed the murder of Captain Fraser, and the rest were made prisoners, and out of these prisoners 59 more were killed last night, at about eleven o'clock, for trying to escape. We can never get a night's rest here, for the alarm sounds so often that we are afraid to sleep; the gentlemen of our party keep watch by turns all night."

Another correspondent, under the same date, writes:—

"You would naturally suppose we should be in danger from the immense number of prisoners that escaped. Such, however, is not the case. A few have returned in person, and a great number more have reported their escape to the jailer and various thadars, leaving word where they are to be found when the jail is ready for them.

"Others, zemindars of good standing, who are in for affrays, have done good service since their escape, and I believe truly that were the jail ready for them to-day, 75 per cent. would be back to complete their terms within a week or ten days, without the slightest compulsion being used."

May 18.—"Daks becoming a little more regular now. There are so many reports going about, that we cannot believe the one-twentieth part of what we hear.

"This morning we heard that the king of Delhi is dead, and some say his son is proclaimed king in his stead, and others that the son will have nothing to do with the rebels. Last night, I think, they did expect some sort of an attack on the Laboratory, for all the gentlemen from our part were taken away to guard the wicket, and some placed on the walls.

"We went to see the nuns to-day; they are very comfortably settled in the ward of the Rifle Hospital; they say they will never forget the kindness and generosity shown by those who were instrumental in rescuing them.

"We heard a report yesterday, which is rather cheering if it is true. It is said that the King of Delhi sent some of the insurgents, native cavalry, to the Rajah of Jhind, asking his assistance in coming against the English; the Rajah of Jhind happened to be out shooting, or parading his regiment, and immediately he found out on what errand the cavalry had come, he turned round to his men, and ordered them to cut down every man of them.

"A servant has just come in: he says there is a fire close by Mr. Trotter's place; a quantity of straw and wood, which had been collected there, was set on fire by some of the bazaar people.

"Six natives were hung last evening,—all murderers, I believe; another man is to be hung this evening.

"Col. Hogg was wounded slightly the day before yesterday in the affray with the sappers."

May 19.—The artillery at Delhi were absolutely forced from their guns by the 38th N.I., and only joined the insurgents after many hours—most unwillingly.

The 38th men shot officers, but only of other regiments.

The 54th N.I. killed at least one of their own.

The 74th N.I. were negatively passive.

The dawk agents in Agra have received telegraph notice from Calcutta, to send all carriages down without delay, for the purpose of bringing up European troops.

DUGSHAI, May 15.—"Our fine fellows, the 1st Europeans, marched off, the night before last, towards Umballa—going 40 miles the first march, with 60 rounds of ball-cartridge carried by each soldier. Nothing could exceed the spirit and alacrity with which they received the summons to set out on service, and they marched off the parade-ground with tremendous cheers.

"The sick and convalescents muster among them men enough to guard this hill, and all who come to it for refuge for any length of time."

DISARMING TROOPS AT LAHORE.

Telegraph Office, May 13, 1857.

From General Reid, Peshawur. To Rawul Pindie, Sir J. Lawrence, to Simla. Commander-in-Chief, officers commanding all stations in the Punjab, respectively, to be forwarded by the assistant in charge of telegraph office or post, as the case may be.

The senior military officer in the Punjab, Major-General Reid, having this morning received news of the disarming of the troops at Meeran Meer, a council of war was held, consisting of General Reid, Brigadier Cotton, Brigadier Neville Chamberlain, Colonel Edwardes, and Colonel Nicholson, and the following measures were resolved on, subject to the confirmation of the Commander-in-Chief.

General Reid assumes the chief military command in the Punjab; his head-quarters will be with the head-quarters of the Punjab Civil Government, and a moveable column will be formed at Jhelum at once, consisting of H.M.'s 27th foot from Nowshera, H.M.'s 24th foot from Rawul Pindie, one European troop of horse artillery from Peshawur, one light field battery from Jhelum, guide corps from Murdan, 16th irregular cavalry from Rawul Pindie, 1st Punjab infantry from Bunnoo, Kumaon battalion from Rawul Pindie, a wing 2nd Punjab cavalry from Kohat, half-company of sappers from Attock.

The necessary orders for this column have been issued. The column will move on every point in the Punjab, where open mutiny requires to be put down by force, and officers commanding at all stations in the Punjab will co-operate with this column.

(Signed) J. MACPHERSON, Lieut.-Col.,
Military Secretary.

Received at Lahore, 10 P.M., 14th May, 1857.

The above was received last night by electric telegraph, and will show the community the vigorous efforts in progress.

An express from Ferozepore has been received, stating that the 57th N.I. and the 45th N.I. mutinied. The 10th cavalry stood by the Europeans, and the two native regiments were broken and dispersed, and that the 57th were coming in and delivering up their arms.

The Lieutenant-Governor of the North-Western Provinces has issued the following

"PROCLAMATION.

"The Lieutenant-Governor announces for the information of the faithful subjects of the British Government in all towns, stations, and districts of the North-Western Provinces, that active measures have been commenced and will be promptly and vigorously prosecuted, for the signal punishment of the band of mutineers and murderers, who have in the cities and cantonments of Meerut and Delhi disgraced the honourable name of soldiers, and have committed a series of treacherous and cold-blooded barbarities even upon helpless women, which will draw down upon them the exemplary vengeance of the European and other regiments. The forces from Meerut, Umballa, and the Hills are being fast concentrated, and will co-operate with the contingents of the Rajpootana States in surrounding the insurgents, by preventing their escape from their deeply-merited retribution.

"The Lieutenant-Governor calls on all the subjects of the British power, and on the loyal people of the British districts, to watch vigilantly against the possibility of successful attempts at flight on the part of the insurgents, after they have been attacked and dispersed by the British troops.

"European and native portions of the military forces now rapidly assembling will honourably and eagerly vie with each other in the extirpation of the traitorous criminals who have endeavoured to sow utterly groundless distrust between the powerful and beneficent British Government and its attached native soldiery, whom it has protected and distinguished with favour from the formation of its empire, and who have made themselves famous in history by the devoted bravery and zeal which they have displayed in its services.

"The British Government will always highly value and reward the services of its good soldiers. It will ever strictly respect their rights, usages, religious feelings, and consider them as its children, entitled to its protection in their vigour and in old age. It will punish the acts of faithless traitors with swift justice.

"Evil-minded men have tried to deceive the minds of the native soldiery by gross and unfounded misrepresentations of the intentions of the British Government. Those intentions are what they have always been, of scrupulous regard for the faith and customs of every class and sect of its subjects and servants.

"The population of the country generally will pursue their accustomed occupations in tranquillity and security. Whenever it may be necessary, additional police or other forces will be raised for their protection. But the chief care of all must be to render impossible the escape of the fugitive criminals, who will now be attacked in whatever part of the country they may be found."

"PROCLAMATION.

"The Lieutenant-Governor, North-Western Provinces, is hereby pleased, in virtue of authority delegated to him by the Right Hon. the Governor-General in Council, to order the suspension, as regards the offence against the State specified in Section 4, Regulation X., of 1804, of the functions of the ordinary criminal courts of judicature within the districts of Meerut, Muzzaffernugger, Boolundshuhur, and the Delhi territory east of the river Jumna, in which the inhabitants have lately been guilty of acts of violence and plunder, and to establish martial law in those districts until further orders.

"Immediate trials will be held by courts-martial of all persons of the class specified in Section 2, Regulation X., of 1804, taken in arms in open hostility against the British Government, or in the act of opposing by force of arms the authority of the same, or in the actual commission of any overt act of rebellion against the State, or in the act of openly aiding and abetting traitors and enemies of the British Government within any part of the districts before mentioned; and such persons, on conviction by the sentence of a court-martial of any of the offences before enumerated, will be liable to the punishment of death and to the forfeiture of their property and effects, real and personal, as declared in Section 3 of the foregoing regulation.

"By order of the Hon. the Lieutenant-Governor, North-Western Provinces."

The following is from an Agra Gazette Extraordinary:—

"Whereas it has been ascertained that in the districts of Meerut, and in and immediately round Delhi, some short-sighted rebels have dared to raise resistance to the British Government, it is hereby declared that every talookdar, zemindar, or other owner of land who may join in such resistance, will forfeit all rights in landed property, which will be confiscated and transferred in perpetuity to the faithful talookdars and zemindars of the same quarters, who may show, by their acts of obedience to the Government, and exertions for the maintenance of tranquillity, that they deserve reward and favour from the State."

"The powerful British Government will, in a marked manner, recompense its friends and punish its enemies."

The following proclamation on the subject of caste, and the alleged attempt to proselytize, has been issued by the Governor-General in Council:—

THE BENGAL ARMY.

The whole of the disposable troops in and around Calcutta were concentrated at Barrackpore yesterday morning, to carry out the order for disbanding such officers and men of the 34th N.I. as were present in the lines on the 29th March, when Adjutant Baugh was wounded. At daylight two sides of a square were formed by H.M.'s 53rd and 84th, the 2nd, 43rd, and 70th N.I., two squadrons of cavalry, consisting of the body guard, and the 11th irregulars, and a light field battery with six guns. When the line was formed, seven companies of the 34th, about 400 strong, were halted in front of the guns; the order for disbandment was read out by the interpreter, Lieut. Chamier, and after a few energetic remarks upon the enormity of their offence, General Hearsey commanded them to pile their arms, and strip off the uniform which they had disgraced. Of course they obeyed without a moment's hesitation. The work of paying up their arrears was then commenced, and in two hours the disorderly sepoys, now converted into an orderly mob, were marched off to Pulta Ghaut for conveyance to Chinsurah, the grenadiers of the 84th, and a portion of the body guard attending their footsteps. When they left their lines, order having been taken, they with their families and baggage were sent on to Chinsurah. Instructions were given to the various police authorities to hinder them from crossing the river, and it is hoped, that the public have heard the last of the second mutiny of the 34th B.N.I.

We shall hear that disbanding is a terrible punishment to the Indian sepoy, accustomed as he is to rely absolutely on the Government for his own subsistence and that of his family, in manhood and old age. There were half a dozen men yesterday morning down whose withered cheeks the tears poured like rain; and the subadar-major, who is said to be at the bottom of all the treason hatched in the regiment, sobbed outright as he threw the coat which he was never more to wear across his arm. But there were three native officers besides himself degraded and turned adrift; and if they were willing to run the chance of ruin, can we wonder at the private soldiers, whose risk was so much less, imitating their example? It is unpleasant to pay the stakes when the game is at an end; but to more than nine-tenths of the disbanded men the loss seemed no greater than what an order of dismissal would entail in the estimation of honest English workmen. Disbanding may be a heavy sentence for venial offences; but it is no adequate punishment for mutineers who contemplated massacre and essayed murder. Had it been thought advisable to satisfy the needs of justice, every man of the guard which stood by and saw Lieut. Baugh and Sergeant-Major Hewson attacked, would have been tried by court-martial and shot within twenty-four hours afterwards.

The Government are disposed to take a practical view of the disaffection that prevails in many regiments of the Bengal army. They have resolved, it appears, to look upon a mutiny as a mere strike of discontented labourers, which a little coercion, a little persuasion, and much talk upon the folly of the proceeding, are sure to put down. In one respect, however, the Bengal sepoy has an advantage over the Manchester spinner; he keeps his tools and receives his wages when on strike, whereas the latter is entirely disbanded, with very little chance of being re-enlisted. Both in Calcutta and Cottonopolis much mischief and waste of time ensue on these occasions. A great deal of contradictory advice is given to masters and workmen; day by day there are fresh counsels and new resolves; and each might chant as applicable to their condition, the rhymes invented to show the bewilderment of poor mortals who lack the power of controlling circumstance.

"Now we go up, up, up,
And now we go down, down, down,
Here we go backwards and forwards,
And there we go round and round."

As yet we see no signs of the Bengal strikes being brought to a close. The men are confident of their power to dictate terms to their masters. Not only at Barrackpore, but at Umbillah, Seal-kote, Meerut, Oude, and other places, the defying spirit has been openly exhibited, and for "gaze of battle," the sepoy points to the nightly burnings of bungalows and barracks. It has transpired that the 19th Regiment when ordered to march to Barrackpore, sent a deputation of four men to the 34th, inviting the latter to join them in murdering their officers. A jemadar of the 2nd has been arrested on the charge of inviting an independent Rajah to rise in insurrection. A European sergeant has been murdered at Fulta, under circumstances of great mystery, and every hour gives birth to new rumours of mutiny and intended massacre. Meanwhile, H. M. 53rd are at Barrackpore, living under tents with the thermometer at 108 inside the canvas. The 84th are kept in hand at Chinsurah, and from time to time reports get abroad of vigorous measures being under consideration. No body knows of what it is that the sepoy complains, nor what course he proposes to take in securing a remedy; how it is intended to repress the existing signs of treason, nor how it is proposed to make mutiny less likely in the future.

The Governor-General may be perplexed to choose between the numberless projects of army reform submitted to his notice; but one fact, which continually comes to the surface in the progress of every inquiry into the state of the Bengal regiments, may furnish him with a useful hint for future legislation. He cannot fail to observe that the sepoy plots with perfect safety. We learn the existence of the crime only by the explosion. The objects of the conspiracy may be guessed at, but of its progress we have not the most remote inkling. Nothing could more clearly demonstrate the isolation in which the European officer lives, and the complete independence of internal control enjoyed by the native officers. There cannot be a doubt that in every case the latter have it in their power to detect the earliest signs of disaffection; and, knowing the value which they set upon their commissions, it might be asked why they neglect their duty? The answer should be, that, in attending treasonable meetings, they have nothing to dread. No one but their co-religionists is aware of what is going forward; and until design ripens into action there is no occasion to think of consequences. It would be altogether different were it as dangerous to scheme as to rebel; if the European officer knew what went on in the tent as well as what transpired on parade. And we cannot help thinking that the commanding officer who is unacquainted with the internal life of his regiment, could be better employed elsewhere than at the head of it. The fact that a mutiny is organized at head-quarters without his knowledge is prima facie proof of his incompetence.

There is a natural tendency on the part of colonels and councillors to exalt the days, if not the deeds, of their youth, but facts bear the former out in the assertion that the native army has changed greatly for the worse. The sepoy respects the holder of power, and half a century back the commanding officer, if a dubious parent, was an actual master, having authority both to reward and punish. Place the sepoy at this moment in a position where, from the energy of his colonel or the locality of his station, the game of mutiny is an unsafe one, and we may rest assured that he will not venture to play it. Whilst there is perhaps not a cantonment in Bengal in which appearances of discontent are not visible, we have the authority of the distinguished officer in command of the Pegu division—himself belonging to the Madras army,—for saying, that, in spite of much that might reasonably provoke dissatisfaction in the minds of the troops serving in that province, their conduct was all that could be desired. Writing to the Colonel of the 47th N.I. under date of the 8th ultimo, the Assistant Adjutant-General says, "Major-General Bell desires me to take this opportunity to express the satisfaction he has experienced in commanding Bengal troops; that their conduct has been exemplary, they have given no trouble, and in cordially bidding the 47th regiment farewell, he begs to assure all ranks of his best wishes for their welfare." Now had the 47th been stationed for the last three years in Bengal, we may be permitted to doubt if even the soldierly ability of Colonel Pett would have entitled it to the praise given in the above extract. The system pursued at army head-quarters would have made such a result almost impossible.

We hope that Government will modify, if it cannot abolish, the rule of centralisation which obtains at present with regard to all that relates to the discipline of the army. We do not believe that a Commander-in-Chief is able to ruin the service, as if so, the work would have been consummated in our own time; nor, on the other hand, do we expect that the chief military authority can save it. We want Sir George Anson to allow commanding officers to do more, even if it should involve the necessity of himself doing less. They should be made responsible for the condition of their regiments, and clothed with all the power that is needful to ensure prompt service from the ambitious, and unhesitating obedience from all. With this reform in the internal machinery of the army, and the substitution of twenty thousand Sikhs, for an equal number of Brahmans, the story of the next mutiny might be told for the first time in the reign of the next King Alfred.—Friend of India, May 7.

THE LONDON MAIL of April 10 arrived at Calcutta May 14, (per Ara).

THE FORCE IN PERSIA now amounts to 14,671 men, of which 3,590 are cavalry.

LIMITATION OF TENURE OF STAFF-EMPLOYMENT.—The Delhi Gazette condemns the five years' limitation of tenure of staff and civil employments. He argues that in those departments wherein officials rise by gradation, it may happen that a man's five years may be up before he has risen one step; that if staff and civil appointments disqualify men for military service, it is not desirable that every officer should be made an absentee in his turn; and that short terms of office are in many cases inexpedient, because experience is a plant of slow growth; half measures are always to be deplored.

FUZIL ALI.—A report, which first appeared in the Mofussile, to the effect that Fuzil Ali was not really killed, has been going the round of the journals. It will be as well to point out the reasons which the public have for believing him to be dead in very truth. A corpse, presumed a priori to be that of Fuzil Ali, was said to be so by many who knew him personally. Second, the said corpse only had two fingers on one of its hands,—Fuzil Ali had lost three in his attack upon the late minister Ameenoodowlah. Third, papers were found on the body supposed to be his, which placed the identity beyond a doubt. And lastly, in the hand of the corpse was Mr. Boleau's gun.

THE TROOPS in the Sonthal districts are no longer to be considered a brigade command, and the appointment of brigade-major closed on the 5th May.

CHOLERA.—The same journal informs us that cholera cases are frequent in Roorkee. At Kussowlee, many have been fatal. The cholera has also reached Simla, at which station it has been announced by beat of tomtom where medicine was to be had. Last year the coolies died in great numbers on the road from Kalka to Simla.

THE LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR has cancelled the order relative to the abolition of the Dusserah and Mohurrum holidays in the Sudder Court. He was moved to this revocation by the petition of the pleaders and suitors.

THE William Parker, which capsized some time ago in the Muthah river, near Ellengunge, has become a total wreck: her materials will be sold by public auction.

THE BALL given by the officers of the Sardinian frigate Beraldo was a great success. The guests included the greater portion of the conventional "everybody" of Calcutta, who were all gratified at the entertainment they received. A return ball is spoken of.

MAJOR LUMSDEN and his party arrived safe at Ghuznee on the 8th April. All were well. They had received the most marked attention everywhere.

MAJOR NATION has obtained the consent of Government to his despatching a small recruiting force to Goruckpore and Oude. Rs. 5,000 are advanced towards meeting expenditure for uniforms, &c., the same to be repaid from deductions to be made from the pay of the recruits.

THE JOINT MAGISTRATE OF RANEEGUNGE ordered the shell-lac and lac-dye factories of that station to be closed. The magistrate alleged that the manufacturing process was injurious to the health of the neighbourhood. The agent hesitated to close the manufactory, the magistrate accordingly fined him Rs. 200, and threatened to burn all the raw material. Upon this the proprietors presented a petition to the Lieutenant-Governor, who declined to interfere.

A CYCLONE.—Calcutta was on the night of Thursday visited by a very violent cyclone, passing to the eastward of us. It broke upon Calcutta at about ten o'clock, the barometer suddenly rising from about 29.6 in. to 30.1 in., the wind blowing with very great force from the north-east. At about half past ten o'clock the barometer suddenly fell again to 29.6 in., and the wind was from the south-east, still blowing very hard. A little later the wind changed, blowing from the north, and the barometer again rose about two-tenths. It broke over Chinsurah at about seven o'clock. Considerable damage was done in different parts of Calcutta. The North-Western Bank was struck, and so was the Martinière, but no great damage was done. The Ochterlony Monument was also struck, and so was Mr. Mackay's house. In the native town numbers of houses and huts were blown down, with loss of life in one instance. On the river there were many accidents, but happily none fatal. We shall obtain, for our next issue, accurate and detailed meteorological information on the subject of the storm.—Hurkaru, May 9.

FURLOUGH ON PRIVATE AFFAIRS.—It has been ruled by Government that civil servants who have taken leave upon sick certificate to Europe or elsewhere beyond sea, will be ineligible to furlough on private affairs until they shall have served six years from their last return to duty; this rule will not, however, apply to short leaves to sea. It has been in consequence ordered that the Governments of Bengal and the North-Western Provinces and the Chief Commissioners of the Punjab and Oude, be required to refer to their respective civil auditors for report every application for furlough before submitting the same for the orders of the Government of India, and to forward each application accompanied by the auditor's report thereon. It is further ordered, that the applications for furlough from officers employed directly under the Government of India be sent to the civil auditor at the presidency for report previously to being laid before Government.—Bengal Hurkaru, May 6.

RAJAH MATAB SING BAHADOOR has, with his papers, been despatched to the Sonthal Commissioner at Dumka. The Sonthals say that they are sure the Rajah is correct, and that Government do not intend to support the zemindars or mahajuns, because all the troops are being removed from RaneeGUNGE. It is a great pity that these poor people are left to be preyed upon by any designing wretch. The missionaries are, however, hard at work.

OFFICERS NOT LEGALLY RESPONSIBLE FOR DEBT.—The Delhi Gazette inserts a letter from a correspondent, advocating that debt should not, from officers in the army, be recoverable by law. He argues, that every man in the army is paid regularly; that every man's pay is amply sufficient for his reasonable wants; that consequently, as a general rule, there is no necessity for any military man to incur debt; that it would be better for themselves, the service, and the public in general, if they did not get into debt; that no man can possibly get into debt without a creditor, and that the surest way of deterring creditors is to render debt irrecoverable by law.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

DISBANDMENT OF THE 31ST N.I.

Fort William, May 4, 1857.—No. 645 of 1857.—On the 29th of March a sepoy of the 34th regiment of native infantry, stationed at Barrackpore, armed himself with a loaded musket and sword, advanced upon the parade ground in front of his lines, and, after conducting himself in a violent and mutinous manner, and calling upon the men of the regiment to come forth and to join him in resisting lawful authority, attacked and wounded the adjutant and serjeant major of his regiment, who approached to restrain him.

This man has been tried, condemned, and hanged.

On the same occasion the native officer, a jemadar in command of the quarter guard of the 34th regiment native infantry, refused to obey his superior, by whom he was ordered to seize the above-mentioned sepoy.

After being tried by a court of native commissioned officers, this man, himself a commissioned officer, has paid the penalty of his mutiny by the same ignominious death.

But these men were not the sole offenders upon that occasion.

The Governor-General in Council laments to say that the conduct of the native commissioned and non-commissioned officers and men of the 34th regiment who were then present, has been shown to be such as to destroy his confidence in them as soldiers of the state, and to call for severe and exemplary punishment.

The mutinous sepoy was permitted to parade himself insolently before his assembled comrades, using menaces and threatening gestures against his officers without an attempt on the part of any to control him.

No such attempt was made even when he had deliberately fired at the serjeant-major of the regiment.

None was made when upon the appearance of the adjutant, Lieutenant Baugh, and after having reloaded the musket unmolested, the mutineer discharged it at that officer and shot his horse.

When the horse fell not a sign of assistance to Lieutenant Baugh was given, either by the quarter guard or by the sepoys not on duty, although this took place within ten paces of the guard.

During the hand-to-hand conflict which followed between the mutineer and Lieutenant Baugh, supported by Serjeant-major Hewson, the men collected at the lines in undress, looked on passively, others in uniform and on duty joined in the struggle; but it was to take part against their officers, whom they attacked with the butts of their muskets, striking down the serjeant-major from behind, and repeating the blows as he lay on the ground.

The Governor-General in Council deeply regrets that of the ruffians who perpetrated this cowardly act, the only one who was identified has escaped his punishment by desertion.

There was, however, one amongst those who stood by who set an honourable example to his comrades. Sheik Pultoo, sepoy (now havildar), of the grenadier company, obeyed the call of his officer for assistance unhesitatingly. He was wounded in the endeavour to protect Lieutenant Baugh from the mutineer, and did all that an unarmed man could do to seize the criminal. His conduct was that of a faithful and brave soldier.

When the adjutant, maimed and bleeding, was retiring from the conflict, he passed the lines of his regiment and reproached the men assembled there with having allowed their officer to be cut down before their eyes without offering to assist him. They made no reply, but turned their backs and moved sullenly away.

For the failure of the quarter-guard to do its duty, the jemadar who commanded it has already paid the last penalty of death. In this guard, consisting of twenty sepoys, there were four who desired to act against the mutineers, but their jemadar restrained them; and when, eventually, the order to advance upon the criminal was given by superior authority, the majority yielded obedience reluctantly.

Upon a review of these facts and of all the circumstances connected with them, it is but too clear to the Governor-General in Council that a spirit of disloyalty prevails in those companies of the 34th Regiment N.I., which are stationed at the head-quarters of the Presidency division. Silent spectators of a long-continued act of insolent mutiny, they have made no endeavour to suppress it, and have thereby become liable themselves to the punishment of mutineers. The Governor-General in Council can no longer put trust in them, and he rejects their services from this time forward.

Therefore it is the order of the Governor-General in Council that the native commissioned and non-commissioned officers and men of the seven companies of the 34th Regiment N.I., now quartered at Barrackpore, be disbanded and dismissed from the army of Bengal, with the following exceptions in favour of those who in the course of recent events have given the Governor-General in Council good reason to believe in their fidelity to their officers and to the Government.

Subadar Sewamber Pandey, Subadar Muddeh Khan, Jemadar Darriew Sing, Havildar Sheik Phultoo, Havildar Goorbuccus Sing, Havildar Jewrakun Tawary, Sepoy Ramahai Lalla, Sepoy Sobha

Sing, Sepoy Atma Sing, Sepoy Mehu Lall, and Sepoy Sewbuccus Tawary.

All those non-commissioned officers and sepoys will be excepted whose absence from the lines on the 29th of March, whether as having been on duty, in hospital, or from other cause can be established.

But this exemption will not apply to the native commissioned officers, all of whom, with the exception of the three above named, are dismissed from the army.

The army of India is well aware that it is to the native officers that the Government looks for the maintenance of order and fidelity in their respective corps. This was solemnly proclaimed in the General Order of the 23rd January, 1856, No. 132. and each regiment may rest assured that it is a principle which will be rigorously and invariably enforced.

The disbandment will be carried out at the head quarters of the presidency division, in the presence of all available regiments stationed within two days' march of the spot.

The regiment will be paraded for the purpose, and every dismissed man, after giving up his arms and receiving the pay due to him, will be deprived of his uniform and be required to leave the cantonment.

The foregoing part of this order does not apply to the three companies of the 34th regiment native infantry which are stationed at Chittagong, and against which there is no reproach.

There remains one point which the Governor-General in Council desires to notice.

The sepoy who was the chief actor in the disgraceful scene of the 29th of March, called upon his comrades to come to his support, for the reason that their religion was in danger, and that they were about to be compelled to use cartridges, the use of which would do injury to their caste; and from the words in which he addressed the sepoys, it is to be inferred that many of them shared this opinion with him.

The Governor-General in Council has recently had occasion to remind the army of Bengal that the Government of India has never interfered to constrain its soldiers in matters affecting their religious faith. He has declared that the Government of India never will do so, and he has a right to expect that this declaration shall give confidence to all who have been deceived and led astray.

But whatever may be the deceptions or evil counsels to which others have been exposed, the native officers and men of the 34th regiment native infantry have no excuse for misapprehension on this subject. Not many weeks previously to the 29th of March it had been explained to that regiment,—first by their own commanding officer, and subsequently by the major-general commanding the division,—that their fears for religion were groundless. It was carefully and clearly shown to them that the cartridges which they would be called upon to use contained nothing which could do violence to their religious scruples. If, after receiving these assurances, the sepoys of the 34th regiment, or of any other regiment, still refuse to place trust in their officers and in the Government, and still allow suspicions to take root in their minds, and to grow into disaffection, insubordination, and mutiny, the fault is their own, and their punishment will be upon their own heads. That it will be a sharp and certain punishment the Governor-General in Council warns them.

This order is to be read at the head of every regiment, troop, and company in the service, at a parade ordered for that purpose.

THE 16TH IRREGULAR CAVALRY.

Fort William, May 15, 1857.—In continuation of Government General Order No. 325, of the 27th February last, the Right Hon. the Governor-General in Council has much satisfaction in notifying that the 16th regiment of irregular cavalry has, in a petition signed by 469 of all ranks, tendered, of their own free will, their services wherever they may be required, whether by sea or by land, and in any quarter of the world.

The Governor-General in Council desires that the marked thanks of the Government of India may be conveyed to the officers, non-commissioned officers, and men of the 16th irregular cavalry, for the public spirit shown in this offer of unsolicited service, and that the same be recorded in General Orders.

CASTE-PROCLAMATION.

Fort William, Home Department, May 16.—The Governor-General of India in Council has warned the army of Bengal that the tales by which the men of certain regiments have been led to suspect that offence to their religion or injury to their caste is mediated by the Government of India are malicious falsehoods.

The Governor-General in Council has learnt that this suspicion continues to be propagated by designing and evil-minded men, not only in the army, but among other classes of the people.

He knows that endeavours are made to persuade Hindoos and Mussulmans, soldiers and civil subjects, that their religion is threatened secretly as well as openly by the acts of Government, and that the Government is seeking in various ways to entrap them into a loss of caste for purposes of its own.

Some have been already deceived and led astray by these tales.

Once more, then, the Governor-General in Council warns all classes against the deceptions that are practised on them.

The Government of India has invariably treated the religious feelings of all its subjects with careful respect. The Governor-General in Council has declared that it will never cease to do so. He now repeats that declaration, and he emphatically proclaims that the Government of India entertains no desire to interfere with their religion or caste, and that nothing has been or will be done by the Government to affect the free exercise of the observances of religion or caste by every class of the people.

The Government of India has never deceived its subjects; therefore the Governor-General in Council now calls upon them to refuse their belief to seditious lies.

This notice is addressed to those who hitherto, by habitual loyalty and orderly conduct, have shown their attachment to the Government and a well-founded faith in its protection and justice.

The Governor-General in Council enjoins all such persons to pause before they listen to false guides and traitors, who would lead them into danger and disgrace.

By order of the Governor-General of India in Council.

CECIL BEADON,
Secretary to the Government of India.

MADRAS.

VELLORE.—The Madras Spectator affirms that a reward of 100 rupees has, at the recommendation of the Board of Revenue, been granted to Ghoolam Hossain. Ghoolam Hossain gave information of concealed cultivation in the Vellore district! The land was assessed at 920 rupees. What can be said in favour of a fiscal system which renders land utterly profitless? So profitless that, in order to pay the cultivator, Government demands must be evaded. The tendency of the Madras assessment has been steadily to throw land out of cultivation.

THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF OF THE MADRAS ARMY has ordered returns of all the marches made by regiments during the past year. Some little dissatisfaction has been caused amongst the sepoys of the Madras army, on account of the frequency with which many of the regiments have been moved from place to place. This perpetual motion of some regiments contrasted unfavourably with the perpetual inaction. The symptoms of disaffection which have appeared amongst the Madras sepoys are said to have been caused by their frequent changes of place. The Commander-in-Chief is justified in removing any foundation for complaint. But no circumstances can justify a mutiny.

PENITENTIARY ON THE NEILGHERRIES.—A report upon the penitentiary for Europeans on the Neilgherries has been submitted to Government. The average number of Europeans transported from India from 1843-53 inclusive, amounted to 2,911 per year. The number is increasing. The average expense of transportation from 1852 to 1856 inclusive, amounted to 4,872*l.* per year. The Supreme Government have decided not to transport European convicts. Hence the necessity for a penitentiary. The estimate and plans for the gaol are about to be submitted to Government. The new scheme will not be so expensive as the old deportation method, and will be a far greater deterrent from crime.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDER.

THE NEW TUNIC.

Head-quarters, Choultry Plain, May 7, 1857.—The Commander-in-Chief directs it to be notified that the Honourable the Court of Directors have sanctioned the introduction of the new tunic for the infantry and artillery of the Company's service.

Instructions will be issued hereafter in regard to the pattern tunic for general and staff officers, horse artillery, cavalry, engineers, and sappers and miners.

BOMBAY.

The LONDON MAIL of April 27 arrived at Bombay May 22 (per Bombay).

PERSONAL FARMING.—The Bombay Guardian deprecates the want of "personal" farming in India. The European does not farm personally, because of the sun and the damp and jungle fever. The native does not farm personally, because he never does that which he can avoid. When the land is drained, and the jungle cut, changes will occur the extent of which it is not possible to foresee.

REBELLION IN PERSIA.—The population of the North and North-Western Persian provinces are in open rebellion against the Shah. The rapacity of Mirza Sadik, the governor of Adverbidjan, has caused the outbreak. He is the nephew of the prime minister, so in all probability the Shah will remain in a happy state of ignorance concerning the cause of the outbreak.

THE BOMBAY UNCOVENANTED SERVICE FUND has an income of Rs. 308-14-4 per mensem, and is supported by 50 subscribers. Hitherto the fund has provided for widows only, and the maximum amount of pension allowed has been Rs. 30 a month. The Bombay Gazette contrasts this with the state of the sister fund in Bengal, where "some widows receive as much as Rs. 150 a month."

THE RYOTS.—The Bombay Gazette is asked to publish a petition by some ryots of the Thannah Collectorate. He does not comply with their request, but gives the purport. The petitioners hold enam lands of a Mahomedan family. These lands are mortgaged. They were required to pay their rent to the mortgagee. This they refused, and were supported in their refusal by the Collector of Thannah, Mr. Seton Karr. They accordingly paid their rent to the Enamdar. On the translation of Mr. Karr to Belgaum, the mortgagee addressed a petition to the new Collector, Mr. E. C. Jones. He eventually upheld the decision of Mr. Seton Karr. The revenue Commissioner reversed the decision of the Collectors, and accordingly proceedings have been commenced against the ryots by the mortgagee in order to recover rent which they have already paid to the Enamdar. This little fact speaks volumes. When ryots are made to pay for the mistakes of their rulers, how are they better off than under the Mahomedan dynasties!

THE MATRICULATION AT THE GRANT MEDICAL COLLEGE.—The Bombay Gazette says that out of 16 candidates, comprising seven Parsees, eight Hindoos, and two Portuguese, who went in for the matriculation examination at the Grant Medical College, only six were qualified. Of these six, four were Parsees. The number plucked was not large. One in three is about the average in England.

NEW CIVIL PROCEDURE BILL.—The inhabitants of Surat and its vicinity have forwarded to the Legislative Council a petition remonstrating against the restraints to be imposed by the new Civil Procedure Bill on persons desirous of instituting suits against Government and their officers in their official capacity. It was signed by about 6,000 persons.

SNAKES.—In the Bombay Presidency 575 deaths from snake-bites, and 105 from hydrophobia, have occurred within the past year. In December, January, and February, 176,105 snakes were killed, and Rs. 40,371-11 were paid as rewards for their destruction.

A WONDERFUL PALM-TREE.—The Bombay Times is informed by a native of a wonderful occurrence. At a place about twenty miles from Surat there is a wonderful palm-tree. This tree rises and falls to the ground as the sun rises and sets; it is, in fact, a heliotrope. Crowds of people flock to see it. Our contemporary does not believe the story.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON.

TUESDAY, June 30, 1857.

MILITARY OFFICERS TO REJOIN THEIR REGIMENTS.—REQUISITION FOR ADDITIONAL EUROPEAN TROOPS.

WE understand that, at a Court of Directors held at the India-House yesterday, an order was passed, directing all military officers on furlough on private affairs to return to their regiments forthwith. Those who are at home on sick certificate are also required to rejoin their regiments, should the state of their health permit of their proceeding to India. It is gratifying to learn that many officers have anticipated this order by offering their services to the Government in the present emergency. A requisition has also been made to H.M.'s Government for the immediate despatch of four regiments of infantry from England, in addition to the regiments which are already under orders to embark. This requisition, it is understood, will be quickly followed up by another, should the state of affairs in India, upon the arrival of the next mail, appear to demand a still further augmentation of Queen's troops.

THE MUTINY IN THE BENGAL ARMY.

THE feeling of consternation which was produced on Saturday by the telegraphic intelligence of the open revolt of a portion of the Bengal army, will have been, to some extent, alleviated by the additional particulars which have been brought by the mail, and which are given in a former part of this paper. We do not mean for a moment to assert that affairs have not assumed a most serious aspect. Nothing can be of graver aspect than the mutiny of that native army upon which we have been accustomed to place reliance, and which has hitherto assisted in the maintenance and extension of our Indian empire. But we may confidently hope that the wise and vigorous measures which have been taken in the districts where disaffection has appeared, will prevent the spread of revolt, and by checking the designs of those who have sown the seeds of discontent among our Hindustani soldiery, will have the effect of restoring order and tranquillity. The severe example which will surely be made of the infatuated rebels in Delhi, who, in their mad fury, have sacked the old capital of India, and butchered its European inhabitants, without regard to sex or age, will show that a speedy and terrible retribution awaits those who attempt resistance to the British power. To these reassuring circumstances may be added the fact, that while there exists what may be regarded as a spirit of discontent, there is no appearance of concert or organization; and "no country," observes the first soldier* of his age, "was ever lost by the mutiny, much less the discontent of its troops." There are, moreover, at the present time, a host of native regiments which have shown that they are not tainted with the feeling of disaffection. In another column we give the extract of a letter from a young subaltern officer, who speaks with just pride of the firm and unwavering conduct of the men of his regiment. The public accounts before us show that this is not an isolated case. If, then, we see that prompt and decided measures have been taken by a wise and energetic Government,—that active, intelligent, and devoted officers of all grades are at their posts ready to perform the most urgent duties with skill and courage,—that they have at their command a faithful European force, and a large number of native regiments on whom they may depend, we think that there is good cause for the expectation, which we have above expressed, that the worst is over, and that the British power in India will not only not be injured, but ultimately strengthened by these momentous occurrences. To the causes which have been given for this mutinous spirit we will not now advert. The present time is one for action and ready determination. No false mercy must be shown or faint-heartedness exhibited. Not only is the stability of our British empire in India at stake, but the happiness and civilization of millions of British subjects are also involved in the result. The Court of Directors have held two meetings, and, we understand, are anxious that an adequate European force should be at once despatched to India. Englishmen, especially those in India, have been found, under the most trying circumstances, equal to any emergency. We may be sure that on the present occasion their promptitude, their firmness, and their devotion will not forsake them; but that, under Providence, the exercise of these soldier-like qualities will bring them through the difficulty with success and honour.

GROWTH OF COTTON IN INDIA.

FROM the parliamentary proceedings, which will be found in another column, it appears somewhat doubtful whether the adjourned debate on the question of the supply of cotton from India will be resumed in the present session. Whatever other inference may be drawn from this state of things, one at least is clear. The House of Commons has been satisfied from the first night's debate, that any interference on the part of the legislature would, at the present moment, be inexpedient. In this conclusion we entirely concur. No possible good could result from taking the matter out of the hands of the East-India Company. The Court of Directors have always evinced a lively interest on the subject; and, whatever their shortcomings in other respects, they never can be taxed with lukewarmness in their efforts to extend the cultivation, and at the same time to improve the quality of Indian-grown cotton. A brief outline of these endeavours, with their results, is all we can attempt. In the year 1839, a deputation from the Manchester Chamber of Commerce sought an interview with the representatives of the East-India Company, when both points—the extension of cultivation and the improvement of the staple—were earnestly pressed upon the attention of the home authorities. Various attempts had already been made by the Government of India in aid of these objects, but the results had not equalled the hopes which had been entertained. Nevertheless, the suggestions of the deputation met with the most favourable reception. The Court of Directors came to the conclusion, that the only satisfactory course to be pursued, was to bring the question to issue, by the test of experiment. No time was lost in concerting the necessary measures. As a preliminary step, it was determined to seek information in the cotton-producing districts of the United States; and, if practicable, to engage there duly-qualified persons to proceed to India for the purpose of instructing the natives in improved modes of culture and a better system of cleaning. The design was carried into effect. Ten Americans, experienced in the management of cotton plantations, were engaged and despatched to India. They had been provided with an ample supply of American seed, and a variety of the most approved machines for cleaning cotton; and, upon reaching their destination, it was deemed expedient to distribute their services over the different presidencies. Three of the planters remained in Bombay; a similar number were located within the limits of the Madras territories; and the remaining four proceeded to Bengal; where it was arranged that they should be grouped together and commence their labours near the town of Calpee. In this vicinity four government farms were established. Two of these were situated on one side of the river Jumna, and two on the other; an arrangement which, while rendering available to the proposed experiment the climate of the Doab, afforded at the same time an opportunity of testing the suitability to the American species of cotton, of the black soil which stretches towards the river Jumna from Central India. In these farms the operations of the planters were continued through the seasons of 1841 and 1842, but in each instance the results were marked by failure. The plants thrived for a time, but withered up before harvest, from excessive drought. After this trial the Calpee farms were abandoned. One of the planters removed to Goruckpore, and the others were transferred to Rungpore and Dacca. In these localities the experiments also resulted in failure. Here the want of success was attributed to an excess of moisture during the monsoon, followed by extreme heat and dryness at its close, when the plants became suddenly exposed to a hot and parching atmosphere. In two of the new localities an additional element of destruction made its appearance. Swarms of insects settled on the crops and deposited their ova on the bolls; and as the young insects merged into life the bolls fell off, and the cotton was destroyed.

Within the Madras territories, the Government farms were first established in Tinnevely, the most southern portion of the peninsula. This district had acquired celebrity, as well on account of the amount of indigenous cotton which it produced as of the superior quality of the article. Its soil and climate did not, however, in the judgment of the American planters, appear to be equally well adapted to the culture of the foreign species, and in the following year it was thought advisable to remove to Coimbatore, situated further north. Here success may be said to have been complete. The Manchester spinners, who examined the produce, considered it the finest cotton that was ever imported from India. It was pronounced to be quite equal to the fair quality of Upland American cotton, and fit for the purposes of almost all manufacturers.

The remaining farms were situated within the Bombay Presidency. One was established at Broach, but failed from the same cause as those in which operations had been carried on in the neighbourhood of Goruckpore and Rungpore. The crop thrived well during the wet season; but when the heat succeeded at the close of the rains, the plants withered as though they were scorched. Another farm was tried in Dharwar, where the climate is more moderate. Here, as in Coimbatore, success was complete. Both soil and climate proved well adapted to bring the American species to perfection; and the natives, witnessing the success of the Government experiments, discarded their prejudices, and showed great alacrity in substituting the new species for the indigenous cotton.

It appears, then, that the culture of American cotton, though marked by failure in some parts of India, has been eminently successful in others, and that the results of the experiments carried on at Coimbatore and Dharwar are such as to give the most favourable complexion to the prospect of improving the quality of cotton obtained from India, and to warrant the expectation that the future supply may be sufficiently extensive to make it a matter of national importance. According to a calculation made by Dr. Wight, the superintendent of the Government cotton farm at Coimbatore, it is estimated that in the four southern provinces of the peninsula there are 7,000 square miles fit for the cultivation of American cotton. Assuming the produce at the low average of 100 lbs. of cotton per acre, such an extent of area would afford a supply equal to one-half of the quantity now obtained from America. Turning to a somewhat higher latitude, we find that in Dharwar and the Southern Mahratta country vast tracts are equally adapted to the growth of the American species. Here the climate, in the judgment of Mr. Mercer, one of the planters, is more favourable to the American cotton than that of any other part of India. The seed, so far from deteriorating, actually assumes its original Mexican character. Its staple is longer, and better calculated than the indigenous cotton for the European manufacturer. The produce per acre is considerably larger, while the proportion of wool to seed is greater. Whether the soil be black or red, the plant flourishes and ripens; and there is nothing, observes Mr. Mercer, to prevent the cultivator from "covering the land with cotton as water covereth the bed of the sea." Such a process is already in operation. Taking alone the district of Dharwar, it appears that from 600 acres sown with American cotton in 1842, the breadth of cultivation increased to 15,000 acres in 1846. In 1847 it comprised 25,000 or 30,000, and in the following year would have extended to 60,000, but for the occurrence of an unfavourable season. Of the produce of this locality, several hundred bales arrived in Liverpool in January, 1847. This cotton had not been grown on the Government farms, but was purchased from the ryots. It was pronounced equal in every respect to New Orleans cotton; it commanded the same price, and actually produced a larger amount of yarn. Its introduction excited great attention at Manchester, and it was announced that if 5,000 bales could be procured, it would be at once disposed of on a par with the New Orleans cotton. These facts seem decisive of the question whether an ample supply and a superior quality of cotton can be obtained from India. It is estimated that the American planter does not grow cotton at a less cost than 3d. per lb. On the other hand, American cotton grown in India can be landed at Liverpool, inclusive of all charges, at 3½d. per lb. If, with all the disadvantages under which India has hitherto laboured—and some of these we propose to notice in a concluding article on the subject—if in the face of formidable obstacles, cotton equal to that of New Orleans can be grown on thousands of acres, and landed at Liverpool at as low a price as the imports from America, the day is not far distant when, in the improving condition of our Eastern possessions, we may hope to see the cheap labour of India successfully competing with the slave labour of America.

STATUE TO THE FIRST LORD CLIVE.

IN our impression of the 19th May we announced that a subscription had been set on foot for the erection of a statue to the memory of the first Lord Clive, and that the East-India Company had headed the subscription-list by the grant of 500l. On Tuesday last, the centenary of the victory of Plassey, an influential meeting in furtherance of the object was held at Willis's Rooms, St. James' Street, when it was unanimously resolved that the town of Shrewsbury, the capital of Lord Clive's native county, would be the most appropriate site for the erection of the statue. The resolutions will be found in our advertising columns.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

10, Portland-place, W., June 22, 1857.

Colonel Burlton presents his compliments to the editor of Allen's Indian Mail, and would feel much obliged if he could find room in his next number for the accompanying copy of a petition which will be presented to the House of Commons by Lord Goderich, in the course of a few days:—

"To the Honourable the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled: the humble Petition of the undersigned

"Sheweth,

"1.—That your petitioners, being officers of the Bengal Army, are also members of 'The Bengal Military Fund,' an institution which comprises in its list of subscribers, about 700 general and field officers, 900 captains, and 1,525 subalterns (including military, medical, and ecclesiastical officers), contributing from their pay no less a sum than 75,000l. per annum towards the maintenance of nearly 600 widows, and the passage money and temporary support of nearly 200 sick officers, on an average, on furlough in Europe.

"2.—That early in the present century the officers in the Bengal Army had established a fund for the benefit of their widows, which for twenty years continued in useful and successful operation. In the year 1823, the Honourable Court of Directors of the East-India Company strongly urged the officers of the Bengal Army to establish, in lieu of their 'Widows' Fund,' a 'General Military Fund' (comprising benefits and advantages to sick officers and others, as well as to widows), on the same principles as governed similar institutions then existing at Madras and Bombay, under their sanction and patronage.

"3.—That the officers of the Bengal army did, in consequence, establish a 'Military Fund,' in accordance with the wishes of the Court of Directors, and consented to certain large deductions being made from their pay, for its support, being chiefly induced to do so by their faith in certain pledges entered into by the Court: these pledges were contained in a despatch addressed to the Government of India, under date 30th August, 1826, in which, after approving of the rules, rates, &c. proposed for the new Institution, it was distinctly stated that the Court would make the necessary advances for the disbursements of the Fund in England, 'on the same terms as allowed to other Indian Institutions, namely, 2s. 4d. per sicca rupee; and also at the same time, the Court authorised the Government 'to allow 8 per cent. interest on the bond-fide balances paid into the Treasury.'

"4.—About six years afterwards, the Court of Directors thought proper to alter the terms on which their assistance had been accorded to the Fund in making its payments in England, and in a letter addressed to their Supreme Government of India, decided and ordered that 'the sums required in England for the use of the several funds shall be advanced, repayable in India at twelve months' date at 1s. 11d. per sicca rupee; that being full as high as could be realised by a consignment of bullion.' They further directed that 'the difference between the number of rupees reimbursed under this arrangement, and that which would have been reimbursed if the present rate of exchange had continued to be observed, be annually credited to the Fund, as a donation.' These orders (to be found in the Court's Despatch to Bengal, of 4th July, 1832), appearing only to affect the mode in which the Court wished to carry out their pledged assistance, and not in any way to vary its amount, were cheerfully and loyally acquiesced in by the members of the fund. The effect of these orders, it will be observed, was simply that the exchange which was originally fixed at 2s. 4d. per sicca rupee, was thenceforward to be adjusted at 1s. 11d. repayable at twelve months' date in India—whilst at the same time the difference between the two rates of exchange was to be granted to the fund as a donation.

"5.—That your petitioners have now to complain that the above pledges, on the part of the Honourable Court of Directors, have not been fulfilled; that in consequence, the Military Fund has been brought to the brink of insolvency, and, notwithstanding that its members have increased their subscriptions to the extent of 25 per cent. for married, and 12½ per cent. for unmarried subscribers, they have most reluctantly been also driven to the cruel necessity of reducing the existing annuities of the widows now on the Fund by one-tenth, and those of prospective widows by one-fifth of their amount.

"6.—That it appears quite incontestable, and can be proved by some of the most eminent actuaries (to whom the affairs of the Fund have been submitted) that its present lamentable position is to be attributed mainly to an erroneous mode of adjustment of accounts adopted in the financial department of the East-India House, where the practice has been to charge the Fund with interest at the rate of 5 per cent. for the sums advanced in England on its account, during the twelve months of usance prior to the repayment in Calcutta—a practice opposed not only to that of all commercial transactions in general, but also to that of the Honourable Company, when they themselves grant bills in India or Europe—the rate of exchange being always considered to include the interest until the date of payment. Through the adoption of this extraordinary process, it has resulted, as can be clearly proved, that the Military Fund has been subjected to losses amounting to many lacs of rupees, whereby its solvency has been compromised, and its stability endangered.

"7.—Your Petitioners refrain from wearying your Honourable House with any lengthened monetary details, but they can show, if permitted to do so, that they have sustained other and very serious losses through the erroneous system of exchange and conversion adopted at the India House, as well as from other causes; they can show not only that they have not received the exchange of 2s. 4d. per sicca rupee, originally promised, nor 'the same terms as allowed to other Indian institutions;' and this latter point they can prove (from a marginal note appended to the despatch from the Court of Directors, addressed to the Government of India on the 4th July, 1832), must have been known at the time to the former authority. It runs thus: 'The advances on account of the Madras and Bombay Funds are made at 2s. 3d. the rupee, or deducting interest at 2s. 2d. 325; but as the intrinsic value of those rupees is less than the sicca, by 1d. 526, it follows that the advances to those funds at 2s. 3d. the rupee are more favourable than the advances made to the Bengal Fund.' Again, the Government of India, in a despatch to the Court of Directors, dated 12th January, 1854, admits the same fact, using the following words: 'In consideration of their (the funds) only having received 2s. 2½d. for a number of years, we recommend that they may be allowed a re-adjustment of the old account at 2s. 3d., or that they may be relieved from the interest charged to the fund on all sums advanced in England.' It may be desirable to explain here that the exchange of 2s. 3d. per Company's rupee (the new coin of 1836) is here taken and spoken of as equivalent to '2s. 4d. per sicca rupee,'—the terms of the original compact of 1826.

"8.—Your petitioners would further draw the attention of your Honourable House to the fact that the Court of Directors also have virtually admitted the accuracy of the foregoing statement, by conceding to appeals addressed to them from Bengal a temporary grant of the 2s. 3d rate of exchange, and by also relieving the fund from the interest heretofore charged on their English advances; but, strange to say, have limited these concessions to a period, commencing only from July, 1853, and terminable at their pleasure, altogether ignoring the long period from 1826 to that date, during which the fund has been suffering such losses from the erroneous adjustment of accounts.

"9. That memorials earnestly soliciting a full and impartial inquiry into the circumstances above stated have been addressed to the Court of Directors, and to the President of the Board of Control, but from neither of those authorities have your petitioners been fortunate enough to obtain a favourable reply to their reasonable request, though no attempt has been made to impugn the accuracy of the facts stated, or to invalidate the conclusions arrived at, after the closest investigation of the accounts of the fund by some of the most eminent actuaries in the kingdom.

"10.—Under these circumstances your petitioners are prompted to approach your Honourable House with this, their most earnest and humble petition, that your Honourable House, taking the case into its favourable consideration, may be pleased to grant to your petitioners that full and impartial inquiry into the matters herein detailed, for which they have applied in vain to the authorities from whom they were bound in the first instance to seek it.

"11.—Your petitioners confidently trust that your Honourable House will not turn a deaf ear to an application like the present, involving the interests and the feelings of a body of upwards of 3,000 British officers, and nearly 600 widowed ladies, the present annuitants of the fund. Let your Honourable House also remember that these officers are unrepresented British subjects,—that they are or have been zealously, faithfully, and not unworthily their hope, serving their country, most of them for many years in a distant land, and doubtless your Honourable House will then deem them more especially deserving the sympathy, and entitled to the justice of the British Legislature, to which end, they humbly solicit that their case may be referred to a committee of your Honourable House for investigation and report, and as in duty bound your petitioners shall ever pray."

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS, JUNE 9.

MUTINIES IN THE INDIAN ARMY.

Lord Ellenborough called the attention of the House to the reported mutinies in the Indian army, which, if true, he attributed to an apprehension on the part of the native population that the Government was about to interfere with their religion. He wished to know whether instructions had been sent to India directing the different governments to make known at every station of the army throughout the country that the Government would in future, as in times past, protect all its subjects in the undisturbed exercise of their religion?

Lord Granville expressed his surprise at the observations which had fallen from Lord Ellenborough. It was impossible to say, from the imperfect information of which the Government was in possession, how far the report of a mutiny in an Indian cavalry regiment was exaggerated or not; but, with regard to the religious element supposed to be involved in it, he was sorry that Lord Ellenborough had lent his support to the rumours which were afloat on this subject. In reply to his question he would say that, in the opinion of the Government, Lord Canning had shown admirable judgment in refraining from issuing such a notification as that suggested, and it was certainly not their intention to send out instructions to that effect to the Governor-General.

After some further discussion the matter dropped.

JUNE 15.

INDIAN POLICE.

Lord Clanricarde moved for certain returns connected with the police system and administration of criminal justice in Bengal.

After some discussion the returns were agreed to, with certain amendments.

JUNE 22.

TRADE IN OPIUM IN INDIA.

The Earl of Shaftesbury asked the Lord Chancellor whether the question of the legality or illegality of this trade had been submitted to the consideration of the law officers of the Crown, in accordance with the promise which had upon a former occasion been made by the Government?

The Lord Chancellor said that, subsequent to the statement which had been made by his noble friend upon the subject in that house, a case had been prepared upon which it was proposed that the opinion of the law officers of the Crown should be taken. The case thus prepared had been submitted to the authorities at the India House in order to ascertain whether the facts set forth in it were correctly stated. It had been found, upon communication with the President of the Board of Control, that the facts were not considered to be so stated, and the document containing the case was at present under revision. The question had, in consequence, been suspended for a short period; but it was by no means the intention of the Government to delay submitting it to the notice of the law officers of the Crown beyond the time which must necessarily be occupied in endeavouring to secure a correct representation of the facts.

JUNE 26.

Lord Althorpe presented three petitions, from persons of various denominations resident in Bengal, condemnatory of the changes in the criminal law recommended by the Indian law commissioners.

A discussion of some length then ensued, in the course of which Lord Ellenborough stigmatized the report of the Indian law commissioners as "300 pages of foolscap."

The matter ultimately dropped.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, JUNE 11.

ADMINISTRATION OF BENGAL.

Mr. Kinnaird moved two resolutions, to the effect that there is reason to believe that the administration of the lower provinces of Bengal does not secure to the population the advantages of good government, but that the mass of the people suffers grievous oppression from the police and the want of proper administration of justice; and that it is desirable that her Majesty's Government should take immediate steps with a view to the institution of special inquiries into the social condition of the people, and to ascertain what measures have been adopted in consequence of the oppression under which a large proportion of the inhabitants of the lower provinces are now said to be suffering, more especially with reference to the system of landed tenures, the state of the police, and the administration of justice.

The motion was seconded by Mr. Dunlop.

The first resolution being put,

Mr. V. Smith said he did not wonder at the thinness of the House (of which Mr. Dunlop had complained) upon a motion for inquiring into a subject upon which inquiry had been carried to the utmost, and a motion, too, which was not of a practical nature. The speech of Mr. Kinnaird was almost a continued chain of extracts from papers; and Mr. Dunlop's was of a similar character, proving that inquiry was unnecessary for obtaining information. He denied that the East-Indian government was answerable for the mischiefs complained of. The chief allegations, he observed, were the deficiencies of the police and of the administration of justice, and the answers to these allegations were contained in papers already presented to the House, extracts of which he read. Questions connected with the land tenures of India were beset with difficulties. With respect to the police, inquiries were being instituted by the Government, and remedies for ascertained grievances were in operation, while the Legislative Council of India were passing bills for the improvement of the judicial administration. In dealing with matters involving any interference whatever with native prejudices, it was of infinite importance that the proceedings of the Government should be slow and cautious. He reminded the House of the spirit which had manifested itself in some, he hoped a very few, of the sepoy regiments in India, which had been easily put down; but there was a prevalent notion among them that the Government were intent upon compulsory conversion. He pointed out a passage in the petition of the missionaries in Bengal, upon which Mr. Kinnaird had founded his resolutions (and whom he had termed "the mouth-piece of the riots"), characterizing, in terms calculated to give them much offence, the religious notions of the natives of India.

Sir E. Perry supported the first resolution.

Lord J. Russell concurred with Mr. Smith as to the inexpediency of further inquiry in this matter, and could not agree to resolutions so broadly condemning the Government of India. While he thought there were serious faults in that Government, he could not say that the process of remedy would be forwarded by adopting the resolutions. At the same time the evils were of the greatest magnitude. According to Mr. Halliday, the police of India was so defective and bad as to be an engine of oppression, and the courts of justice were insufficient. If this was true, the benefits of government were to a great degree lost; and yet, in the opinion of Mr. Halliday, these evils admitted of remedy. The Government were, therefore, bound to take the subject into their consideration, and he could not doubt that they would do so. On the whole, he rejoiced that the subject had been brought under the consideration of the House, though the adoption of the resolutions would not, in his opinion, further the object in view.

Mr. Mangles regretted the course taken by the missionaries in this matter; they ought not, in his opinion, to interfere with the concerns of Government. He discussed the causes of the comparative backwardness of the peasantry in Bengal, insisting much upon the feeble character of the Bengalees. It was the duty, however, and would be the endeavour, of the Indian Government, he said, to provide for the people the best system of justice; but he deprecated the extension of the Queen's Courts, of which he drew a fearful picture, citing Mr. Macauley's alarming description of the Supreme Court at Calcutta.

Mr. Puller defended the conduct of the missionaries. He moved the previous question, which, upon a division, was carried by 119 to 18, so no vote was taken upon the resolution.

THE INDIAN ARMY.

Mr. Rich asked the President of the Board of Control whether, since the passing of the Act 16th and 17th Victoria, cap. 25, any measures had been taken for increasing the number of European officers in the sepoy regiments, for checking the drain of officers to civil employments, and for otherwise securing the constant presence with their regiments of a greater number of officers than at the time of the passing of that Act appeared to be the practice of the Indian army; also, whether any measures had been taken for raising the general condition of the native officers, and for opening promotion to the rank of native officer at a shorter term than the 20 or 30 years of previous service, by which it then appeared ordinarily to be obtained.

Mr. V. Smith said that since the passing of the Act to which the question of the hon. gentleman referred, one captain and one lieutenant had been added to each sepoy regiment both of infantry and cavalry, and two captains and two lieutenants to each European regiment of infantry. With respect to the checking the drain of officers to civil employments, he could only say that the Court of Directors had now under their consideration a despatch, which would be submitted to the notice of the Board of Control, placing the state of things in regard to that point upon a better footing, by equalizing the advantages to officers remaining in the regiments with those which a withdrawal from them presented. He might add that, in accordance with a recent regulation, the officers in the Queen's regiments were competent to obtain staff employment, and that, as a consequence, the number of Company's officers required for that purpose would be diminished. He was not aware that any measures had been taken with the view of raising the general condition of native officers, nor did he know that any complaints had been made upon the subject. Nothing had been done in reference to the question of opening promotion to the rank of native officer at a shorter period than the ordinary term of twenty or thirty years, and he might remind the hon. gentleman that the service in India was one in which the system of promotion by seniority prevailed. In the presidency of Bombay, it is true, promotions from the ranks to some extent took place on the ground of merit, and it might become a matter for consideration how far it would be expedient to extend that system to the other presidencies. As the question of the hon. gentleman might have been founded upon the unfortunate occurrences which had recently taken place in India, it might be desirable that he (Mr. V. Smith) should state those occurrences, so far as he was aware, were in no way to be attributed to the absence of the officers from their regiments. He should add the expression of a hope that the public would be under no alarm upon that subject, as, owing to the promptitude and vigour which had been displayed by his noble friend Lord Canning, and the excellent demonstrations which had been made upon the occasion of the disbandment of the 19th regiment by General Hearsay, as well as the eloquent and stirring speech to which that gallant officer had then given utterance, the late disaffection among the troops in India had completely been put an end to, as he felt quite sure any such occurrence would in future be put an end to by the exhibition of the same promptitude and the same vigour as that to which he had just referred.

JUNE 22.

THE ISLAND OF PERIM.

Mr. J. White begged to ask the President of the Board of Control whether the privileges of a free port had been or would be accorded to the island of Perim, in the Straits of Bab-el-Mandeb, which had been recently occupied in the name of the British Crown.

Mr. V. Smith said that the island of Perim was occupied by the Indian Government so long ago as 1799; it was reoccupied by the Marquis of Wellesley in 1801, and our possession had been undisturbed since that day. The honourable member was mistaken, therefore, in saying that the island had been "recently occupied." Perim was described as an island five miles in length, and its re-occupation now was with a view to the establishment of a lighthouse thereupon. As far as he knew, no port existed. There was, however, a harbour, and any dues which were levied for the purpose of defraying the charges of the lighthouse would be levied equally on both foreign and British ships. For the reason he had stated, there was no intention of making it a free port.

JUNE 23.

GROWTH OF COTTON IN INDIA.

Mr. J. B. Smith moved a resolution—"That it is expedient that Parliament shall direct its immediate attention to the best mode of removing the obstacles which impede the application of British capital and skill to the improvement of the productive powers of India." He adverted to the success of our late wise commercial policy, which had created a demand at home for raw materials; to the short supply of cotton, indispensable for our manufactures; and to the danger of a failure of supply of that article from America. In this state of things we possessed in India an unlimited extent of land adapted to the growth of cotton. It had been asked, he said, why the manufacturers of this country did not send agents to India to buy cotton; but if, as the fact was, few English went to India, that fact alone was a ground for inquiry. The real cause, he insisted, was that Indian government was synonymous with bad government; and he read statements showing the absence of roads and means of carriage in India, and the want of facilities for irrigation, which would prodigiously increase the produce of cotton. A serious obstacle to the improvement of India and to the resort of Europeans thither consisted, he observed, in the tenure of the land, and the manner in which the land revenue was assessed. There was abundant evidence that India was capable of producing not only cotton, but sugar, tobacco, flax, hemp, and other articles; and if obstacles were removed, and the condition of the people ameliorated, the consumption of our manufactures, he believed, would be enormous,—equal to our exports to the rest of the world. These obstacles the Government had the power to remove, and public works for that object realized a profit in India, which in some cases amounted to 200 per cent.—a result that would, in his opinion, justify the borrowing of money for the purpose, and India might thus be covered with public works. Mr. Smith cited authorities upon all these points, and to show that the poverty of the ryots was so abject, that they could not cultivate without advances, for which an interest of 30 to 70 per cent. was exacted. In conclusion, he animadverted upon the manner in which charges against the East-India Company's government were usually met, by denials which eventually proved to be groundless.

The motion was seconded by Mr. Turner, who urged the immense importance of the cotton trade, in which the demand for the raw material had overtaken the supply, and that we must look to India to make up the deficiency; and if the cotton was raised from the American instead of the indigenous seed, the quantity, as well as the value of the wool, would be greatly increased.

Mr. Mangles observed that the subject was of great importance, but one that was little understood. This motion, assuming that the productive powers of India were impeded, was brought forward at a time when those powers were such that India produced and sent to this country a great deal more than we were able to take. If those who wanted cotton from India would, instead of calling upon Jupiter to help them, help themselves by adopting the same means which were taken by those who wanted other articles—sending agents to India—there was no amount of cotton they might not get, and within a short time. He asked why the tenure of land should affect the cultivation of cotton more than that of indigo or sugar? He pointed out certain misapprehensions of Mr. Smith regarding the proprietorship of the land in India and the survey about to be introduced into the Madras presidency. He stated the sums which had been expended upon public works, and the extent of roads already executed, one railroad carrying a pound of cotton 650 miles for a farthing. Of works for irrigation, besides the Ganges Canal, 810 miles in length, he specified other similar undertakings, and the large area of 20,000 square miles, over which the works now in course of execution extended. He followed Mr. Smith into many of his details, and declared that the East-India Company were doing all that men could do to extend and develop the internal resources of India, but he protested against their being expected to do what no government ought to do.

Lord Stanley replied to Mr. Mangles. He contended that the Indian Government had no right to take advantage of its own wrong-doing; that there would be a demand for Indian cotton in this country, if the cotton-growing districts were so open to the seaboard that it was possible to bring it from the interior to compete with American cotton in the ordinary state of the market. With reference to the works we had executed in India, if we took the native states as they passed into our hands (he observed) and compared the works made therein and the proportion they bore to the resources and population of their dynasties with those of our Government, giving the latter credit for the Ganges Canal and other similar works, he was much mistaken if, on a fair comparison, it would not be found that many of those dynasties had provided better for the material wants of the country. He remarked upon the strong tendency to a war policy in India, and that if works of internal improvement were to be postponed until there was a surplus of Indian revenue, he apprehended the delay would be a very long one.

Mr. Seymour observed that much of the speech of Mr. Smith applied to a state of things which existed several years ago, and many of his facts and statements were derived from old documents. He referred the House to more recent returns, which would show that of late about one-eighth of the whole revenue of India was expended upon public works, while the condition of the people was improving year by year. No one had said what the Government of India should do in the matter of roads which they had not done. What was wanted to promote the growth of cotton in India was capital and European superintendence. He moved the previous question.

On the motion of Sir E. Perry, the debate was adjourned till Tuesday next.

JUNE 25.

GROWTH OF COTTON IN INDIA.

Lord C. Hamilton wished to be informed by the hon. member for Devenport of the day on which he proposed to resume the adjourned debate on the growth of cotton in India?

Sir E. Perry said, that the adjourned debate was fixed for Tuesday next, but the business paper for that night was already so full of notices of motions on other subjects that it was impossible to hope that the adjourned debate could be then resumed. The first open Tuesday was the 23rd of July. (Laughter.) The only other day open to private members was Wednesday; but Wednesdays were so occupied by the hon. member for Ayr—(laughter)—that it was impossible to resume the debate on a Wednesday. Unless, therefore, the noble lord at the head of the Government would give up a Government night for the discussion of the cotton-growing question, he was afraid that nothing more could be said upon it this session.

Lord A. Vane Tempest asked the noble lord at the head of the Government, whether he was prepared to set apart a day for the resumption of the debate?

Lord Palmerston.—I feel great interest in that debate, and am anxious that those hon. gentlemen who have not spoken should have an opportunity of expressing their sentiments and discussing the whole question. But I am afraid that, at this period of the session it will be quite impossible to give a day for that purpose. Indeed, any promise that I could make of that sort is already mortgaged to the right hon. baronet the member for Droitwich on the subject of education.

Lord A. Vane Tempest.—Are we, then, to understand that the adjournment of the debate was a mere mockery?

Mr. Hadfield asked whether, as her Majesty's ministers would be at Manchester on Tuesday next, there would be a sitting of the House on that day.

Lord Palmerston.—The Secretary of State for the Home Department will be in attendance upon her Majesty at Manchester on Tuesday, and I have received a very kind invitation from Manchester, of which I will avail myself; but we shall be the only members absent, and that will not prevent the House from going on with the business on Tuesday.

JUNE 26.

JUDICIAL REFORMS IN INDIA.

Sir E. Perry asked the President of the Board of Control whether, on the reference to India of the judicial reforms proposed by her Majesty's Commissioners, it is competent to the Legislative Council in India to reject those reforms altogether, even though the Home Government approve them; and whether the Legislative Council, consisting of nine Company's servants and two Queen's judges, claims to act as an independent legislature?

Mr. V. Smith explained and justified the course he had pursued with relation to the reforms alluded to; and, in reply to the questions put to him, said the Legislative Council of India had been established by the Act of 1853, and was meant to be an attempt to provide something like a representative authority in India, and they had, of course, the power of altering or rejecting those reforms.

M. J. P. Willoughby concurred in what Mr. Smith had stated, remarking that there could not be a more unsafe guide for law reforms in India than Sir E. Perry.

EAST-INDIA HOUSE.

A Quarterly General Court of the East-India Company was held at their house in Leadenhall-street, on Wednesday, June 17, 1857, Mr. D. R. Mangles, M.P., Chairman of the Court of Directors, in the chair.

The minutes of the last Court were read.

The heads of the returns made to the House of Lords and the House of Commons since the last Quarterly Court were also read.

An account of superannuations granted since the last Court day was laid before the proprietors.

DIVIDEND.

The Chairman.—I have to inform the Court that the warrants for the half-yearly dividend on the Company's stock will be ready for delivery on the 6th of July.

COMMITTEE OF BYE LAWS.

Mr. Twining, the chairman of the Committee, delivered in the annual report of the Committee of Bye Laws, which was read by the secretary.

Mr. Jones.—There have arisen two instances in which, in my opinion, the bye laws have been broken; and I wish to ascertain from Mr. Twining whether the committee have given those subjects their attention. One of those subjects was the advertising, in extenso, the words of the motion of which notice has been given by any proprietor. You have taken upon yourselves, contrary to all precedent, to depart from the words of the motion. This has occurred in respect to a motion of which I gave notice, and also in the instance of a motion of which notice was given by Mr. Lewin, about ten years ago, a similar difficulty was raised, when you objected to advertise a motion the spirit of which was obnoxious to the views of the Court of Directors. The question was submitted to counsel, who stated that the only objection that could be made against fully advertising the words of the motion was the introduction of libellous matter; and in that instance, although the motion was offensive to yourselves, counsel recommended you to insert the words, and you obeyed his recommendation. On the last occasion, you said that you had come to a decision that we had no right to have our advertisements given fully. You mentioned that in the House of Commons it was not allowed to put an argument into a motion. I looked into the subject, and found that the practice of the House was different from their theory. I think that ought to have been a question for the consideration of the Committee of Bye Laws. They report, however, that they have found nothing that has been contrary to the rules and orders of the Company. Again, you have no right to apply to Parliament on any matter connected with this Company until you have called the proprietors together, and made them acquainted with the nature of the proceedings going on in Parliament. But in the instance of the Nawab of Surat, you did what I conceive to have been a violation of the law of this Company. Mr. Prinsep endeavoured to draw a distinction between the political functions of the Company and its commercial character; but none of those distinctions were made in the bye laws. Therefore, I shall object to the name of Mr. Twining being inserted as a member of the Committee of Bye Laws, and propose, as a matter of form, anybody else.

The Chairman.—Does any honourable proprietor second the motion?

Mr. Lewin.—I will second it, although I do not mean to support it; but I do so in order to say a word on the subject. Although the practice is not to insert any argumentative matter in a notice of motion, still I do not understand that you should take upon yourselves to decide what should be excluded. I don't know on what ground you reject and omit any portions of a motion. Although I think it would be much better, that whatever is inserted in the motion should be preserved, still I do not object to the practice you have followed. There is another practice to which I do object, and that is, your not advertising notices of motion unless they are given at the previous Court day, thus requiring three months' notice of a motion in order to its being advertised. The consequence is, that any member who has sent a notice of motion to the chairman or the secretary at an interval of less than three months, finds, on his coming to the Court, the benches empty, however important may be the subject which he wishes to bring forward. The bye laws require that notices of motion should be published, but it does not say that that publication should be confined to notice given at one particular time; and I contend, that if the notice has been given to the chairman in due time, that is sufficient, and it ought to be published.

The Chairman.—I understand that from the time when the bye laws were first enacted, no motions have been published, except those of which notice was given at the previous General Court. That practice had been so uniformly followed, that it has become the common law of the Court. With regard to the necessity of giving the notice fully, what I stated on a former occasion was the simple fact, that it is the rule of the House of Commons not to allow an argument to be inserted in a motion, and I considered that we may as well follow that precedent. With regard to the second objection, as to the time at which the notices should be advertised, in order that the proprietors should have an opportunity of informing themselves on the nature of the subjects to be brought before them, the words of the bye law leave that question entirely in the hands of the Court of Directors. With regard to any proceedings in Parliament, a similar discretion is given to the directors. They are not required to bring all cases that may be pending in Parliament before the proprietors, but only those which have passed into a law. Many measures are brought before Parliament which are never likely to pass into a law.

Mr. Twining.—Everything has been done in accordance to usage, and everything has received that attention from the committee which it seemed to call for.

Mr. Jones.—Have these subjects been brought before you?

Mr. Twining.—They have not, and could not be, unless they had been referred to us by the Court.

The committee was then re-appointed, a member having been elected in the room of Mr. Thomas Weeding, deceased.

THE 6TH LIGHT REGIMENT OF CAVALRY.

Mr. Lewin.—I wish to make a motion, which I on a former occasion brought forward when the subject was more recent than it has now become; still, I do not consider it too late to do justice. The motion is, "That the Court of Directors be requested to take measures to remedy, as far as it is now possible, the evils that have resulted from the breach of faith on the part of the Madras Government towards the 6th L.C." I bring forward the motion at the present time, because I think it more likely to be listened to than at any other period. It is now the interest of the Indian Government to conciliate the soldiers of their army as much as possible. There never was a better opportunity for doing so. I think that bringing forward the question now will give you an opportunity of looking into the merits of the case, and of seeing what can be done to do justice to a branch of that army. General (then Colonel) Alexander, before the committee of the House of Lords, said, when the 47th N.I. embarked for foreign service they were landed at Bombay, and, according to the rule laid down by Sir Thomas Munro, those men were entitled to the privileges of foreign service while the regiment remained at Bombay; but the authorities there wished to put them upon garrison allowances, which created great excitement. There was another instance of a great mistake being made:—when the 6th L.C. were ordered up to Saugur, their old rate of batta was guaranteed to them, under the authority of Government, by the Commander-in-Chief; but the pay department stopped the batta, and that also caused a very great excitement in that regiment. It is quite certain that the mutiny on that occasion was the effect of the Government withholding a portion of the pay. This led to the sepoys refusing to saddle their horses. No violence, however, was used by the men against the officers. There was no intention to carry on the mutiny. A long time elapsed before it was determined to address the Governor of Madras on the subject, and when the mutiny had entirely ceased. The men were punished nine months after the offence was committed, and when the mutiny had long ceased. The men having returned to their duty, the Commander-in-Chief, through his deputy adjutant-general, addressed the Government as follows:—"The Commander-in-Chief has received the brigadier's (Watson) letter of 10th Dec., with Maj. Lichfield's (the commander of the regiment) of the 8th of December inclosed. The Commander-in-Chief is happy to understand from these communications that the men of the 6th L.C. have returned to their duty, and that they appear to be sensible of their late misconduct. But as his lordship cannot allow the regiment, under the reproach of such unworthy and unsoldier-like behaviour, to continue at a station where it might be required for employment on actual service, he has ordered it to be sent into cantonment at Arcot." The case was in this way disposed of. Notwithstanding, nine months afterwards the sepoys were put on their trial; two were shot, one acquitted, thirteen banished for life, and one pardoned. The very sepoys who were executed had, subsequently to the mutiny, actually done their ordinary duty for nine months. A similar case of mutiny had occurred in Bengal, and was disposed of by Lord Gough, by pardoning the men on the ground that they had done duty subsequent to the offence. Every one who reads the letter of the Commander-in-Chief in reference to the 6th light Infantry must see that it was not the intention of the Commander-in-Chief to put those men on their trial. The offence was perfectly condoned and disposed of. If, however, the men should have been tried at all, they ought to have been tried at a much earlier period. There were two other stations in the course of their march to Arcot, where they might have been tried. But the fact was, it was not originally intended to put them upon their trial; this was clear from the fact that some of the men were actually put on their trial in their way to Arcot for other and subsequent offences. I will not trouble the Court with any further remarks, but will conclude by expressing a hope that the mutiny which has lately taken place in the Indian army will have the effect of inducing the Court to see that justice in respect to the men of the 6th L.C. shall still, as far as possible, be done.

The Chairman.—Have you any motion to propose?

Mr. Lewin.—Yes: I beg to move that the Court of Directors be requested to take measures to remedy, as far as is now possible, the evils that have resulted from the breach of faith on the part of the Madras Government towards the 6th regiment of L.C.

Mr. Grant.—I beg to second the motion, but I at the same time intend to oppose it. This question has been over and over again before the Court; and if there was any reason more cogent than another why it should not be again brought forward, it is the peculiar circumstances that occurred in the Indian army. The reason given by the hon. proprietor for bringing forward the motion appears to me to be the strongest reason why it should not be brought forward. There can, in my opinion, be nothing more mischievous than bringing forward the question at this time. It is impossible for this Court to interfere with courts-martial and trials of this description. It would put an end to all military discipline if this Court were to interfere. It would be an exceedingly dangerous course to pursue.

The Chairman.—The motion refers to a mutiny which occurred so long ago as 1844. I find that in July, 1855, nearly two years ago, the chairman stated that he was guilty of no disrespect towards the same hon. gentleman for not entering at large into the question which had been already decided by this Court a dozen times. Still less do I mean any disrespect in stating that I will not enter into any discussion at all.

Mr. Jones supported the motion.

Mr. Mackenzie.—Having considerable Indian experience, I should say that the present time was the most inopportune one to agitate the subject of the mutiny in the 6th L. Mad. C., as our sepoy regiments would suppose it was merely done through intimidation. The hon. proprietor has stated, that the object of the mutineers was limited to a particular purpose, but that was an admission that the offence of mutiny had been committed, and, if so, it entirely disposes of the question; because, if you admit that the sepoys were in a state of mutiny, you cannot say that the sentence passed upon them was too severe. With reference to the recent mutiny in the Indian army, in my own opinion, an apprehension of a compulsory conversion to the Christian religion was at the bottom of it. In the present day the great changes which have taken place in India, by the introduction of railways and the electric telegraph, have created great opportunities to dissatisfied people to work upon the Indian mind and act upon their prejudices. I think that nothing could be worse than that a member of the Legislative Council and officers commanding regiments should openly go about preaching to the natives with a view to their conversion. The East-India Company have lately passed a very proper law, that their servants should not be directors in any private company, and surely, in a political point of view, it was far more dangerous that their servants should take a prominent part in an attempt to convert the natives as they are at present doing.

Mr. Helps opposed the motion.

Mr. Lewin.—The hon. gentleman over the way (Mr. Mackenzie) has stated that the question was wholly disposed of, in consequence of my having admitted the act of mutiny. But I deny that it should be considered a mutiny, unless he will admit that he considered it to be a violation of a compact which has been previously violated by the other party. I appeal to my hon. friend whether, when a compact is violated on one side, it does not operate as a release to the opposite party? As regards what I said about affording the men an opportunity to desert, I did not mean that the men should have been allowed to escape; but that in common humanity the men should have been informed that these things were pending over them, when an opportunity would have been given to them to desert, instead of holding the prosecution over them for twelve months. The hon. gentleman talks about the time that has elapsed. Suppose he had a bond that had not been paid for twenty years, would he consider the injury the less? or rather would he not think that his claim was the greater because of that lapse of time, during which he had been kept out of his money?

The motion was then put and negatived.

THE LATE MUTINY IN THE INDIAN ARMY.

Dr. Beattie.—It would be very satisfactory to be informed whether the Court of Directors have received any report as to what has given rise to the mutinous spirit in some portions of the Indian army. Whatever may be the exciting cause of that mutinous spirit, which is at present confined to a very few regiments, it cannot be denied that it may lead to very serious results, unless the Court was prepared to meet the just claims that have been preferred on behalf of the army of Bengal. There is reason to believe that many things have recently occurred in India calculated to produce very prejudicial effects on the minds of the natives; and as regards the letters which have lately appeared in the columns of the Times, and which no doubt came from Palace Gardens, Kensington, it cannot be denied that some truths have been put forth by the writer. It cannot be doubted that the Indian mind has been greatly affected by the alteration of the laws or custom in regard to the marriage of Hindoo widows, the succession law, and other important changes.

Mr. Grant.—Is there any question before the Court?

Dr. Beattie.—I am putting a question to the chairman, whether or not the Indian Government has received some clue as to the cause of the recent mutinous spirit in the Indian army: and I am only just alluding to some circumstances which for years past have had a prejudicial effect on the minds of the Hindoos. I consider much of it may be traced to the native press, which is entirely under the control of the press of England. It takes advantage of all the pamphlets that are put forth by agitators in this country.

Mr. Lewin.—I rise to say that if the hon. proprietor is allowed to make these observations, I shall claim the right to reply to him.

The Chairman.—It is not usual in the House of Commons to allow any member to go beyond the limits of the question he wishes to put.

Dr. Beattie.—I stand corrected.

The Chairman.—The Indian Government have not received any report as to the cause of the mutiny in the Indian army. No doubt an investigation has been begun, and will go on, and that means will be taken to ascertain what the causes may have been, and that in due time the result will be reported to us.

THE OPIUM QUESTION.

Mr. Lewin.—I have given notice of another motion about the manufacture of opium. The manufacture of opium takes place in different parts of India, and the article is carried to the Chinese markets. I know that its importation into that country is in violation of the laws of the Chinese empire, and that it is forced upon the Chinese. It has been the cause of one war between this country and China already, and is the cause of the war which is now in all probability going on in China. It was at any time in the power of the Indian Government to put an end to it, but they never took any steps to do so; although in carrying on that contraband trade the merchants were pursuing a course contrary to the policy of the Government of England. I am quite sure the hon. gentleman over the way (Mr. Mackenzie) would not in his private capacity pursue a course that has been pursued by the merchants of India in regard to the trade in opium. I think the business of the Government in regard to China is to remain neutral. If you allow the Government of India to interfere, you may depend upon it the mutiny which has now arisen in the native cavalry will spread all over India. I know that an opinion is entertained at the present time by the natives that the Government intend to force conversion all over India; and when I see the proceedings which have taken place under the Marquis Dalhousie, I feel that they are perfectly justified in the opinion they have formed. I beg to move the following resolution:—

That the manufacture and sale of opium by the East India Company are in violation of the law, which forbids them, with certain specified exceptions, pursuing the avocation of shopkeepers, and petty dealers, and in their consequences injurious to the national character.

Mr. Jones.—I second the motion, though I don't like the sneer at the shopkeepers and petty dealers, for I am one myself, and what I do myself I don't think the East-India Company need be ashamed to do. I think it is an unfortunate matter that we, in a large degree, protect the breaking of the customs laws of the Chinese Empire. It is a jesuitical argument to say we don't do it ourselves; but what we do by others we do ourselves. I know the difficulty involved by the general deficiency of revenue which would result were the opium trade put an end to. I believe if we had a surplus instead of a deficiency, you would abolish this libel upon your moral conduct.

Mr. Mackenzie.—I believe the whole question with regard to opium will be decided by the motion which the Earl of Shaftesbury brought forward in the House of Lords, by which it was referred to the law officers of the Crown, to advise whether it was legal or not for the Company to become the producers and manufacturers of opium. I believe that it would be found for the best interests of India if the Company's monopoly were abolished, and the trade in opium thrown open. I could not look upon the loss of three millions of revenue with that calmness which Mr. Lewin has shown; therefore, what I should suggest is that the opium trade should be thrown open, and that the Company should impose an export duty upon opium, of the legality of which there could be no question.

The Chairman.—I would first of all observe that the case of opium was not intended to be touched by the alteration of the charter; but with regard to this question, one thing must be self-evident—we cannot put an end to the trade of opium. We cannot prevent the growing of opium, or the growing of cotton; and it must also be self-evident that if we throw the trade open, instead of one chest going to China, ten thousand chests would go there. The profits would be so enormous that the auri sacra fames would perfectly inundate China with opium; and instead of its consumption being confined to a few, it would be spread over the whole country. It would have exactly the same effect as would be produced in this country if the Government were to abandon all duty upon spirits, and throw the trade open at merely the cost of production. I ask what effect would that produce in this country? It would be precisely the same in China if the opium trade were made free.

Mr. Helps.—The hon. gentleman does not propose to give up the revenue; he says the mode in which you derive it is objectionable. The Government in this country does not manufacture spirits, and take the profit upon the manufactured article, as you do on opium.

Mr. Lewin.—I don't know under what circumstances the chairman considers the trade in opium to be legal. I am satisfied it is illegal. He says if you were to alter the system it would lead to a large exportation of opium. At any rate it is shown that the profits are very large. It is said that if the trade were thrown open, we should not have the same interest that we have now in the question. But as long as we keep large ships at Benaras, we shall be interested in selling it. I quite agree with the chairman that we cannot stop the trade.

The motion was then put and negatived.

RETAIL TRADE WITH INDIA.

Mr. Jones.—I wish to propose a motion, that an arrangement should be made whereby the duty on small parcels of goods sent to India should be paid in this country. It would greatly increase the retail trade with India and have a beneficial effect in other respects. One most prominent fact is the great drain of silver that is going on from this country to India, raising the price of silver from 5s. to 5s. 3d., thereby disturbing the profits of the Government upon its mintage of silver coin. It would be greatly for the benefit of trade as well as of the monetary interest, if goods could be sent out to India instead of cash. But the difficulties in sending out goods in small quantities are so many and so obstructive, that they are more than private traders are willing to encounter. If, for instance, you have to send out a pair of trousers or a watch, it must be done by some agent between the tradesman in England and the purchaser in India. The course is this:—Mr. A. lives at Benares, and is connected with some India house, which house has one partner in Calcutta and another in London. Mr. A. sends an order to the Calcutta house for a bugle, which is to be sent to Benares. The Calcutta house sends the order to London. The partner of the London branch goes to the tradesman and purchases the bugle, for which he requires an allowance of 10 or 15 per cent. for himself. Now, one feels annoyed to be obliged to do business on such terms. It is within my experience that on a refusal to make such a per centage, an answer was sent out to India that such goods could not be procured. The question put is—"What can you allow us?" The answer is—"I cannot allow you more than 5 per cent. off such prices." The reply is—"We must have 10; and I tell you what to do: write and say that you must have 5 per cent. more than the prices." That is the practice which some of the greatest houses in London adopt; and that is the system to which we are subjected, because we are liable to pay a duty in India. If you would allow us to pay the duty on our goods in London, by affixing an ad valorem stamp, the goods would go from us direct to India, and there would be no more difficulty in transacting business between a resident at Benares and a tradesman in London than there now is between a resident in Edinburgh and a London tradesman. Think of the interruption to business if it were necessary to employ an agent to pass all goods between London and Edinburgh; you would put a stop to trade immediately if the agents were to require ten or fifteen per cent. discount as a profit to themselves. If you wish largely to extend the retail trade, and I believe in some respects the wholesale trade also, with India; if you wish to cultivate a closer connection between that vast empire and this country, you will do away with all intermediate factors between principals. I trust, therefore, that some arrangement may be come to by which trade might be largely promoted between the two countries.

Mr. Lewin.—I beg to second the motion. The object of the hon. gentleman is perfectly reasonable. He tells us that the tradesmen are obliged to employ factors, whether competent or not I cannot say; but the proposition is so reasonable that I gladly second it.

The Chairman.—The object of the hon. gentleman deserves every consideration; but the question is, whether the customs duty now received in India could be legally received in this country. No doubt if a stamp could be attached to small parcels, it would greatly facilitate the retail trade between England and India.

The motion must of course be at present rejected, because we must first of all refer to India to know how it would work. I can see no difficulty in the principle, or why goods should not be covered by a stamp as well as letters. If therefore the hon. proprietor will withdraw his motion, I promise him that the matter shall be inquired into, and that it shall receive every consideration.

Mr. Jones.—I am quite willing to withdraw my motion after your promise.

The motion was then withdrawn, and the Court adjourned.

EAST-INDIA COLLEGE, HAILEYBURY.

The half-yearly examination of the students of this college took place yesterday, in the library of the institution. The proceedings were presided over by Mr. R. D. Mangles, M.P., Chairman of the Court of Directors; and the other members of the Court present were—Sir F. Currie, Bart.; Maj.-Gen. Sir R. J. H. Vivian, Bart.; Sir Laurence Peel; Mr. W. B. Bayley; Mr. Elliot Macenaghten; Mr. W. J. Eastwick; and Mr. J. H. Astell. Among the visitors we observed the Dean of St. Paul's; Archdeacon Hale; Sir F. Abbott, C.B.; the Revs. W. H. Johnstone, R. Inchbald, and T. Beames; Sir J. H. D'Oyly, Bart.; Lieut.-Col. Donnelly; Capt. Nairne; C. Neate, M.P.; Mr. J. C. Whiteman; Mr. J. B. Foord; and Mr. A. Hobhouse. There were also present the following members of the Indian Civil Service:—Sir H. C. Montgomery, Bart.; and Messrs. Chas. Allen, C. Collett, A. Hope, R. N. Cust, E. B. Foord, E. G. M. Fane, E. G. Anson, A. F. Bellasis, P. S. Melvill, T. B. Roupell, &c. &c.

The Report of the Public Examiner and Inspector of Studies was read by Mr. Hooper:—

The subject of the Prize Essay, by Colvin, was "The effect of the discovery of the passage by the Cape of Good Hope on the nations of Europe and Asia engaged in the Eastern trade." The author, who read his Essay, took a comprehensive view of the trade and commerce from the earliest times, including those of Solomon, the Phœnicians, the Greeks of Constantinople, the Venetians, the Flemings, Spain, and Portugal, when the discovery of the Cape of Good Hope by that nation introduced a new era into the commercial history of the world, and laid the foundation of a great empire in the East, but which it was destined for abler hands to complete. England had by her superior genius, in a large degree, developed the vast resources of that extensive region, and had spread, and was spreading civilization among millions of the native population, to whom he hoped it would prove an eternal source of blessing and of peace. On presenting the prize to Mr. Colvin, the chairman said:—"Allow me to offer to you my most sincere congratulations for the proofs of ability and high merit which you have given; and I hope and believe that the success which has attended you upon this occasion, is only the prelude to that greater degree of success which you are about to gain in India. (Cheers.) I understand you are the son of that excellent man, Mr. Colvin, the present Lieut. Governor of the North-Western Provinces. I have this day received a letter from that admirable public servant, written amidst the scenes which are now unhappily taking place in India;—a letter written with all that public spirit, that high intelligence, and that devoted zeal, which has always distinguished him; and I doubt not that if you walk in his steps and follow his bright example, the blessing of God will rest upon you, and will raise you to as high a position as that which he, by his energy and devotion to his public duties, has attained (cheers). [When Mr. Bernard, to whom had been awarded no less than five prizes, came forward, he was tumultuously cheered by his fellow-students, and the chairman not only congratulated him on his success as a student, but on the great popularity which he evidently enjoyed as a friend and companion in the college. The next favourite was evidently Mr. Burney, a descendant of the literary family of that name, who, although he gained but one prize,—namely, for Classics,—had the word "exemplary" opposite his name in the column for "general conduct," and quite regular as marking his attendance at chapel.] The other medals and prizes having been distributed by the chairman, with highly encouraging and complimentary remarks to the successful competitors, the hon. gentleman then asked permission to address, in the presence of that assembly, on his own behalf and on behalf of the Court of Directors, whom he represented, their cordial thanks to the principal and professors of the college for the great pains they had taken and the assiduity with which they had applied themselves to the duties of their office, which had been proved by the result of that day's examination. He was happy to say that the report of the principal in regard to the students during the past term was highly satisfactory. A much larger number than usual had passed their examination, both in the fourth and the third terms, with marks of distinction, showing that they had gone beyond the necessary lowest standard. (Cheers.) It was a fact not a little remarkable, that although there had been many Directors who were educated at that college, he was the first who, having received his education there, had filled the chair which he then had the honour to fill. (Cheers.) As they all knew that the days of the college were numbered; if his life should be spared, he would be the last chairman of the Court of Directors who was educated at that institution, as he was the first who had ever addressed them in that character from the chair. He spoke from his own experience when he declared that he deeply regretted that the college was about to close. He had stated this in his evidence before the committee of the House of Commons. It was his desire to speak in terms of the greatest gratitude of the educational advantages which he had received at that institution; and he believed that virtually the same system had been continued from that time to this. He came to that college from one of the first and greatest of their public schools—Eton—and he brought with him little Latin and less Greek (a laugh). He might have brought more of those languages, but it was quite certain he could have brought nothing else, for at that time Eton only taught Greek and Latin, and therefore the most diligent boy could have learnt nothing more. It was at that college, when Malthus, Mackintosh, and Le Bas held professorships, and when Dr. Batten was principal, names which even at this day he could not mention without feelings of emotion;—it was at that period, and by their system, that he received the first stimulus to exertion, and which he believed, had fitted him, as it had fitted many others, to discharge those public services which he and they had since rendered to the East India Company and to their country (cheers). To those who were about to proceed to India he wished to address a few earnest words of counsel. He begged them to remember, in the first place, that they would be exposed in India to a very strong competition. They would have to exert themselves to maintain the European position in advance of the educated native Indian. The East-India Company's tenure in India, and, more than that, their power of usefulness there, depended upon the European civil servants maintaining an intellectual and moral position in advance of the educated natives, who were second to none in the world for their acuteness and power of acquiring knowledge. It would not, therefore, be a light matter for those whom he was then addressing to maintain their relative position with regard to those men. But, as students of Haileybury, there was another competition which they would have to meet. They would have to maintain the honour of that institution, and justify the system by which they had been appointed to the civil service in competition with gentlemen who were going out every year under a different system. The honour of the institution would be thus committed to their hands—an institution from which had gone forth such distinguished men as Elphinstone, Metcalfe, Holt Mackenzie, Halliday, Sir J. Lawrence, Thomson, Colvin, and a host of others. (Cheers.) They would have to justify, in the eyes of the world, that system under which they had themselves been appointed, and he relied upon their zeal so to exert themselves as to show that they were worthy of being the successors of such eminent men. (Cheers.) In drawing his remarks to a close, he begged earnestly to advise the young men who were going to India to keep themselves clear of pecuniary embarrassments, and avoid that extravagance which led to ruin. There might have been instances of strong minds finally overcoming the results of that vice, the contracting of debts; but the general rule was that debt rendered the young man the slave of his creditor, and utterly unfitted him for the discharge of any duty that devolved upon him. The allowance which they would receive would be sufficient for their proper support, and he therefore entreated them not to come under any monetary obligations while in India, especially under any obligations to the natives. (Hear, hear.) That was positively forbidden by the regulations of the Company; but without any such rule it ought to be repugnant to the feelings and honour of Englishmen. (Cheers.) He would also urge upon them the wisdom of keeping up their connection and relationship with their native country. It would be a great source of comfort to their minds; it would sweeten the long hours of exile which they would necessarily have to endure; and would greatly tend to promote their happiness while away from those they loved; and when they returned, as they would do in the course of time on furlough to their native land to revive and freshen up their associations with England, they would find that it gave strength to the mind and a new impulse to the heart to be able to appeal to their friends and relations in this their native country. (Cheers.) There was one topic still more important than all, on which he would address them. Going, as they were about to do, to that heathen land where they would be placed over millions of Mahomedans and Hindoos, he would entreat them to cleave to that true religion in which they had been brought up, and not to lose their reverence for, or their faith in, the doctrines of Christianity. They might depend upon it—and he spoke as one who had been tried by sickness and suffering in that land—they would find true religion and true faith a mighty solace and support in the hour of affliction and of sorrow. It was so here, and it would be especially so in India, where they would oftentimes be separated from the offices of religion, and be frequently left without any European associations, and have nothing else to sustain them but their own reflections, and nothing but the early inculcations they had received of the truths of the Gospel to rely upon. (Cheers.) To those who would remain and form the last term of this institution he would address a few parting words. He begged that they would strive to make that last term the best—(cheers)—the best in general conduct, and the best in the powers of application to the excellent studies of the place. (Cheers.) He believed that a spirit of emulation was created in the minds of the scholars by this system of examinations and distributions of prizes, and that it was the best system that could be devised for stimulating honourable young men to exertions that would gain for them the highest rewards. (Cheers.) When Cæsar was about to fall, he was particularly careful that it should be with honour and with his robes around him, as a Roman ought to fall; so he hoped that the young men who were about to remain for the last term would feel—as English gentlemen ought to feel—that the honour of this Institution was entrusted to their hands, and that, since it had pleased the Imperial Legislature to declare that, at the expiration of that period, the College should close, it ought to close with honour and credit to all who had ever been connected with it. (Cheers.)

The company then retired to the great hall of the college, where a luncheon had been prepared, and of which they were invited to partake. After doing full justice to the excellent viands placed before them, the chairman rose and said that it was a rule on those occasions not to propose more than one toast, and that was the health of the Principal. (Cheers.) He deeply regretted that that reverend gentleman had been prevented from attending the present meeting by a domestic calamity, connected with a public calamity which had befallen the Government of India, of which intelligence had been very recently received. They could all sympathize with the affliction with which their reverend friend had been visited; but while they had their private griefs, it still became them to discharge their public duties. He himself had near and dear ones exposed to imminent peril, but it was most gratifying to know that there were not wanting men in the civil service of India who were endued with as much moral courage and daring as were ever displayed by their military brethren;—(cheers)—and he could not recal the name of the young man to whom so many prizes had that day been awarded, without speaking in the highest terms of his honoured father, Mr. John Colvin, for the noble conduct he displayed at a crisis which demanded all the patriotism and skill of a great leader to quell the commotion that had broken out. (Cheers.) It was a proud reflection that there were men ever ready and able to serve their country at a moment of peril; and it must be most gratifying to all connected with that College to know that such men as Colvin, Lawrence, and Montgomery, had been educated there. (Cheers.) Without detaining the company further, he begged to assure them that her Majesty's Government and the East India Company were most cordially co-operating in devising measures that would put down all disturbance and disaffection in India, and would, he firmly believed, place that vast empire on a more settled, satisfactory, and lasting basis than ever. (Cheers.)

After a few observations by Professor Heaviside, who returned thanks on behalf of the Principal, the company withdrew.

EAST-INDIA COMPANY'S MILITARY COLLEGE, ADDISCOMBE.

A public examination of the gentlemen cadets educated at this College, and destined for the military service of the Company, was held on Friday, the 12th instant, in the presence of Mr. R. D. Mangles, M.P., Chairman of the Court of Directors; Sir Frederick Currie, Bart., Deputy-Chairman; several other members of the Court of Directors; Maj.-Gen. Sir Frederick Smith, K.H., the public examiner; Col. Sir Frederick Abbott, C.B., the Lieutenant-Governor of the College; the several professors, and a number of distinguished visitors, including, amongst others, Lord Ranelagh, Lieut.-Gen. Sir George Pollock, G.C.B.; Maj.-Gen. Sir Harry Jones, K.C.B.; Maj.-Gen. Sir W. F. Williams, Bart., of Kars; Sir A. Bannerman, Bart.; Sir Harry Verney, Bart.; Sir George Clerk, K.C.B., &c.

The report of the Public Examiner and Inspector of Studies having been read,

There were thirty-six cadets brought forward. Of this number, five were reported by the public examiner to be qualified for the engineers, viz. :—

Keith Alexander Jopp	Thomas Claridge Manderson
Henry Ravenshaw Thuillier	Alexander Francis Baillie
Alexander John William Cumming.

One (Mr. A. J. Filgate) was reserved for further examination, for the engineers.

Seventeen were reported qualified for the artillery, viz. :—

William Jackson Stewart	Wallace William Benson
Alfred Dixon	Thomas Carr Fletcher
Fitzherbert Coddington	Horace Cowley Brown
Edward Hart Dyke	Isaac Ketchen
James Ronald Macleay	Anthony Percy Bainbridge
Richard Swanne Robinson	Stapleton Penny
Anson Swinton	Henry John Thornton
Henry De Grey Warter	Matravers Harcourt Collier
Edward Henry Ryan	Bernhard Steinman.

Thirteen for the Infantry, viz. :—

Thomas Herbert Lewin	John Gordon Maitland
Edmond Powerscourt Pakenham	Harry Paynter Evans
Robert James Abbott	William Henry Pye
George Molyneux Hand	John Greenwood Gilmor,
William Mundell Aitchison	Francis Redfean Burnett
Robert Brown	William Robert Sheffield
Edward William Flint

The Chairman of the East-India Company, who presided on the occasion, distributed the prizes as follow :—

First Class.

	The Sword.
	The Pollock Medal.
Keith A. Jopp	1st Mathematics.
	2nd Military Surveying.
	1st Military Drawing.
	2nd Civil Drawing.
	2nd Good Conduct.
Henry R. Thuillier	1st Fortification.
	1st Military Surveying.
Alex. J. W. Cumming	2nd Hindustani.
Thomas C. Manderson	1st Civil Drawing.
Alexander F. Baillie	1st Hindustani.
Alexander J. Filgate	2nd Mathematics.
William J. Stewart	2nd Military Drawing.
Richard S. Robinson	Latin.
Henry De J. Warter	2nd Fortification.
Edward Ryan	French.

Second Class.

	3rd Good Conduct.
	Mathematics.
Lewis Conway Gordon	Fortification.
	Military Surveying.
	Hindustani.
Joseph L. Brandreth	Military Drawing.
James Browne	French.
	Latin.
Lewis G. Stewart	Civil Drawing.
Charles E. Delafosse	4th Good Conduct.

Third Class.

William M. Campbell	Mathematics.
	Fortification.
	Military Surveying.
Lewis D. A. Jackson	Hindustani.
George H. Candy	Latin.
Ross Thompson	Military Drawing.
	Civil Drawing.
Henry Featherstonhaugh	French.
Alexander T. Fraser	Geology.

The Chairman, after complimenting Mr. Jopp, on presenting him the sword and gold medal, then addressed the cadets generally, and read the following extract from the report of the Lieutenant-Governor upon the conduct of the cadets during the past term :—

 "It is difficult to imagine so large a body of young men to be better conducted. For this happy state of affairs I am much indebted to the seniors, who have also exhibited great diligence, combined with great propriety of conduct, in the halls of study. I have much pleasure likewise in noticing that a larger number than usual have passed their strict ordeal of two years without incurring censure." The Chairman said that he was most happy to add his congratulations to the report of the Lieutenant-Governor. In all that had taken place he had only discovered one cause for regret, which was, that the Public Examiner had not found more than six gentlemen duly qualified for the service of the engineers. There was a very great demand in India at this moment for qualified officers of engineers, and it would have afforded him very great pleasure had the Public Examiner felt himself justified in nominating a larger number. He assured those gentlemen going out to India that they would never find reason to regret the time and labour spent in obtaining a high degree of education in this country. When they got to India, he impressed upon them the necessity of becoming acquainted with the languages of the natives, and above all, to remember that they were the sons of Christian parents. The Chairman then said emphatically there was one point of paramount importance to the efficiency of the Indian army, on which he deemed it his duty to dwell at some length, in the hope that, through the instrumentality of the press, the words which he now addressed them might reach a much larger number of young men who are just entering, or who have lately entered, the Indian army. And they might believe him those words were but the echo of the sentiments of every officer in that service of ability and experience. It deeply grieved him to tell them that all joined in lamenting the marked alteration in the tone and bearing of the younger officers in the Indian army towards the native soldiers of all ranks. It was alleged, he feared too truly, that the kind and cordial feeling of comrades in arms, serving the same Government, and bound to allegiance and loyalty by the same military oath, had been superseded by a cold and distant demeanour, if not in some instances by positive rudeness of behaviour. Such a state of things was greatly to be deplored. If that estrangement of officers from men, and especially of English from native officers, was allowed to continue and grow, it was impossible to calculate the fatal consequences that may ensue. He entreated them, therefore, to lose no opportunity of cultivating the attachment and confidence of our native officers and men. Their respect and esteem would abundantly repay any exertion or self-denial which the performance of that duty might cost them. They would learn to resort to them for counsel and comfort. Like other men, they had their sports and pastimes; they would be greatly gratified by their partaking in, or even by their witnessing them. He would be the last to advise them, for the sake of winning a little temporary popularity, to take part in any amusement, or be present on any occasion, unbecoming the character of Christian gentlemen. But courtesy, kindness, sympathy, and especially respect for the position of our native officers, are not only not derogatory to that character, but they are Christian virtues which they were positively bound to exercise; and remember that every link which such conduct on their part might forge in the chain which binds the native soldiery to their English commanders gives additional stability to the British power, and adds to the strength and security of our mighty empire in the East. (Loud cheers.)

FORTIFICATION DEPARTMENT.

The company then proceeded to the grand modelling-hall, where some beautifully-executed models of the town and fortress of Coblenz and Ehrenbreitstein, on the Rhine, were explained, together with models of the Prussian and other systems of fortification. They were most beautifully executed, under the direction of Lieutenant Cooke, professor of fortification, and gave very general satisfaction.

Military Drawings executed by the Gentlemen Cadets of the First Class.

Mr. Jopp (1st prize)	} Island of Hong-Kong.
Mr. Stewart (2nd prize)
Mr. Thuillier	} Balaklava.
Mr. Manderson
Mr. Coddington
Mr. Warter	} Mequinenza.
Mr. H. Brown

CIVIL DRAWING.

First Prize.—Mr. T. Manderson, a beautifully-executed landscape in water-colours.

Second Prize.—Mr. K. Jopp, who displayed great skill in the use of the brush.

Third Prize.—Mr. L. Stewart.

Fourth Prize.—Mr. R. Thompson.

There was also a most interesting collection of drawings, both civil and military.

The cadets went through a variety of exercises on the parade, marching in slow and quick time, with the broad-sword exercise, &c.

The company then retired to the house of the Lieutenant-Governor, where a luncheon was provided, and the proceedings terminated.

THE EUPHRATES VALLEY RAILWAY.

A numerous and influential deputation, headed by the Earl of Shaftesbury, Sir W. F. Williams, of Kars, Sir Justin Sheil, Sir George Pollock, K.C.B., Mr. Horsfall, M.P., Colonel Pinney, M.P., Mr. Gregson, M.P., Mr. Hutt, M.P., Mr. Buchanan, and many other members of the house; Count Streylecki, Mr. M. Uzielli, General Chesney, Mr. W. P. Andrew, the chairman of the Euphrates Valley Railway Company; Sir F. Arthur, Bart., Sir Herbert Maddock, Major J. A. Moore, the Lord Mayor, and several other gentlemen representing the commercial interests; Colonel Harvey, Mr. Lynch, of Bagdad, &c., waited upon Lord Palmerston yesterday at two o'clock, at Cambridge House, to impress upon his lordship the necessity of according to the Euphrates Valley Railway Company the pecuniary support of government.

Lord Shaftesbury introduced the deputation to Lord Palmerston, and pointed out in forcible language the vast importance to this country of securing an alternative route to India, and the great interest generally felt throughout the country in this great undertaking, so calculated to promote commerce, civilization, and Christianity, and stated that Mr. Andrew, the chairman of the company, would submit to his lordship more detailed information.

Mr. Andrew, after expressing his regret for the unavoidable absence of Lord Stanley, said that for some years it had been considered a great national object to secure an alternative short route to India, but that recently the establishment of the route by the Euphrates had become more and more necessary, and more especially since it had been determined to open up the Valley of the Indus by the application of steam. The great traffic which would pour down this valley from Central Asia and the Punjab, once flowing towards Kurrachee, would naturally seek an outlet by the sister valley of the Euphrates, at least the lighter and more valuable products as well as the mails and passengers; but the support of the government was not sought on commercial grounds. That support was sought alone on the ground of the political importance of this ancient line of communication. The grand object was to connect England with the north-west frontier of India, by steam transit through the Euphrates and Indus valleys. The latter would render movable to either the Kyber or the Bolan, the two gates of India, the flower of the British army cantoned in the Punjab, and connected by the Euphrates line by means of steamers, the flank and rear would be threatened of any force advancing through Persia towards India. So that the invasion of India by this great scheme would be placed beyond even speculation, and it would be evident by the great army of India of 300,000 men being united by this means to the army in England, the mutual support they would render each other would quadruple the power and ascendancy of this country, and promote powerfully the progress, the freedom, and the peace of the world. The countries to be traversed were the richest and most ancient in the world, and might again become the granaries of Europe, and not only supply us with wheat, but with cotton of excellent quality, and his gallant friend General Chesney, who had recently visited these regions, would tell them that there were hundreds of thousands of camel-loads of this valuable commodity rotting on the ground from the want of the means of transport. Sir W. F. Williams, of Kars, would tell them there was no difficulty in dealing with the Arabs, if they were fairly treated. The Lord Mayor, who had had intimate commercial relations with the East, and Mr. Lynch, of Bagdad, who had for many years traded with the Arabs, would speak to the honesty and trustworthiness of the Arab. As to the physical difficulty there was none—the line had been surveyed and proved to be singularly easy. Her Majesty's government had given their powerful influence and support in obtaining the firman and concession. They had placed H.M.S. Stromboli at the disposal of General Chesney, and Sir John McNeill, and the engineering staff, and Lord Stratford de Redcliffe had lent his powerful advocacy with the Porte. He (Mr. Andrew) was deeply grateful for the assistance thus far afforded them, but they had now arrived at that point when something more was absolutely necessary, and that was the pecuniary support of Government to enable the capital to be raised for the prosecution of the work. It was not a matter for private individuals to undertake. If they wanted an investment for their funds they would certainly not choose Turkish Arabia. The establishment of a steam route by the Euphrates had been placed before the public and the Government. Many chambers of commerce and other influential associations had already memorialized the Government in favour of granting pecuniary aid; and it was believed the country was anxious that this route should be carried out by Englishmen, and it now rested with the Government to say whether they concurred in the importance of the work, and if so, whether they would be prepared to recommend such an amount of pecuniary assistance, whether by guarantee or otherwise, as would enable this, the most important undertaking ever submitted to their consideration, to be proceeded with.

Sir W. F. Williams, of Kars, stated that during his long residence amongst the Arabs he experienced no difficulty in dealing with them, or in procuring during his excavations in Susa any number of workmen he might require; and he also pointed out the great importance of the proposed harbour of Seleucia, as there was not a single good harbour on the Syrian coast.

Count Strylecki briefly addressed his lordship on the support of successive Turkish governments to the undertaking, viewing it as of incalculable political importance to England in relation to her Indian possessions.

Mr. Finlay, M.P., speaking from personal acquaintance with the country to be traversed, dwelt on the great capacity for development, if only the means of transport were afforded.

General Chesney gave full explanations regarding the harbour, as to its exact position and capacity, &c.

Sir Justin Sheil, late ambassador in Persia, dwelt on the political importance of the line, and that it would shorten the distance to Kurrahee, the European port of India, by 1,400 miles.

The Lord Mayor had had extensive commercial transactions with the Arabs, and had found them most reliable and honest; and he considered they were as much alive to their own interests as any other race, and would be in favour of the railway, because it would at once give them employment and afford them an outlet for their products.

Mr. Lynch, of Bagdad, from long residence, fully confirmed his lordship's views.

Mr. Horsfall, M.P., assured his lordship that the undertaking was viewed with great interest in the manufacturing districts generally, and placed in his lordship's hands a memorial from the Chamber of Commerce of Liverpool, praying that the government would extend the necessary pecuniary aid to the Euphrates Valley Railway Company.

Lord Palmerston assured the deputation that the Government were fully alive to the great importance of the Euphrates route; that they had supported, and would continue to support it; but he could not give an opinion as to giving the guarantee on the capital without consulting his colleagues, and requested Mr. Andrew to put his proposition in writing, and that it should have a proper amount of consideration, and that Government would be happy to aid it, if in their power.

Mr. Andrew having thanked his lordship for the courteous reception afforded to the deputation, the deputation withdrew, much gratified by the manner in which they had been received.

PRINSEP AND THE EAST-INDIA COMPANY v. DYCE SOMBRE, TROUP, AND SOLAROLI.

This was originally an appeal from the Prerogative Court to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council respecting the validity of the will of Mr. Dyce Sombre. Their lordships affirmed the judgment in so far as it declared the will invalid, but reversed it as to costs. They allowed the appellants, who appeared as two separate parties, one set of costs out of the estate, both in the court below and the court of appeal. The bill of costs on behalf of Mr. Prinsep, one of the appellants, was accordingly taxed and reported by the registrar in the usual way.

It appeared that in consequence of the enormous bulk of the documents, pleadings, and evidence in this extraordinary case, and the probability of appeal, when they would necessarily be printed for their lordships, Mr. Middleton, Mr. Prinsep's proctor, had proposed to have them printed for the hearing of the cause in the court below, instead of having the usual written copies; but Mr. Townsend, the proctor of Mrs. Dyce Sombre, objected thereto, and declined then entering into any agreement for that purpose. Mr. Middleton, therefore, with the consent of his party, had the whole proceedings printed at his own risk and expense. At the hearing, all parties were glad to avail themselves of the printed copies, and were furnished therewith by Mr. Middleton.

The objection now raised to the registrar's report on behalf of Mrs. Dyce Sombre was, that he had taxed the bill of costs in the usual way, and had allowed charges for copies when, in fact, copies were not made. Another objection was, that he had improperly allowed the fees of Sir A. Cockburn, and that the fees of two counsel only should have been allowed.

Dr. Lushington delivered judgment, dismissing Mrs. Dyce Sombre's petition with costs.

W. F. ALLEN, Esq., of the firm of W. H. Allen and Co., of Leadenhall-street, the old-established publishers of the East-India Company, and the proprietors of Allen's Indian Mail, has been elected Sheriff of London and Middlesex for the ensuing year.

NEWSPAPERS TO THE EAST INDIES.—Arrangements have been entered into with the Government of India, under which, all newspapers posted in the United Kingdom, addressed to places within the territory of the East India Company, and properly prepaid will be delivered in India without any further charge. In like manner, newspapers from India addressed to the United Kingdom, if duly prepaid in India, will be delivered without charge in this country. The rates of postage upon a single newspaper will be 3d. when sent via Marseilles; 1d. when sent via Southampton. In consenting to this arrangement, however, the Government of India have required, as a condition, that the above rates of postage shall be limited to newspapers not exceeding four ounces in weight; a newspaper, therefore, weighing above four ounces and not exceeding eight ounces, will, on the 1st July, and thenceforward, be chargeable with double the single rate, and so on, an additional rate being charged for each additional four ounces or fraction of four ounces which the newspaper may weigh. By command of the Postmaster-General, Rowland Hill, Secretary. General Post Office, 23rd June, 1857.

A Bonus of Twenty per cent. from realized profits has been declared for the present year to all policy-holders on the profit scale who have paid five years' premium.

The advantages of this Society are as follow:—

Low Rates of Premium, calculated on the best and most recent investigations of mortality in India.

Annual participation in the profits after payment of premium for five years, by parties assured on the profit scale.

Immediate reduction of premium to the English rates in the case of a party assured proceeding to Europe for a permanency, and reduction after one year in the case of the party visiting Europe for a short period.

The civil rate only charged on the lives of parties in the military service, holding civil offices, as long as they continue in such office.

The Society also grants Deferred Annuities and Endowments payable at any given period.

Tables and full information may be had at the Office in Chatham Place; or on application to the Secretaries at Calcutta, Messrs. GORDON, STUART, and Co.; or to the Agents of the Agra and United Service Bank, at the other Indian Presidencies.

CLIVE MEMORIAL.

AT a MEETING held at Willis's Rooms, St. James's, on the 23rd of JUNE, the Right Hon. Viscount HILL, Lord-Lieutenant of Shropshire, in the chair, the following resolutions were passed unanimously:—

Proposed by the Earl of Stanhope, seconded by Sir James Weir Hogg, Bart.

"That, inasmuch as the services of the great Lord Clive, the founder of British empire in the East, have not been commemorated by any public monument, it is, in the opinion of this meeting, assembled on the 100th anniversary of the victory of Plassey, desirable to record the national gratitude for those services by erecting a statue in some conspicuous site in Shrewsbury, the chief town of Lord Clive's native county."

Proposed by the Duke of Cleveland, seconded by Sir Laurence Peel—

"That a Committee be appointed to promote subscriptions, and take such other steps as they may deem proper in aid of the Clive Memorial, and with power to convene a general meeting of the subscribers when they shall consider it expedient."

"That the following noblemen and gentlemen be requested to act upon that Committee:—

The Lord-Lieutenant of Shropshire.

The High Sheriff of Shropshire.

The President of the India Board.

The Chairman of the East-India Company.

The Members for Shrewsbury.

The Duke of Cleveland.

The Earl Stanhope.

The Viscount Dungannon.

Sir Laurence Peel.

Sir James W. Hogg, Bart.

Sir Robert Vivian, K.C.B.

Mr. W. B. Bayley.

The Mayor of Shrewsbury.

The Rev. Dr. Kennedy.

(With power to add to their number—three to act as a quorum.)

And that they be authorized to appoint auxiliary committees in the three Presidencies of India."

Proposed by the Viscount Dungannon, seconded by Thomas Campbell

Robertson, Esq.—

"That the Lord-Lieutenant of Shropshire, the Earl of Powis, and Colonel Sykes, be requested to act as trustees and treasurers of the Fund, and that accounts be opened for the receipt of subscriptions with the Bank of England and the Agra and United Service Bank.

"That John William Kaye, Esq., be requested to undertake the duties of honorary secretary."

Proposed by Sir William Curtis, Bart., High Sheriff of Shropshire, seconded by R. A. Slaney, Esq., M.P.—

"That the thanks of this meeting be presented to the Viscount Hill for his conduct in the chair, and for the interest he has taken in the object of the meeting."

HILL, Chairman.

J. W. KAYE, Honorary Secretary.

*. Subscriptions received (for the present) by the Agra and United Service Bank, Gresham House, Bishopsgate Street; or by the Honorary Secretary, J. W. Kaye, Esq., India House.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

MEMBERS of the CIVIL SERVICE, and CLERGY—MEN residing in India or the Colonies, can effect ASSURANCES at considerably reduced rates, under the new system adopted by this Society.

THE BEST AND CHEAPEST NEWSPAPER PUBLISHED IN LONDON FOR DESPATCH TO INDIA AND THE EAST.Thirty-two pages folio, with Supplements when necessary, PRICE SIXPENCE.THACKER'S OVERLAND NEWS,
FOR INDIA AND THE COLONIES;

A fortnightly Summary of British and Foreign Intelligence, published on the 10th and 26th of each month, in time for despatch to India via Marseilles. One uniform system is preserved throughout the Paper, and the information is so epitomized and arranged as to present a perfect and comprehensive view of the history of the fortnight, with special reference to those subjects most interesting to Anglo-Indians.

Orders to be addressed to Messrs. W. THACKER and Co., 87, Newgate Street, London; Messrs. THACKER, SPINK, and Co., St. Andrew's Library, Calcutta; Messrs. THACKER and Co., St. Andrew's Library, Bombay; and Mr. JAMES HILL, Lucknow.

JUST RECEIVED FROM INDIA.

In Demy 8vo., with Maps, and a roll of 4 Lithographic Views, price £2. 2s.,

THE NEILGHERRIES: including an Account of their Topography, Climate, Soil, and Productions, and of the Effects of the Climate upon the European Constitution. By R. BAIKIE, M.D. Second Edition, revised and enlarged, with new Views, &c. By W. H. SMOULT, B.C.S.

FROM THE "HURKAU."

"Mr. W. H. Smoult has got up, with great trouble and expense, an edition of Dr. R. Baikie's account of the Neigherries. The subject-matter of the work is of great interest, but the point we are most disposed to dwell upon is the admirable style in which Mr. Smoult has contrived to get the work illustrated. The large panoramic view of Ootacamund is a picture that well deserves a handsome frame, and is worth the price of the book itself."

FROM THE "ENGLISHMAN."

"The new edition is neatly printed, and is illustrated with maps and views, the latter being from original drawings taken on the spot, and lithographed by an artist whose work excels any we have yet seen in Calcutta."

FROM THE "PHENIX."

"A most interesting work on the Neigherry Hills, compiled by Dr. Baikie, but edited, and, in fact, altogether remodelled, by W. H. Smoult, Esq."

London: LONGMAN, BROWN, and Co.

TOURISTS and TRAVELLERS, exposed to the scorching rays of the Sun and heated particles of Dust, will find ROWLANDS' KALYDOR a most refreshing preparation for the Complexion, dispelling the cloud of languor and relaxation, allaying all heat and irritability, and immediately affording the pleasing sensation attending restored elasticity and healthful state of the Skin. Freckles, Tan, Spots, Pimples, Flushes, and Discolorations fly before its application, and give place to delicate clearness, with the glow of beauty and of bloom. In cases of Sunburn, or Stings of Insects, its virtues have long been acknowledged. Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle.

The heat of summer also frequently communicates a dryness to the hair, and a tendency to fall off, which may be completely obviated by the use of ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL, a delightfully fragrant and transparent preparation, and, as an invigorator and purifier of the hair, beyond all precedent.

Nor at this season can we be too careful to preserve the teeth from the deleterious effects of vegetable acids (the immediate cause of tooth-ache), by a systematic employment, night and morning, of ROWLANDS' ODONTO, or Pearl Dentifrice, a white powder, compounded of the rarest and most fragrant exotics. It bestows on the teeth a pearl-like whiteness, frees them from tartar, and imparts to the gums a healthy firmness, and to the breath a grateful sweetness and purity.—Price 2s. 9d. per box.

Sold by A. ROWLAND and SONS, 20, Hatton Garden, London, and by Chemists and Perfumers.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS famed for the cure of Liver

Complaints and derangement of the Stomach, the Liver being justly esteemed the noblest part of the body and fountain of life. Thus it is, when the springs become poisoned, life itself is threatened, and the suffering patient is in the most imminent danger; but thousands have borne willing testimony to the power of this potent remedy,—cleansing the blood from all impurities, strengthening the stomach, discharging the bile, removing all obstructions, and eradicating disease without leaving a trace behind.

Sold by all Medicine Vendors, at PROFESSOR HOLLOWAY'S Establishments, 244, Strand, London, and 80, Maiden Lane, New York; by A. Stampa, Constantinople; A. Guidici, Smyrna; E. Muir, Malta; and by all European and Native Vendors of Medicine throughout the whole of the East Indies.

WATCH, CLOCK, AND CHRONOMETER MANUFACTORY,
33 AND 34, LUDGATE HILL, LONDON. ESTABLISHED 1749.

J. W. BENSON & SONS,
MANUFACTURER of GOLD and SILVER WATCHES of every description, construction, and pattern, invites attention to his magnificent and unprecedented display of Watches, which is admitted to be the largest and best selected Stock in London. It consists of Chronometer, Duplex, Patent Detached Lever, Horizontal, and Vertical Movements, Jewelled, &c., with all the latest improvements, mounted in superbly-finished engine-turned and engraved Gold and Silver Cases. The designs engraved upon many of the cases are by eminent artists, and can only be obtained at this manufactory. If the important requisites, superiority of finish, combined with accuracy of performance, elegance, durability, and reasonableness of price, are wished for, the intending purchaser should visit this Manufactory, or send for the ILLUSTRATED PAMPHLET, published by J. W. BENSON (and sent post-free on application), which contains sketches, prices, and directions as to what Watch to buy, where to buy it, and how to use it. Several hundred letters have been received from persons who have bought Watches at this Manufactory, bearing testimony to the correct performance of the same. The following extracts from the opinions of the Press will, it is hoped, be a sufficient guarantee to the public that they may secure at this House a good Watch at a reasonable price:—

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE news from India by the present mail is so far reassuring, that it evinces the determination of Government to act with energy and promptitude. It likewise appears that the spirit of disaffection is confined to the Bengal army; but throughout that Presidency scarcely a single regiment has escaped the infection. One notable exception, indeed, has been furnished by the 70th N.I., stationed at Barrackpore, who petitioned to be sent against the Delhi mutineers. Their loyalty was rewarded in a manner peculiarly acceptable to the Oriental temperament. At a late hour in the evening of the 27th of May, a general parade was ordered for the following morning, though for what purpose nobody seemed to know. At the appointed hour the troops at the station, European and native, were drawn up in open order, in a state of mingled anxiety and wonder, when a salute from the artillery announced the presence of no less a personage than the Governor-General. He had come up from Calcutta to tender his thanks in person to the gallant Sepoys of the 70th. His lordship addressed that regiment with impressive eloquence, his speech being rendered, sentence by sentence, into Hindoostanee, by General Harsey. The effect of the spectacle may possibly prove very salutary, but it may be doubted how far it was prudent to despatch a hitherto faithful and reliable corps into the midst of temptation. The immediate result, however, has been satisfactory, as the three companies of the 34th, which were not disbanded with the main body of the regiment, have followed the example of the 70th, in volunteering to act against the mutineers. In Calcutta itself the alarm was subsiding. All classes of the inhabitants had united in offering their services to Government. Europeans, Armenians, Eurasians, native gentlemen, and French residents, vied with each other in assurances of fidelity, and even of active support. There is, indeed, no reason to fear for the safety of the capital. European troops were arriving from Bombay and Madras, and an urgent application for some of the regiments on their way to China had been despatched to Lord Elgin, in the hope of meeting the plenipotentiary either at Singapore or in the Straits of Sunda.

From the North-West Provinces the intelligence is less decided than might have been expected by those who believed that the Commander-in-Chief could appear under the walls of Delhi by the 26th of May. On that day General Anson was only at Kurnaul, apparently in good health; on the morrow he had fallen a victim to cholera. On both these days a native rumour ran through Calcutta that he was dead. This untoward accident, coupled with some delay in bringing down a siege-train from Phillour, on the other side of the Sutlej, retarded the march of the ~~warring~~ army, and inspired momentary courage into the breasts of the mutineers. At all the neighbouring stations the native troops deserted en masse, and hastened to join the "Great Mogul." But the delay was brief. The command having devolved on Sir Henry Barnard, K.C.B., that distinguished general lost no time in pushing forward towards Delhi. The force under his orders consists of the 2nd troop of Horse Artillery.

9th Lancers.
1st squadron 4th Lancers.
H.M.'s 75th foot.
1st Fusiliers.
Six companies 2nd Fusiliers.
6th Carbineers.
60th Rifles.
Four horse artillery guns.
A horse-battery.
Two 18-pounders.
125 Artillery recruits and some Sappers.
Sirmoor battalion of Ghoorkas.

The insurgents, deriving courage from despair, ventured to march out from Delhi, and oppose the advance of Brigadier Wilson from Meerut. This general had taken up a position on the left of the little river Hindun, so as to command the suspension-bridge. About 4 P.M. of the 30th May, the enemy's approach was announced, and preparations were speedily made for giving him a warm reception. Under cover of the rifles and the carbineers, the troop of horse artillery crossed the Hindun, and turned his left flank. The movement was decisive. The insurgents instantly broke and fled into the city, leaving five guns and a quantity of intrenching-tools in the hands of the victors. They were so little disheartened, however, by this check, that on the morrow they again sallied forth in increased strength, but only to meet with a second defeat. On this occasion they lost twenty-six guns, and as the city was immediately afterwards invested on all sides, they must have felt that the hour of retribution was at hand. It was reported, indeed, at Agra, on native authority, which usually precedes official news, that a general panic reigned within the walls; that 500 horsemen had made their escape, and that the puppet king was feverishly anxious to throw himself on the mercy of the British Government. However this may be, it is certain that the insurgents are already divided among themselves, or, rather, that the inhabitants are writhing under the tyranny of the mutineers, and of the desperate villains by whom they were joined. The city, too, is described as a pest-house. Numbers were dying from heat, from wounds, from debauchery; and their unburnt and unburied corpses tainted the air, even so far as the heights on which a portion of the European army was encamped. The place, besides, is wholly untenable. In a few hours a practicable breach could almost anywhere be made, or the town shelled from a distance. The next mail cannot fail to bring us the concluding act of this dreadful tragedy.

At Agra the native regiments had been disarmed, in consequence of two companies, one from each, having risen upon their officers, while detached on escort duty. As this duty was to convey treasure from Muttra, it cannot be said that the authorities exhibited much prudence in placing such a temptation in their way. The Lieutenant-Governor's recent proclamation, in which he offered an amnesty to all who laid down their arms, had drawn down upon him the expression of the Governor-General's severe displeasure, together with an order for its instant withdrawal. It is said that his Honour, chafing under the rebuke, has tendered his resignation. The European residents at Agra have exhibited more energy than their Lieutenant-Governor. Having formed themselves into a mounted volunteer corps, they have been able to render good service by recapturing Allygurh, raising the siege of a fortified indigo-factory at Maloe, and keeping open the communication with the Commander-in-Chief's camp. In most parts of the country, the natives had warmly expressed their adherence to the British Government; and in many instances, the villagers turned out and attacked straggling bodies of the mutineers. It is also satisfactory to state that, with a few rare exceptions, the officials, whether civil or military, have acted with considerable spirit and judgment. It is only to be regretted, that by a more frequent and familiar intercourse with the natives, they did not foresee and provide against a movement that has deprived us of an entire army. Such is unhappily the case. Wherever troops of the Bengal army are posted, we hear of desertion, and even of open revolt and violence. At Nusseerabad two regiments ran to arms, and, being joined by the native artillery, opened fire upon the Bombay Lancers, stationed at the same cantonment. These brave and faithful troopers again and again charged the overwhelming masses of the rebels, but courage was forced to yield to numbers, and they sullenly fell back with considerable loss. Of their officers, Captain Spottiswoode and Cornet Newberry were killed on the spot. Col. Penny died soon afterwards from the effects of a fall from his horse; and two officers were wounded. Large reinforcements, however, were on their way from the Bombay Presidency, to protect both Nusseerabad and Neemuch, for at the latter station also the Bengal troops had revolted. It would be difficult to point to any station garrisoned by regular corps, in which the mutinous spirit does not prevail. At Benares and Cawnpore it was kept under with great difficulty, and in Oude even Sir Henry Lawrence's vigilance and indomitable energy barely suffice to maintain the semblance of order. In the Punjab there have been risings at several stations, and at Ferozepore the 45th and 57th were roughly handled by H.M.'s 61st and the 10th light cavalry, which remained true to their colours. It is undoubtedly matter for congratulation that the cavalry and the irregular corps, both foot and horse, have for the most part preserved their allegiance. Nor, as already remarked, has the insurrectionary movement extended to the people, whether landed proprietors or engaged in commercial and agricultural pursuits. Another satisfactory feature in the news, is the fact that the native troops both in the Bombay and the Madras Presidency continue firm and faithful. The appointment of Sir Patrick Grant as Commander-in-Chief in Bengal, and the resolute attitude of the Governor-General, cannot fail to instil confidence into the minds of the army and of the community at large. Sir Patrick will no doubt exhibit the value of his long experience of the native soldiery, as well as those qualities as a general and administrator, which have earned him his high reputation. He will probably have subdued the mutiny before the arrival of Sir Colin Campbell, who, as our readers are aware, received the appointment of Commander-in-Chief of all the forces in India at a meeting of the Cabinet held on Saturday last, at which the chairman of the East-India Company was present. A few hours after his appointment, Sir Colin had embarked for his destination. Still, without disparagement to the merits of so distinguished and zealous an officer, we could have wished that to the hands of Sir Patrick Grant had been committed the task of considering the measures which should be adopted for the reorganization of the Bengal army. Meetings of the Court of Directors have been held at the India-House, and measures, we have no doubt, will be taken for accelerating the embarkation of the troops destined for Calcutta, to the number of which considerable addition is contemplated.

The news from Madras differs very little from the ordinary routine, except in the significant fact that a body of mounted police has been organized. In other respects, there were no indications of the terrible throes that were agitating the North-West Provinces. Works of internal improvement were at length occupying the attention of the local Government, and Lieut. Haig had received twelve months' leave of absence in order to inspect the principal lines of river-navigation in England and America. In the Mysore, Afzalood Dowlah had held his first durbar, and entered upon the pleasures, perhaps the duties, of a protected prince.

From Persia the only intelligence of general interest is a report that the Shah had declared his inability to compel his nephew to restore Herat without the co-operation of a British force. It is clear that no such demand as this can be entertained for a moment. If Herat be not restored to the Afghans in compliance with the terms of the treaty, it may become necessary to make a second expedition to Mohammerah; but certainly not to march a body of troops through a disaffected country, at a time when a holy war is being proclaimed by the fanatical Mussulmans.

The Ceylon papers are occupied with decent exultation at the idea of sparing five or six hundred European troops to assist in the reconquest of Bengal. On the other hand, they indulge in the luxury of criticism, by discovering that somebody is to blame for the loss of the Erin. Fortunately the lives of all on board were saved, but the vessel and 800 chests of opium are a dead loss; the value of the former being estimated at £50,000, that of the latter at £100,000.

The news from China is wholly unimportant. Reinforcements were daily looked for, but it is possible that they have been turned aside, for the present, to play a part in the more momentous drama enacting in Bengal. Like true Britons, the residents were getting up a dinner to Lord Elgin.

The Candia may be expected to reach Ceylon in 65, Madras in 70, and Calcutta in 75 days after leaving Southampton.

BENGAL.

THE MUTINY IN THE ARMY.

AGRA, May 27.—About fifty volunteers (European), with two guns, accompanied by a party of the Gwalior cavalry, left Agra yesterday morning, for the purpose of releasing a party, seven in number, of officers, indigo planters, and others, who are at present holding an indigo factory about seven miles beyond Hattrass. We understand that the beleaguered party are well armed, have abundance of ammunition, and more than all, that true English courage which makes its way and holds its own in the most unfavourable situations, and against the most overwhelming odds. Their commissariat, their only point of weakness, was their only source of anxiety. Their condition was most fortunately made known by one of their own servants, who for a considerable consideration allowed himself to be let down at night over the wall which surrounds the premises, and who made his way safely into Agra, the only point from which relief was to be looked for. The volunteers are headed by Mr. Watson, magistrate of Allyghur, Mr. Cocks, of Mynpooree, and Mr. P. Saunders; their ranks consist of many of the most respectable members of our community; and the railway and telegraph establishments have contributed largely. It is the intention of this gallant band to proceed on to Allyghur, and to establish communication by dak and telegraph between this and Meerut. Who can doubt their success? Such men must succeed.

May 30.—With the exception of occasional fires, all remains quiet at Agra. The huts of four companies in the lines of the 67th N.I. were burned during the night of the 27th. A strong westerly wind was blowing at the time, which rendered the efforts of the officers and men of that regiment to extinguish the fire unavailing. Many of the native officers and men have lost property to a considerable amount.

It has been ascertained that all the buildings burnt in the cantonments were in charge of chokedars.

Major Raikes, with 100 troopers of the Gwalior cavalry, has proceeded to Mynpooree, to assist the Messrs. Powers in defending the Treasury.

Our energetic magistrate has taken every precaution to prevent any émeute in the city.

The volunteers have been successful in carrying out their design of rescuing the little garrison at Maloe. We have not yet heard of their arrival at Allyghur.

All the daks are open except those via Allyghur, to Meerut and Delhi. Nothing has been heard of H. E. the Commander-in-Chief.

AGRA.—The telegraphic communication between Agra and Gwalior was announced as having been interrupted at 6 A.M., May 26, cause not known. The interruption will probably have been caused by some accidental injury to the wire; at any rate, there are no grounds for supposing that the country south of Agra is disaffected.—Phoenix, May 27.

It is confidently asserted that the native regiments at Agra, the 3rd and the 44th, have now mutinied; but with what foundation we cannot say.

June 2.—The two native infantry (44th and 67th) regiments stationed here were quietly disarmed shortly after daybreak on Sunday morning last. This measure was taken in consequence of information having come in during the night that the two companies (one of each regiment) on command at Muttra had mutinied, seized the treasure which was to have been conveyed that day into Agra, killed one of their officers, and wounded another. The greater portion of the men of the 44th have left the station, whereas, with the exception of a very few men, the 67th continue quietly in their lines.

May 22.—Two fires took place in Agra last night, one among the empty huts in the 72nd lines, and the other the serjeant-major's bungalow in the Khilat-i-Ghilzie lines, also unoccupied.

May 21.—“We are all quiet here just now, and hope to continue to be so. Dawks from Agra come in regularly every day. At Cawnpore I hear all is quiet. The hookum for Europeans from Chunar has been passed, and we expect them soon. I'll write again to-morrow.”

May 23.—“We have been told to go into the fort, in case of any disturbance; but hitherto all has been quiet here. Some European invalids have come from Chunar by a steamer. We have had our things packed up for some days past, in case of need, which we pray fervently may never occur.”

May 25.—On Sunday evening (yesterday) 100 men of the 6th N.I. marched, at the requisition of the magistrate, to the vicinity of the city, on account of the Eed festival. Shortly afterwards, two armed men, Mahomedans, came to the lines of the 6th N.I., pretending to look for some one, but really with a view to get the regiment to rise, by stating, that on the morning of the 26th there would be a parade, that the European gunners who came from Chunar would man guns, and that then by force the Enfield cartridges would be produced, and each man would have to bite one, and that if the 6th would rise, 4,000 men were ready to join them and slay all the Europeans. They had, however, made a mistake, and instead of sympathy from the 6th, found themselves in the quarter-guard, handcuffed and under fixed bayonets and loaded muskets. The sanction of the Lieutenant-Governor for their execution has been applied for. The troops parade this evening, and the two sepoy who seized them on finding the traitorous nature of their visit, are to be promoted, one to havildar, the other to naick.—Englishman.

AJMERE, May 20.—Two companies of the Mairwarrah battalion, under command of Lieut. Carnell, marched in from Bessar this morning. All quiet when the last accounts left.

AZIMGURH, May 19.—All quiet here; the 17th N.I. have been told that obnoxious cartridges will not be served out.

ALLYGHUR.—Information having been received at Allyghur that Rao Bhossah Singh, of Burtorolee, after plundering and burning several villages, had seized the Tahseel at Khyr, ejected the Government officers, and proclaimed his independence by beat of drum, an attack was yesterday made on him from Allyghur. Mr. Watson, the magistrate, with a few sowars, made a bold push into the town, which was surrounded by the Agra volunteer horse under Lieut. Greathed. The Rao was taken completely by surprise, and captured after a faint show of resistance. He was tried by court-martial, found guilty of rebellion, and executed on the spot. This success has had a great effect in the country around Allyghur, where a feeling of security has been in a large measure restored. The mail communication with Meerut is uninterrupted.

It appears that the sepoy of the 9th N.I., who took possession of the fort at Allyghur, did so as a measure of self-protection, because they feared to be attacked by their comrades at Delhi, if they acted in any other manner. They were guilty of no violence, and treated their officers with respect. They did not even touch the treasure, of which there is a large amount in the station.

BENARES, May 20.—All quiet in Benares, both in the city and cantonments, owing to the excellent arrangements of Colonel Gordon, commanding the station, and of the judge and magistrate. We are fully prepared for anything. All the troops seem loyal. A panic seized some of the Eurasian merchants, who bolted to Chunar; and now they are worse off than if they had remained in Benares, as sixty European invalids have been sent to garrison the fort at Allahabad.

BOOLUNDSHUHUR.—Further news from Boolundshuhur just received from an officer with the Sirmoor battalion (Goorkas).

May 27th.—“All quiet here, and confidence restored. The civil officers joined this morning from Meerut. A great quantity of Government property recovered. A good effect produced by our activity against some rebellious villagers. The village of Nehal turned out armed; they refused to lay down their arms when ordered. A volley from our subdivision settled the business. The little Goorkhas are in capital spirits, and are grinding their teeth to get at the enemy. The communication with Meerut is open; a party of Rampore horse will be sent off to-morrow morning to occupy Khoorja.”

BROACH.—Quiet, but the inhabitants in a great state of uneasiness.

“TO THE MAGISTRATE OF—

“DEAR SIR,—Being the only accredited representative of the British Government in these parts, I hope you will not consider it presumptuous in me sending to you an extract of a letter which I have this day written to the magistrate of Broach, on hearing from him that he had received threatening messages in this our hour of difficulty.

“My age and experience in two crises almost as great as the present should clear me in your eyes of presumption, even if I were here only in a private capacity. Yours very sincerely,

(Signed) R. SHAKESPEAR, Resident.”

Copy of extract mentioned in above letter.

“Do take a high tone with these rascals, who send threatening messages. Read out the message in open court and say, in my name, if you do not wish to do so in your own, that the British raj is not to be upset by a dead Mogul and living borahs, and that it will most assuredly punish to the death those rascally scoundrels of namak harams at Delhi, and such-like villains who may dare to raise their heads in any other part of India.

“Point to the sea, and ask them how many hundred ships they may expect in a few months to blow every stone of Broach to atoms, if, having so long enjoyed the protection and kindness of the British Government, they now dare to incur its anger.

“(True copies.) “R. SHAKESPEAR, Resident.

CALCUTTA.—The following is from the Phoenix:—"There is too evidently some secret and sinister influence at work in and around Calcutta to arouse a feeling of distrust and disaffection among the people, similar to that which has infected the native army. Some persons, whom we would earnestly commend to the attentions of the Commissioner of Police and his deputy, appear to be busy propagating a story, which however extravagant and ridiculous it may appear to us, is notwithstanding fast gaining on popular credulity. It is to the effect that it is the intention of Government to prohibit by beat of tom-tom the sale of rice for eight days, in Calcutta and the suburbs, and that during that interval cooked rice will be served out to Hindoos and Mahomedans from Government House, with a view, of course, of depriving them of their caste. In such times as the present, even an idle story like this is calculated to do mischief by destroying popular confidence, and we think it would be advisable, as it would be easy through the means of the police, to disabuse the native mind of the error which the evil-disposed are so industriously spreading around."

CAWNPORE, May 25.—"I have much pleasure in informing you, that up to this hour the most perfect tranquillity has prevailed in this station; our far-seeing, energetic general, that old and tried soldier Sir H. M. Wheeler, has made most excellent arrangements for the preservation of the peace at Cawnpore. In all his arrangements he has been most ably seconded by the officers in command of corps. Our active and intelligent magistrate, Mr. C. J. Hillersdon, has done everything that a man could do for the preservation of his treasury and the tranquillity of this large city. The troops here are in a somewhat excited state; but, from the tact with which Sir Hugh has managed them, this feverish state is abating. Most of the Europeans of the station pass the night in the old barracks of H.M.'s 32nd dépôt, all the European officers sleep at their respective quarter guards. If you wish, I will keep you informed of what goes on here."

May 26.—The accounts from Cawnpore, Lucknow, and other stations below, continue quite good. Sir Hugh Wheeler telegraphed last night from Cawnpore as follows: "All is well as I could wish, and better than I could have expected. Mr. Hillersdon informed me to-day, that the cool, quiet, but determined manner in which the preparations were made to meet any outbreak has completely disheartened all, and that they are sobering down. Vigilance will be necessary for some time to come. I have caused our position to be entrenched. Forty-four men of the 84th foot expected to-night or to-morrow morning, and similar parties by dak gharries in succession."

DELHI.—Extract of a Letter from Dr. Balfour regarding his escape from Delhi, dated Umballa, May 25:—

"After a retreat determined on, I was offered the use of a dog-cart by Mr. Le Bas. I put up my sister (Miss Smith). I then picked up Lieut. Thomason (Engineers), and Mrs. Trowson, with the child of Captain Fraser in her arms. We started along the Kurnaul road. After driving out, Thomason recommended that we should strike the canal bank, intercept his camp, which was coming in, and then decide on our future movements. We did so, making Chota Thana; next morning, while consulting as to our future movements, the heads of the village of Rohud (Jats) came in, said they had heard of the massacre of Delhi, and offered us asylum. I advised the acceptance of the offer, and at night we accompanied them to the village. There they left us for four or five days, showing us the most extreme kindness, and at last, when we could hear nothing of a force advancing towards Delhi, they recommended our marching along the canal-bank to Kurnaul. They guarded us, felt the way, and made arrangements with villages of bad repute, and showed us such extreme kindness and attention as I never expected to receive, and which, I fear, it will be impossible to repay. We arrived safe at Kurnaul on the night of the 20th. The Lieutenant-Governor will be glad to learn that the great mass of the country through which we passed was distinctly in our favour, even at the worst time, and that the insurrection has been almost confined to the Goojur villages along the grand trunk road."

(Signed) H. A. PRINSEP, A. D. C.

A Gwalior sepoy, who left Delhi on the 25th of May, reports that the rebels are principally employed in robbing the people of the city.

Just as we were going to press, we received a letter announcing the pleasing intelligence of the safety of Mr. Berresford, the manager of the Delhi Bank. We have not heard, how, when, or where he made his escape; but we are assured that he is still in the land of the living, safe and sound. Mr. Berresford having escaped from the slaughter at Delhi, it is probable that the bank ledgers have been saved from destruction; the cash in the bank's coffers is doubtless gone; but even this will be trifling compared to the destruction of the bank's records. We yet hope to hear that others also have escaped the hands of the ruthless murderers.—Central Star, May 20.

(There is too much reason to fear that Mr. Berresford, his wife and five children, have all been brutally murdered.—Ed. A. I. M.)

Mr. Collins's house was the first that was plundered in Delhi, but whether any of the unfortunate family escaped or not we have not been able to ascertain.

The Delhi mutineers have looted six villages in the immediate neighbourhood of Delhi for subsistence.

Among the General Orders will be found the promotions in the 38th N.I., consequent on the death of Major Hollings, so that we may conclude that Government have received authentic accounts of that officer having been murdered at Delhi. (Not so: Major Hollings died at Mussoorie, whither he had repaired on account of his health.—Ed. A. I. M.)

FEROZEPUR.—About two o'clock on the 13th May, three days after the rising at Meerut, it was whispered through the cantonment that the men were bent on mutiny. The garrison consisted of the 45th and 57th regts. N.I., and the 10th N.L.C., with a part of H.M.'s 61st foot. The men were at once ordered to parade on their respective grounds, and the European women and children were removed into the entrenched magazine. The sepoys came to a halt in the Sudder bazaar, and refused to advance a step; they now loaded their muskets, and advanced upon the magazine, which fortunately was held by a company of H.M.'s 61st reg. A party of the 57th reg., off duty but in the magazine, threw scaling-ladders and ropes over the walls to the men outside, who immediately crossed the moat and scaled the fort. About 300 of them thus gained ingress to the magazine, and, hurrahing, made for the gate which afforded access to the ordnance-stores. They were met by five files of the 61st under Col. Redmond, who poured a volley into their ranks which staggered them, and upon two more companies of that corps marching in to the rescue, the mutineers were driven out at the point of the bayonet. The company of the 57th Regiment inside the magazine was quickly disarmed, and lest the magazines of the two native regiments should fall into the hands of the mutineers, they were blown up by the artillery from the fort. At night the mutineers fired the church, the Roman Catholic chapel, two hospitals, H.M.'s 61st mess-house, and a dozen bungalows—but were driven out of the station and dispersed the next day. Many of these men have since returned to camp, giving up their arms, and stating their willingness to be shot. It is pleasing, in the midst of such general disaffection, to notice the loyalty with which the 10th Regiment Light Cavalry behaved in this mutiny, not a suspicion attaching to officers or men, who are reported thoroughly trustworthy.

GHAZEPUR, May 21.—"We are all quiet here, as well as at Azimghur and Benares, from both of which places I have received letters this morning. The 65th are believed to be perfectly staunch, and their officers have the greatest confidence in them. There are a lot of the 19th men about this place; they have not succeeded in doing any damage yet or creating any disaffection."

GUZERAT.—Serious fears are entertained at Ahmedabad, Broach, Surat, and other towns in Guzerat, of a rising of the Grassias, aided by the Bheel and Kolie tribes of the Mahee and Rewa Kantas. It appears that government have recently been meddling with the Tora Giras allowances of the former, and have sent a cloud of officials into Guzerat, to aid the Commissioner for Alienations in the settlement and resumption of these allowances. The Grassias are Rajpoots, a warlike race who will resist to the uttermost any attempt to deprive them of what they may consider to be their just rights. Very great caution is necessary in dealing with these people.

GWALIOR.—The Gwalior cavalry have been sent forward from Agra in the direction of Delhi, in order to clear the road of any mischief-makers.

May 24.—"All quiet here. The troops show the best spirit. The Grenadier regiment marched towards Etawah on the 22nd, and will be there to-morrow morning. The men were delighted at the prospect of service. Capt. Raikes, with a troop of cavalry, and a hundred of the Maharaja's body guard marched last night for Agra. The Maharaja has offered, it is said, 100 rupees a head for every mutineer brought in alive; so the Delhi fellows had better look out for squalls if they come this way. Why does not our Government do the same? Mutineer-catching would be as profitable in that case as looting, besides being more honourable, which, however, the Mewattees might not understand."

HISSAR, May 17.—We are cut out entirely from all parts of the country to the eastward of this station, and are most anxious to glean even the most trifling information of passing events, which of course are most fully detailed in your journal. A postal line is being established viâ Etawah, Bheroom, &c. &c., to Hissar.

Everything, of course, at the present moment is in a state of the greatest uncertainty, though I am glad to say that, at this time of mutiny, we are able to hold our own. Confidence is everything, and a bold front may prevent any disturbance. There is something rotten in the present state of affairs, but the powers that be are, as usual, studying routine and formula while on the brink of a volcano.

HODUL.—A letter from Lieut. Young, of the artillery, now at Hodul, says:—"We arrived here early this morning from Chatta, eighteen miles. Found the town in a complete uproar. The Zemeendars (Jats) of two adjoining villages having completely gutted it. You never saw such a scene—great fat Buniahs roaring and crying as if they would break their hearts. Five or six of them have been killed. They have, however, spared the bungalows, and everything in them. You can tell this to Mr. Bradford, who is the owner: only his kutchery was broken into, but nothing, I believe, of consequence taken."

Letters dated Hodul (53 miles on this side of Delhi) 28th instant have been received this morning. The Commissioner, Mr. Harvey, keeps his camp standing, awaiting communication with the Commander-in-Chief. The Jats and Goojurs were fighting and plundering each other in the surrounding villages. There are now at Hodul thirty-five Europeans, most of whom have escaped thither from the adjacent districts—among their number four railway gentlemen who got away from Delhi. Their escape appears to have been almost miraculous. Six started together—two were murdered at a village about ten miles on the Delhi side of Hodul—and of the four who are safe, one has a sword-wound in the head. Others are mentioned as being still in the neighbourhood, and a party had volunteered for their rescue, and were to start on the 28th with an escort of forty troopers. Hodul has been plundered, martial law proclaimed, and numerous offenders are said to be likely to meet with summary punishment. The names of several parties who have reached Hodul, or are still in the neighbouring district of Delhi, are mentioned:—Mr. J. Hurst; Mr. Nunn and family; Mr. Sinclair and family; Mr. Penson, Mr. Palmer, Messrs. Kinlock, Wemyss, with Mr. Thornhill, at Kosie; Mr. Bradford; Mr. Eckford.

HATRASS, May 24.—"The Gwalior cavalry yesterday rescued about twenty persons from a village near this. One of them is an indigo planter, name Nichterlein. One of his sons is killed, another wounded severely, and the whole family injured, more or less. There is also a Col. Cecil (retired), a Mr. Connor, a writer in one of the Allyghur offices, and an old sergeant named Ryan." The body of European volunteers reached Hatrass on the 27th, and proceeded last night to release the six Europeans at Maloe. Their presence at Hatrass has been of great service, and has been warmly welcomed by the whole city; the principal merchants offering to pay highly if the volunteers (sahibs) will promise to remain.

The inhabitants offered to pay Rs. 500 a day, or the sum of Rs. 8,000 down, if the volunteers would remain to protect them. This volunteer corps was raised at the suggestion of Mr. Paterson Saunders, Col. A. I. M.

JHANSI.—The following is from Jhansi, dated 20th May:—"We are in a state of great anxiety here, as you may well suppose; but at present everything is quiet in Bundelkund. At Jhansi we have the head-quarters of the 14th irregular cavalry, consisting of some 250 men, and the left wing of the 12th N.I. The men are stanch, and I hope will continue so. Captain Dunlop of the 12th, who commands the station here, is an able and most efficient officer. Some time since, when the sepoys showed and expressed a doubt about the cartridges here, he took every man of them into the magazine with him, where he remained five hours, and satisfied each man individually, that there was nothing objectionable, or that could at all injure their caste in the paper; the men were satisfied, and fired the cartridges next morning without a murmur. I wish to God that the same course had been pursued in every other regiment when the question was first raised, and we should in all probability have been spared the shocking and brutal scenes lately enacted. Our letters to-day from Nowgong to the head-quarters of the 12th N.I. and the other wing of the 14th Irregulars, say that everything there is quiet; but I fear that the 34th men, many of whom are from this part of the country, may do mischief on their return after their late conduct at Barrackpore. However, strict watch will be kept or their farrival."

KURNAUL.—Copy of a letter just received from Mr. Le Bas, judge of Delhi:—

May 16.—"As far as we know about forty-five Europeans (men and ladies) escaped from Delhi on the night of the 11th. There may be more. There are ten or eleven of us here—the rest are at Umballah and Meerut. There is a very large European force at Meerut, they will march southward in a day or two, we hope. The Mozuffernuggur district is in a very bad state: plundering and burning in all directions. The road from this to Delhi is clear fifty miles, beyond that all is confusion, so that we can hear nothing of Delhi. We do not know where the mutineers are, or what they are doing, neither do we know what is the state of Meerut—there are all kinds of reports.

"The Putialah Rajah is holding Thanesar, 200 of his men are here. The munduls are very useful, and assist withsowars, &c.

"We are most anxious to know whether the row has spread to the south and east. I enclose a list of those whom we know to have escaped, Fraser, Metcalfe, and many others were in the city. What their fate was we cannot tell. Many officers were killed—we cannot tell exactly how many.

List of Officers and Ladies escaped from Delhi.

Brigadier Graves, Capt. Michell, brigade-major.

74th Reg. N.I.—Major and Mrs. Abbott, Capt. and Mrs. Wallace, Capt. Hawkey, Lieut. Grant, Lieut. and Mrs. Taylor, Ensign Mew, Ensign Elton, sergeant-major and wife.

38th Reg. N.I.—Capt. and Mrs. Tytler, Capt. and Mrs. Gardner, Ensign Grubb, Ensign Drummond.

J. Le Bas, Esq., C. S.; Mrs. Hutchinson, Mrs. Holland, Mr. and Mrs. Wagentrieber, Capt. and Mrs. De Teissier, artillery; Lieut. Aislabie, ditto; Dr. Balfour, Miss Smith, Miss Haldane, Miss Wingfield, Mr. and Mrs. Berkely, Mr. Heatley, Mr. Murphy, sergeant-major 38th L.I., Bazar-Sergeant Fleming and Mrs. Fleming, Assist.-Surgeon Stewart.

(True copy.)

H. FRANKS, A.D.C.

Mofussilite Extra, May 27.

[A private letter from Mr. Wagentrieber, dated May 29th, distinctly states that Mr. Heatley, his collaborateur on the Delhi Gazette, was murdered. As Mr. H. resided in the college, it is probable that he was among those who in vain fled to the Royal Fort as an asylum, and were there butchered by the mutineers.—Ed. A. I. M.]

LUCKNOW.—Five Oude infantry regiments have unanimously volunteered to serve against the rebels. The 5th infantry and other infantry and two guns will be at Cawnpore within four days.

A letter from Lucknow, dated the 17th, says:—"Our worthy chief-commissioner is doing all he can to prepare for any outbreak, should such be brewing, of which there is not, however, much apprehension. The Dak bungalow has been garrisoned by a part of a cavalry corps, and guns placed facing the road. The 'Mueche Bhowun' building is taken possession of by our troops, and Sir Henry personally superintends the mounting of the guns, &c., upon its high walls. The residency and the adjoining building has been made over to the civil residents, and to a part of H.M.'s 32nd regiment; the remainder of the corps being located in cantonments. The excitement caused by these changes, and the proceedings at Delhi, is very great."—Mofussilite, May 22.

"There has been a partial mutiny here on the night of the 30th, and morning of the 31st. The mutineers, consisting of half of the 48th N.I., and about half of the 71st, some few of the 13th, and two troops of the 7th cavalry, had fled towards Seetapore. All quiet in the city."—Mofussilite, June 2.

SEETAPORE, OUDE, May 22nd.—"We have been in a state of anxiety lest the sepoys here should rise. Indeed, we continue every precaution still, though we hope now that the excitement is over. We heard from Bareilly on the 20th that the 68th and 18th N.I. had both been in a state of great excitement for several days, owing to an absurd report that a European regiment was coming there to force them to use the new cartridges. They had, however, become quiet again, and the letter stated that no further trouble was apprehended. They are quiet at Lucknow too; but the three native regiments there are closely watched, and will be clean swept away if any outbreak occurs."

MURADABAD.—All well at Muradabad. The soldiers are stanch to both the European residents and their officers.

A party of 200 sappers and miners have been forced to lay down their arms and their regimental clothing and plunder generally.

MYNPOORIE, May 31st.—We are still in garrison, but received aid last evening, in the shape of 200 irregular cavalry from Lucknow. We will astonish some of these ruffians now.

What was published on Sunday in the station, regarding the fighting at Mynpoorie, was incorrect. Both the companies of the 9th N.I. left the place quietly. This was effected by the admirable conduct of Lieut. DeKantzow, and one of his native officers, Row Bowany Singh.

A letter dated Mynpoorie, 23rd May, says:—

"Young DeKantzow never left the mutineers. He said they might kill him when they liked, but that while he lived he would remain in the station, and try to keep order. Row Bowany Singh rode amongst them, and finally DeKantzow, and he persuaded them to leave. They have not plundered the treasury, killed a single person, or released a man from the jail."

The magistrate maintained his position with great credit to himself and those under him.

A telegraphic despatch announces that European troops (H.M.'s 84th) have commenced arriving at Benares. The 1st Madras Fusiliers must be by this time in Calcutta.

The reports from all stations below Agra, are excellent.—Mofussilite, May 26.

Mow is still safe, and a force is now marching upon that city, under the command of General Woodburn, C.B., composed as follows:—

Two squadrons H.M.'s 14th Light Dragoons.
4th company, 2nd battalion Artillery, with No. 4 light field battery. (Europeans.)

3rd regiment Nizam's cavalry.

25th regiment Bombay N.I.

19th regiment Bombay N.I.

MEERUT.—The Syuds and Juts in the neighbourhood of Meerut have declared themselves on the British side.

Mr. David, the hotel-keeper of Meerut, was wounded, but is, I believe, alive yet.

Poor Mr. Tregar was murdered, but the rest of the family are all safe; I think they are all in the laboratory. Their house, we hear, was set on fire, but was very soon put out.

Mr. Greathed writes from Meerut, dated May 20:—

"Among all the villainies and horrors of which we have been witnesses, some pleasing traits of native character have been brought to light. All the Delhi fugitives have to tell of some kind acts of protection and rough hospitality, and yesterday a Fakir came in with a European child he had picked up on the Jumna. He had been a good deal mauled on his way, but he made good his point. He refused any present, but expressed a hope that a well might be sunk in his name to commemorate the act. I promised to attend to his wishes, and Hirmam Bhartee, of Dhamoura, will, I hope, long live in the memory of man. The parents have not been discovered, but there are plenty of good Samaritans."

DELHI.—Official News:—Extract of a letter from Ghazee-ooddeen Nuggur, from Mr. Greathed, Commissioner of Meerut, dated 30th May:—

"I have infinite gratification in informing you that the mutineers have been signally defeated by Brigadier Wilson's force. We took up our position this morning on the left bank of the Hindon, holding the suspension-bridge. At 4 p.m. the picket gave notice of the approach of the enemy, who opened a fire from five guns. The troop of horse artillery crossed the Hindon by a ford on the right, protected by the carabinieri and the rifles by the bridge. The enemy were driven in by the rifles and fire of Major Scott's battery, and the horse artillery turned their flank, and they fled, leaving all the guns and a large supply of intrenching tools. Some took refuge in a village, and were shot down or burnt out. Another party of their force was pursued by the carabinieri. I was allowed by Brigadier Wilson to attend upon him during the action, and can therefore speak from personal knowledge of the admirable manner in which the battle was fought by our troops. Our loss fell chiefly among the rifles, but I am not aware of the actual number of killed and wounded."

In another letter it is stated that our loss in killed and wounded did not exceed forty-four, caused chiefly by the explosion of an ammunition-wagon of the enemy's, abandoned near the bridge.

MURDAUN.—At Murdaun in the Punjab, the 55th regiment native infantry broke into open mutiny; of the fate of their officers we are uncertain. A detachment of Europeans from Peshawar are on their track, and have already slain many of them, and taken one hundred and fifty prisoners into Peshawar.

Nusseerabad, May 19, 1857.

SIR,—As a good deal of interest must have been excited in England among those connected with India, by the late mutinies that have taken place and the disaffection that, I am sorry to say, has been very general throughout the Bengal army, you may perhaps be glad to have a few lines from me, though dated from a remote corner of the empire. At this place there are no European troops quartered at all; the garrison consists of two Bengal regiments of native infantry, a battery and company of artillery, also native, and the 1st Bombay Lancers. It is in small stations like these that mutiny is most dangerous, because we have no European troops to rely upon. I do not apprehend anything of the kind—at least we hope for the best: the affair, however, is very serious. I consider the present crisis more important, and the state of feeling among our native troops more dangerous, than the Afghan calamities. The insurrection and campaign in the Punjab in 1849, and the disastrous victory of Chillianwallah, and, indeed, than any of the events that have of late years given a blow to the Government and shaken its stability.

You will receive accounts of all that has been published in the Indian papers, I need not therefore repeat them here. It is several days since we heard from Delhi, and such is the state of things that we cannot help feeling very anxious lest some outbreak may have occurred there, to prevent the regular issue of the Gazette. Delhi is a very dangerous place when there is anything like disaffection abroad, and likely enough to be the focus of any revolutionary movement that might be attempted. I trust my suspicions are false, and that I shall be able to tell you so before I despatch this letter; but there is a large magazine at Delhi, and as all this mutiny has had its ostensible origin in the new cartridges, we cannot help feeling a little anxious lest a disturbance may have broken out, and an attempt been made to get at the magazine stores. I trust, however, that all these surmises are groundless.

The papers have been full of letters from all parts of the country, some writers suggesting one thing and some another, and nearly all attributing the evil to different causes. Some say the cause is the paucity of European officers, some the incapacity of native officers; others, the system that prevails in the Bengal army of enlisting high-caste men, and promoting by seniority alone; and some few seem to think the whole affair is merely what it appears at first sight to be, a panic about the cartridges. No doubt the evil, whatever is its cause, is very widely spread, and, if not checked, may be productive of very serious consequences.

What the sepoys say is this: they have been told that the Government are trying to force them to break their caste, in order that, having no resource left, they may become Christians; many think that, by merely breaking their caste and touching the fat of bullocks and pigs, which is or was supposed to be spread over the cartridge-paper, they become Christians at once. Many of your readers in England will smile at this: it is childish, it is pitiable to see such superstition and folly; but these men have arms in their hands, they are as great fanatics as Cromwell's soldiers or the Covenanters were, they would die for their religion—miserable, childish, degrading superstition as it is—as willingly as Ridley and Latimer did for the pure doctrines of Christianity; and we have some 300,000 of them to deal with, should they "cut up rusty." Our authorities, the Commander-in-Chief and the Governor-General, need to exercise more than ordinary judgment, firmness, and promptitude at the present crisis.

You probably know that dépôts of instruction were formed at most of the large stations, whither a selected party from every regiment, under a subaltern officer, were sent to learn the new drill, and practice with the new rifle. At Umballa there was one of these dépôts. When the Commander-in-Chief's camp was pitched there, the 36th regt. N.I. was on escort duty with it; a party of that regiment, engaged in learning the new drill, gave a dinner to their comrades on the occasion of their passing through the station. The men of the regiment that were invited refused to go. It came to the ears of the officer temporarily in command, who, happening to meet a sabadar of the regiment outside his tent, asked him why they were so ungracious as to refuse the invitation. He replied, "Oh, those men are Christians." This came to the ears of the Chief, who instantly ordered the 36th out of cantonments a couple of marches. I relate this anecdote to show the feeling that exists. Even at this out-of-the-way place two packets of cartridges have been sent from Berhampore, where the mutiny first began, to the sepoys of a regiment here, from the mutineers calling upon them to refuse to take cartridges like them; and the best of it is, that the cartridges the 19th N.I. mutinied about at Berhampore were not the new rifle ones at all, but common blank cartridges that had been made up by the 7th N.I., and used up to that day by the recruits of the very corps that made the disturbance without a word being said.

I hear from personal inquiry that even among the best-disposed men there exists a great feeling of apprehension and distrust lest the rumours that have been so artfully instilled into their ears should be true. It is only in regiments where previous ill-will or bad feeling existed that open violence need be expected; but in others, where there has been, and is, every disposition to remain faithful to Government and their duty, there is this apprehension and distrust.

The Commander-in-Chief has sent a circular round to commanding officers, directing them to sound the feelings of their men, and enjoining them to assure the sepoys that there is nothing objectionable in the cartridges,—as if this was any use. The difficulty is that the men will not believe their own officers: some means must be taken to restore their confidence, and then there may be some use in assuring them that their suspicions are groundless.

Some attribute the disaffection to the paucity of European officers. I will not enlarge upon this subject, as it has so often been discussed, but I merely observe, in passing, that the European element in the Bengal army has dwindled down almost to nothing. Regiments have generally about eight officers for duty, besides the regimental staff. In our corps, at this place there are no captains at all present; and we not unfrequently see even an adjutant and interpreter holding three companies each: most certainly there should be, at the very least, one European officer for every company. That is not nearly enough, but it would be a good thing if we had that.

Another thing is the seniority promotion system. Commanding officers in the Bengal army have no power whatever; they cannot promote a deserving man, or stop the promotion of an undeserving one,—the senior must be promoted, and the rule is rigidly adhered to. Of course a commanding officer can neither reward nor punish; a man has nothing to fear except, perhaps, a few days' drill and a little bullying upon parade; as long as he commits no very flagrant crime, he is sure of his promotion to a commission.

May 20.—Since writing the above our worst apprehensions have been realized. You will no doubt get full accounts of the insurrection from the papers; at present we are rather in the dark, the road between Meerut, Delhi, and this place being stopped, as they are in the hands of the insurgents. You will receive more direct and later intelligence from Agra than I can give you, so I will not repeat what we have heard. I trust the report that every European officer at Delhi had been murdered, was exaggerated. To-day we hear that a strong European force was to assemble at Kurnal. I heard of this about 10 A.M. to-day; but this morning early I fancied I perceived a difference in the manner of the sepoy, and could not help suspecting that some fresh news had been received. We have observed nothing very particular in the behaviour of our men; they have declared all along that they meant to remain faithful to the Government, but yet there was something peculiar about them, which was noticed by others as well as myself. I have very little doubt that, had not the prompt measures been adopted which appear to have been taken, the rebellion and mutiny would have spread to an alarming extent. It is alarming enough already. Will the Government at last open their eyes, or are they content to lose India? The Bengal army is not to be trusted, and the least thing they can do is to break up the present system altogether. We must have nearly double the number of officers, and double the number of European regiments; and for the future every man that is enlisted should be required to swear that his caste shall never interfere with his duty. But to effect even these changes we must have a large force of European troops. We have given the sepoy arms, and taught them the art of war, to fight against ourselves. Their teeth must be drawn, but the patient must be held down while the operation is going on.

We must enlist Sikhs and Goorkhas more extensively than we do; we must have a new system of promotion for natives—promotion by merit and not by seniority; commanding officers of regiments must have more power put into their hands, and be no longer sergeant-majors, as they are now; the staff absentee system must be altered,—if it is allowed to remain on its present footing we must have double the number of officers; when these changes have been effected, the Bengal army will cease to be what Sir Charles Napier called it, “an undisciplined rabble, more dangerous to its friends than its foes.”

Yours truly, ALIF.

May 24.—The ladies are in a dreadful state of alarm for their safety, and the commissary-man and his wife sleep in the Lancers' lines every night. The guard of the 15th N.I. has been sent in from Ajmere, where they were doing duty over the magazine and arsenal, and their place has been taken by the Mhairwarra local battalion. Forty men of the Lancers, under command of a native officer, have also been placed under the orders of the political officers at that place. Lieutenant Phillips of the 30th, and Stack of the Lancers, have proceeded to join the Kotah contingent, now en route for the disturbed districts.

In consequence of the indisposition of Brigadier Macan, Colonel Penney, of the Lancers, conducts the out-door duties of the camp, assisted by the Brigade Major, Captain Bishop, of the 30th N.I., who is most attentive and alert in all he has to do. I had nearly forgot to mention that both the parties of the 30th and 15th, who were at the school of musketry at Umballa, have rejoined, and their comrades refuse to associate with them, saying, that as they had used the new cartridges, they were defiled, and as bad as Christians. They would not allow the poor fellows to draw water at their wells, and used other means of annoyance, thereby showing a bad spirit, which I hope soon to see repressed.

The Bengalees, after a vain attempt to seduce our Lancers to join them, openly mutinied on the 28th. Our gallant fellows charged them repeatedly, although the rebels had got possession of the guns of the station and outnumbered them eight to one. The odds were, however, too long, and the Lancers were compelled finally to retreat upon Ajmere, thereby securing the safety of the important arsenal at that station. The mutineers having marched in the direction of Delhi, our troops finally returned to, and have re-occupied, Nusseerabad. Col. Penney, Maj. Spottiswoode, and Cornet Newberry, of the Lancers, fell in the attack, and Capt. E. A. Hardy and Lieut. F. A. E. Loch are amongst the wounded.

There has been a serious mutiny of the troops at Nusseerabad. As far as is known, the account is as follows, from an authentic letter received from Ajmere:—The light company of the 15th N.I. suddenly seized the guns of Capt. Timbrell's battery in the afternoon of the 28th May, while the horses of the troop, with the men, had gone to water. The light company was joined by the rest of the 15th; the mutineers fired the guns on the 1st Bombay Lancers.

The 30th and artillerymen refused to act against the mutineers, and remained passive till the evening, when they joined their mutinous comrades. Captain Timbrell was faithfully protected by some of his men. The whole of the troops left Nusseerabad at 12 P.M. on 29th May, when they started off, saying they were going to Delhi. The horses of the battery not being likely to be properly fed or looked after, they will not be able to drag the guns through the deep sands of Rajpootana with any certainty. A light field force of European infantry and 3 guns of an European battery from Deesa, are expected at Ajmere to-morrow, the 3rd instant.

The magazine and treasury of Ajmere have not been injured, being placed under the care of two companies of the Mhairwarra battalion in the magazine inclosure. Ajmere itself is tranquil and secure. 2,000 Mhairwarra troops had been hurried over by the Joudhpoor durbar to defend it.

It affords us sincere pleasure to state that the wives of the officers, and, in fact, all the women at the station of Nusseerabad, are in safety.

The only officers respecting whose safety there seems a doubt are Captain Turnbull and Ensigns Harcourt and Flood, 30th regiment.

NEMUCH, May 24, 1857.—The 15th regt. Bengal N.I. at Nusseerabad are in a very mutinous state, and the regiment is supposed to have been tampered with before it left Meerut. It is not concealed that there are mutineers in the regiment who have declared that they will kill their colonel, Shuldham. The 30th regt. N.I. at the same station is suspected, but do not speak out. The battery of artillery and the Bombay Lancers are as firm as rocks. It is to the certainty of the two latter branches of the service remaining true, that the 15th do not break out. On the night of the 21st a squadron of the Lancers was on duty all night with the view of catching any mutineers who might leave their lines; and a subaltern's guard from the Lancers was pitched close to the Artillery with their guns in position and loaded, and the same thing will last, you may depend on it, until a blow has been struck at the insurgents at Delhi. The Kotah Contingent, whose station is at Deolee, about fifty-six miles from Nusseerabad, is now marching towards the station. The whole of the horses of the Lancers are kept saddled all night. I consider Nusseerabad safe, because measures are taken to meet any rise. With regard to ourselves, I wish we could say as much. I suspect the 72nd regiment. The officers are afraid of their men, and dare not tell them anything that has taken place; and although they tell you their men are stanch, yet their quivering tongues and pale faces belie their tale, yet no precautions are taken, because the sepoy must not be suspected; so we may have our throats cut one fine night by our faithful guardians. Concealment is the worst remedy that can be applied to the disease, and with no effect. The colonel talks to the sepoy, who assure him that they are stanch; but I can assure him one little spark thrown and circulated among the men would set them in a blaze. It is lucky for us, I consider, that we have here at present the 7th regiment N.I. of the Gwalior contingent, who I believe to be firm, likewise the troop of native horse artillery. So much for ourselves. Captain Nixon, of the Bombay 25th regt. N.I., who was at Bhurtpore, collected 1,000 horse, and marched on Muttra without any orders. He arrived there just in time to prevent all the shroffs from bolting. The Lieutenant-Governor is so pleased with Nixon that he nominated him to the command of the station; and Captain Munbee, of the Bombay engineers, has waived his rank, and volunteered to serve under Nixon. In such times these are the men we want,—they are worth a hundred Bengalees. The mutiny at Meerut ought never to have occurred, or, having occurred, it ought to have been put down in two hours. General Imbecile commanded at Meerut; when the 3rd cavalry went to the jail to relieve the prisoners, a party of Carbineers who had just arrived at the station were sent to prevent them; but without a guide, they mistook the road and never reached the jail until all the prisoners were out of it. Should you not hear from me to-morrow, nothing will have occurred worthy of note.

For the quietude of that part of Rajpootana, which borders on our presidency, we are informed by the Poona Observer, that a moveable column is to be immediately formed at Mhow, which will be so equipped that it can be rapidly moved in any direction. Two squadrons of H.M.'s 14th (the King's) light dragoons at Kirkee, the 25th N.I. at Poona, the companies of the light battalion at Poona, and a European battery of artillery from Ahmednuggur, have already been warned for immediate service. The 25th N.I., we understand, march on Monday morning, and the wing of the dragoons on Tuesday or Wednesday next. They will be inspected by His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, in marching order, on their private parade-ground, on Monday next. Major-General Woodburn, C.B. has been selected for the command of this force.

ROORKEE.—Extracts from two letters from Colonel Baird Smith, dated Roorkee, May 24 and 25:—“Here we are in high heart and spirits. The Sapper detachment, about 300 strong, mutinied on the night of the 18th and 19th, but not a drop of blood was shed during the event. A company had been detached to join the Commandar-in-Chief's column, and had got half-way to Saharanpore, when the tidings reached it of the collision at Meerut, in which poor Fraser lost his life. They would advance no farther, but marched back to their cantonment at Roorkee, bringing their European officers with them and treating them personally with respect. When they returned, Lieuts. Drummond, Bingham, and Fulford, had already left cantonments at the earnest request of the native officers, and had been escorted to the college by them and a body of old sepoys who resolutely resisted the attempts of a small party among the men who urged the massacre of the Europeans. Three officers, one civilian, three non-commissioned officers, five women, and six children, were safely removed and brought to the workshops about midnight. About an hour later, Lieuts. Pemberton and Jefferys, with one conductor and four non-commissioned officers joined us also uninjured; and we had then the whole of the Europeans belonging to the detachment in safety. So soon as daybreak, I sent a strong party under MacLagan to take possession of the lines, and secure the public property there. It was found that the sepoys had fled en masse, with the exception of two native officers and about forty men, who were found in the lines. They represented that the others had fled in sheer terror of an immediate attack from myself and the workshop garrison, as they knew I had equipped three guns (six-pounders), and had lots of grape and canister, with perfect willingness to use them if need were. I never saw anything nobler than the conduct of the ladies generally. They are never in the way, always calm, and quiet, and self-possessed, and adding nothing by personal demeanour to our anxieties on their behalf. To-day being the Queen's birthday, we fired a royal salute, gave three cheers for Her Majesty, and the remnant of the Sappers fired a feu de joie. It was meant as a broad hint to the neighbourhood that it had best keep quiet. I was a little anxious about supplies for a few days, but the bazar people have recovered confidence, and the difficulty seems to have passed away."

May 28.—"I made a patrol yesterday to Jowalapore, Khumkul, and Hurdwar. It was amusing to see the enthusiasm of the people in welcoming us. The whole population turned out, covered the tops of the houses, and filled the streets, shouting, cheering, and declaring themselves wholly with us. My party was not a strong one,—only ten Europeans with some mounted natives; but it had apparently all the re-assuring effect of an army with banners! Jowalapore and Khumkul had both been attacked by dacoits, and had both beaten the blackguards off with loss of life on both sides. The Jowalapore people took about five-and-thirty prisoners, and as they were, like Tartars, not easily disposed of when caught, I have sent my little detachment of twenty sappers to bring them in, and will send them on to the magistrate, as, though caught red-handed, I cannot deal summarily with them."

"After a five-and-forty miles' trip, I got home home in the evening all the better for the work."

SIMLA.—The following is an account of the Simla panic, dated 20th May:—

"As the most exaggerated and cruel reports have been spread abroad in connection with the so-called mutiny of the Goorkhas at Jutog, of their having sacked Simla, and slaughtered the inhabitants, it is most essential for the comfort of the numerous friends and relatives of those who have gone to Simla, and who are supposed to have been in the midst of carnage and rapine, that a plain unvarnished statement of what really has taken place should appear in your columns. I would first satisfy each anxious mind by stating that no acts of violence have been committed, that the Goorkha regiment has not broken out into open mutiny, that Simla has not been attacked, and that the troops are steadily performing their duty as of old, but that a most disgraceful panic has cleared Simla of its population. The facts of the case appear to be as follows:—The Goorkhas were ordered to the plains, but on former occasions, when called for service, a company has always been left to protect the families, and to guard the lines and some public offices at Simla. On this occasion every man was ordered down, and a party of chuprassies were sent to Jutog, and to the other guards, who relieved the Goorkhas."

This proceeding very naturally irritated the men, who are peculiarly sensitive, and who are extremely jealous of their wives. Remonstrances were made, and the men refused to march on such terms; they declared that they had always served us well, that our enemies had been their enemies, and why should we no longer have confidence in them? Rumour at once informed the residents that the regiment was in open mutiny; no time was given to ask questions; but, with most unjudged precipitation, an armed meeting of residents was assembled at ten o'clock at night. In the mean time, the police having charge of the magazine, a chest of arms was clandestinely removed from Jutog, and brought to Simla; powder, also, was carried off secretly. Pickets were posted, and an advanced picket was placed at Boileaugunge, with videttes extended up to Jutog. Some foolish persons rode into Jutog, armed to the teeth.

The regiment naturally wished to know what all this was about, and became highly incensed at the proceedings of the residents.

A flag of truce was sent to them from Simla, implying that war had been declared. The ladies of Simla, frightened out of their lives, were crammed into the Bank, and the residents, including a number of drunken Europeans, kept a sort of watch, the premises of the Bank having been barricaded, the two post-guns placed in position, and everything done to tempt the Goorkhas to fight. The Goorkhas simply asked that their usual guards should be restored to them, that the spare muskets secretly moved from their magazine should be restored, that the two months' pay that was always kept in the kote should be put back again, adding that to hurt the sahibs never entered into their heads, but that the sahibs had done everything to insult and irritate men who had always served the Government well.

The residents agreed to the terms, and the regiment from that moment were as peaceable and as orderly as ever.

In the mean time, on the mere rumour that the regiment was in mutiny, a panic seized on many officers who enjoy good and high appointments, who, without waiting to hear if the rumour was correct, betook themselves to instant flight; right down the khuds by broken by-paths, these valiant heroes escaped, leaving women and children to their fate. Many who had signed their names, calling for an armed assembly, were the first to make a clean bolt of it,—helter-skelter, away they went; and, of course, others who heard of this rapid exodus, took to flight likewise. Without bonnets, ladies were to be seen escaping on foot, and many poor sickly ones, who would have been horrified at the idea of walking a mile, actually walked fifteen, thirty, nay, in some cases forty miles. Old men, decrepit and shaky, trudged off valiantly; and the road from Simla to Dugshaie beggars description. Under a burning sun, with no protection, families were to be seen pouring along half dead from terror and fatigue; they still pressed on, and weak and helpless women, who would have scouted the idea of not sleeping on a comfortable bed, were to be seen bivouacking on the open ground, the bare earth for a pillow. For twenty-four hours and more women and children tasted no food. "On, on to Dugshaie!" was the cry; "the Goorkhas have slaughtered those who were mad enough to remain at Simla, and they are fast in pursuit to massacre us." To Dugshaie, and to Kusowlie, this stream of fugitives poured in, objects of pity and compassion. And whence arose this misery?—this distressing scene? A court of inquiry will no doubt explain. A most uncalculated distrust of the Goorkhas was unquestionably the prominent cause; the disgraceful and cowardly flight of those whose presence would have given confidence was another reason. No wonder that poor timid creatures, as women are, should have been frightened almost out of their lives, on finding that those to whom they looked for protection had vanished from fear, but many a woman's heart beat less from terror, many a woman's courage supported her in her trials more firmly than did the hearts of many men, whose lengthened visages and frightened demeanour bespoke unmitigated fear.

During the alarm the guard at Kusowlie looted the Treasury of some 1,300 rupees, but the regiment are so indignant at this, that they resolved to turn them out of their regiment; the men fled, but have been caught by the Goorkhas, and have been handed over to the civil authorities, and the money repaid. Such is the feeling of the regiment. Those few who remained at Simla have continued to urge upon the fugitives to return; and the example having been set by some ladies, numbers are now to be seen wending their way back. I ought not to omit that some noble and disinterested acts were performed by some of those whose fear did not overcome their gallantry. There were to be seen men who rode backwards and forwards from Simla to Dugshaie for the sole purpose of affording assistance to the unprotected; one would have thought that this would have been the rule; alas! it has been the exception, and must be chronicled accordingly. Such is the narrative of the great Simla flight of 1857.

UMBALLAH.—Passing down the list, we come now to the 5th and 60th regiments at Umballah. We are without detailed account of the disaffection in these corps, but they are reported to have refused to march on Delhi when ordered so to do by wings, unless they were allowed to go as a body. Their mutinous state has been well known for some time, and fires have been of nightly occurrence in the station.

GOVERNMENT PROCLAMATIONS.

The following order has been issued by the Government of India:—

"No. 698 of 1857.—At a time when disaffection, excited by unfounded and unreasonable mistrust prevails, the Governor-General in Council has the satisfaction to find that conspicuous instances of loyalty and of attachment to the Government have occurred in the ranks of the native army of Bengal.

"His lordship in council desires, therefore, not only to acknowledge and to reward those who thus distinguish themselves, but also to express his conviction that, in the ranks of this well-tried and heretofore faithful army, many will evince, by meritorious deeds, their unflinching allegiance to the state and to the colours which they have sworn to defend.

"In order that the reward for eminent gallantry, loyalty, and good conduct may be prompt, and be conferred on the soldier in the sight of his comrades, the Governor-General in Council is pleased to empower,

His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief,
The Lieutenant-Governors of Bengal and the North-Western Provinces,

The Chief Commissioners in Oude and the Punjab,
The Governor-General's agents in Central India and Rajpootana,

General officers in command of divisions,
Brigadiers, being the senior officer present, and officers in separate command of bodies of troops and detachments, to promote to the commissioned ranks of the army any non-commissioned officer or soldier who, by eminent gallantry, or by any conspicuous act of devotion to the state, shall merit such distinction.

"The same authorities, and the commanding officers of all corps and detachments, are authorized to promote to the non-commissioned ranks any soldier who shall, in like manner, prove himself worthy of that reward.

"Officers and non-commissioned officers promoted under the operation of this order will be returned as supernumeraries, and be brought on the effective strength as vacancies occur.

"The Governor-General in Council is further pleased to authorize

His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief,
The Lieut.-Governors of Bengal and the North-Western Provinces, and

The Chief Commissioners in Oude and the Punjab, to admit native officers and soldiers to the 'Order of Merit,' in cases of distinguished gallantry or exemplary loyalty to the State.

"R. J. BIRCH, Colonel,
"Secy. to the Govt. of India in the Milty. Dept."

The Agra Government Gazette Extraordinary, of the 25th May, contains the following proclamation:—

"PROCLAMATION.

"By Order of the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor, North Western Provinces.

"All soldiers, engaged in the late disturbances, who are desirous of going to their homes, and who give up their arms at the nearest civil or military Government post, and retire quietly, shall be permitted to do so unmolested.

"Many faithful soldiers have been drawn into resistance to Government only because they were in the ranks and could not escape from them; or because they really thought their feelings of religion and honour injured by the measures of Government. This feeling was wholly a mistake, but it acted on men's minds. A proclamation now issued by the Governor-General in Council is perfectly explicit, and will remove all doubt on this point.

"Only evil-minded instigators in the disturbances, and those guilty of heinous crimes against private persons, shall be punished.

"All those who appear in arms against the Government, after this proclamation is known, shall be treated as open enemies.

"By order of the Hon. the Lieutenant Governor, North-Western Provinces.

"C. B. THORNHILL,

"Offg. Secy. to Govt. N. W. Provinces."

The LONDON MAIL of April 26 arrived at Calcutta June 20 (per Bentinck).

THERE is no obstruction in the Dakh between Calcutta and Agra.

GENERAL SIR HENRY BARNARD, late chief of the staff in the Crimea, has been placed in command of the forces before Delhi. Sir Henry is a man of activity and determination.

BILL FOR TRIAL OF OFFENCES AGAINST THE STATE.—We observed that the bill for the trial and punishment of offences against the State has been passed in the Legislative Council, and immediately received the Governor-General's assent, and became law. By this act, all persons who are guilty of treason or rebellion, are rendered liable to death, or transportation for life, or fourteen years' imprisonment with hard labour, and also to forfeiture of all property. The sentence can be carried out at once by the trying court, without reference to higher authority. Harboursing traitors is rendered punishable with seven years' imprisonment.

THE TELEGRAPH.—We are informed that a Telegraph signaller with an instrument has been ordered to proceed with the camp of His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief. His duties will be to communicate with Umballa from each halting ground. Since the fall of Allyghur a temporary office has been opened at Hatress.

GOVERNMENT have despatched letters to Lord Elgin and General Ashburnham with the object of obtaining the aid of the troops destined for China. The letters have been forwarded to Ceylon with the view of meeting them there. Sir Henry Ward has also been requested to send as many European troops from Ceylon as he can spare. The 35th Queen's from Burmah and the 1st Fusiliers from Madras are expected to arrive here speedily.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDER.

STATIONS.

Fort William, May 30, 1857.—The stations of Seerole and Sultanpore, Benares, Ghazepore, Chunar, Mirzapore, Juanpore, Goruckpore, and Azumghur, are, as a temporary arrangement, placed under the command of the brigadier commanding at Benares.

SERVICES OF LIEUT.-COL. H. FORSTER.

Fort William, June 2, 1857.—The following para. of a military letter, from the Hon. the Court of Directors to the Government of India, No. 57, dated 1st April, 1857, is published for general information:—

Para. 14.—We should approve of the grant to Lieut.-col. Forster, C.B., of the benefit of the retiring regulations according to the time of his service since he was first commissioned as a local officer. He is a lieutenant-colonel by the general brevet of the 20th June, 1854. When he has completed a service of three years from that date in command of a regiment, we shall approve of his being granted the brevet of colonel.*

THE KOORIA MOORIA ISLANDS.

We have much pleasure in giving prominent insertion to the following letter from Capt. S. B. Haines on the Kooria Mooria Islands. Captain Haines writes from personal knowledge, and we advise capitalists both at home and abroad to weigh his remarks well before embarking in a speculation which all experienced men regard as hazardous in the extreme. We have talked with many navigators well acquainted with these islands, and they have all been of Capt. Haines's opinion. In the first place, there is not enough of guano on the islands to pay the expenses of a vessel of war, without which no portion of the deposit could be taken away; and, in the second place, the quality of the manure is considered of an inferior description. Capt. Haines's observations are, however, so conclusive, that they require no comment:—

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TELEGRAPH AND COURIER.

Dear Sir,—In your paper of the 28th of April, 1857, you published the terms of arrangement between the committee of the Ship Owners Association and the representatives of the leasees of guano on the Kooria Mooria Islands.

In 1836 I carefully surveyed and examined these islands, and the chart I completed, including the bay and whole group of Kooria Mooria, was published under the sanction of the Honourable East-India Company. I also remained for some little time at "Hullaniyah," the largest of the said group, mixing with the inhabitants, and becoming intimately acquainted with every particular relating to their locality. It is therefore from a wish to prevent disappointment to the enterprising spirit of the mercantile and shipping community, that I offer you a brief description of the inconveniences to be apprehended on many points, as reported in a journal kept during the period of my survey.

It is said that the Imam of Muscat has lately made a transfer of the Kooria Mooria Islands. I would inquire by what right he has done so? because it appears to me, from all I could ascertain on the spot, that his highness had neither hereditary nor moral claim to attach these islands to his possessions, the property never having belonged to himself or to his forefathers; and this rumoured transfer it is that induces me to trouble you with an outline of the information collected by myself in 1836, lest the Ship Owners Association may be led into error as to the advantages and disadvantages to be anticipated in carrying out the measures they propose to adopt.

In my journal I find I have stated, that "besides the boats occasionally touching here [Hullaniyah], this island is sometimes visited by a boat belonging to the 'Khalfan' family* of the 'Maharah' tribe, who claim the Kooria Mooria group as their hereditary property, the principal members of this family at present being,—

"Mahomed ibn Ali ibn Seyyed ibn Omar.

"Mahomed Ali ibn do. do. do. do.

"Najim ibn Ahmar."

* For an account of the Khalfan family, see De Lacy, [Chrestomathie Arabe, 2nd edition, iii. p. 357.

"These chieftains reside at Ghazir, and their periodical visits to the islands are made for the purpose of claiming any ambergris the inhabitants may have collected, as well as to obtain from them whatever money they may happen to have received in exchange for salted and dried fish, in return for which the natives are frequently rewarded with a small quantity of tobacco, dates, or coarse cloth; the liberality of the donors being generally regulated by the amount of tribute they may have succeeded in extorting."

I fear also that the position of the Kooria Mooria Islands for many months in the year would be found hazardous in the extreme, having an open anchorage, and at times a dead lee shore, added to the probable interruptions of the tribe before mentioned, who have hitherto evinced great jealousy of their rights, and are not backward to resent any incroachment thereof, as instanced in the case of the Pore Bunder boat.

The islanders themselves are inoffensive and few, not so the tribe under whose rule they live exclusively.

As to the "small vessel of war" being a protection to the guano fleet, I deem the proposition most farcical, seeing that for the greater part of the year she will in all probability find her own security engage her principal attention.

The subsequent condition of, and indications on the beach denote the power of the S. W. monsoon on these islands, and my synoptical table will also show the influence of the gales during four other months of the year. I mention these circumstances in order that the care essential for the safety of shipping while in the bay of Kooria Mooria may not be neglected, or left for fatal experience to inculcate.

The subjoined is a synoptical table of the weather I experienced off the Kooria Mooria Islands in 1835 and 1836.

† Reliance whaler, wrecked during the night, crew saved, and received on board.

"These northerly gales do not extend far southward, but appear to be confined to the limits above mentioned. They are called by the Arabs 'Belat,' and when blowing furiously, raise up dense heavy black clouds of dust and sand. Clear of Kooria Moorla Bay, and past 'Ras Roos' or 'Nus,' they blow along the line of coast (influenced by the high range of the 'Subban' mountains), in the direction of Morbat, at which anchorage the water is smooth, owing to the wind blowing off shore; but again through the deep and extensive valley of Dhofar it blows off shore with great violence.

"The southerly breezes appear also confined to that part of the Arabian coast, being seldom felt to the southward, the S. W. monsoon not reaching 'Sokotrah' before the 1st or 10th of May."

With respect to the supply of guano to be found in the Kooria Moorla group, and which, from the terms specified in the agreement, is evidently expected to be abundant, I look for further disappointment to the sanguine projectors of the scheme. The surfaces of several of these islands are certainly in most parts covered with guano, particularly the western and eastern islands, a cursory description of which my journal also contains.

"Jeserat Jibla ['kiblyah'], the eastern island and 3rd largest of the group, is nearly two miles long, one and a half broad, and five in circumference, forming from every point of view peaks composed of primitive limestone, more or less allied to granite—rocky on all sides, with the exception of a sandy nook E. of the N.W. point, in which we were fortunately able to secure our boats. The highest peak is 550 feet above the level of the sea, in lat. 17, 29, 16, north, and long. 56, 24, 22, east; that, is allowing Bombay to be in 72, 54, 26, east.—Jibla is a mere barren rock visited by birds of the gannet species, its only other occupants consisting of everything most obnoxious to man, all thriving wonderfully; such as snakes, rats, mics, scorpions, centipedes without number, and vermin of every description.

"We discovered many graves, and several human skeletons, one, leaning on his elbow, and still supporting his fleshless head in his bony hand—another in an erect position, supporting himself, or rather itself, against a rock—others lying here and there, more or less placed in positions as if the unhappy men had perished from starvation—which supposition was afterwards somewhat confirmed by the inhabitants of 'Hullaniyah,' who informed us that a ship and a Bugalo had both been wrecked there, and in consequence of not being able to render them any assistance, owing to the want of boats, the crews perished miserably of hunger and thirst."

"Hasiki" the western island of the Kooria Moorla group, "is one mile and two-fifths in length by three-quarters broad, composed of granite, without a single vestige of vegetation or anything to indicate its having ever been the resort of man. In 1836 I saw this island covered with myriads of birds of the same gannet species—the excrement giving to the island itself quite a white appearance: it is also rocky in every direction, with two nooks on its eastern side."

My description is not an alluring one, and if guano of good quality were actually obtainable, it perhaps would matter little, but I am by no means sanguine as to the positive value of the deposits to be met with in these islands—neither do I believe the supply will be found abundant, or deep, but the exact depth I did not ascertain, I simply judged from the fact, that in searching for geological specimens the guano appeared to lie very thinly on the surface.

In fact, the guano of the Kooria Moorla Islands, I suspect, is precisely similar to that discovered at Tahlfaroon [Salt rocks]. The bird is of the same species, a kind of gannet; and I dare say it is generally known, that on conveying a load of the Tahlfaroon guano to the isle of France, it was considered so inferior, that it realized nothing like the price expected. It had been collected at great cost and pains, and consequently proved a disappointment to the shippers. I even think that a greater proportion of sand and dust will be found mixed among the guano of Kooria Moorla than with that of Tahlfaroon, owing to the violence of the Belat winds.

The doubts I would suggest, therefore, arise from the very feasible queries of,—firstly, by what right has the Imam of Muscat assumed the power of bestowing upon others that which was not his to offer, and what appears never to have belonged to any of his family?

Secondly.—Has the legal right of farming out the islands of Kooria Moorla been obtained, and the title deeds proved correct and just?

Thirdly.—Have the difficulties and risks to be guarded against in procuring the guano been taken into account?

Fourthly.—Has the question been gravely calculated by experienced guano-shippers as to the quality and quantity of guano required to cover the expenses of shipping, outfit, risk, &c.? and whether it is probable the attempt will be satisfactory upon so large a scale of liabilities, judging and arguing upon more recent advice than that I would most humbly but very earnestly afford?

Fifthly.—Has the possible and probable delay in obtaining a single load been considered? In the case of the Tahlfaroon attempt impediments of this kind proved extremely embarrassing.

And sixthly.—The expenses of a vessel of war in such a difficult position will be considerable.

The orders of her Majesty's Government that the vessel of war appointed to the Kooria Moorla station should reach the islands in August I consider particularly injudicious, as I believe that any vessel entering the bay during that month will be glad to get out again at the shortest possible notice. Indeed, it is my confirmed opinion, from familiar experience, that the Kooria Moorla station will be far from an enviable one.

I fear I have already occupied too great a space in your valuable columns, otherwise I would gladly contribute still further information, trusting it might act as a caution to my friends and countrymen of the mercantile marine, urging them to consider well before undertaking the projected enterprise, lest disappointment and serious loss should verify the discouraging obstacles I have set forth, especially in the matter of loading and reloading vessels.

Almost every earthly difficulty may of course through patience and perseverance be surmounted, yet still I think the drawbacks presenting themselves to my mind, in connection with the Kooria Moorla group of islands, are likely to prove insurmountable as far as pecuniary benefit is concerned, or profit to be derived, and in any case the experiment will, I am afraid, result in dissatisfaction.

I am, dear sir,

Yours very faithfully,

S. B. HAINES.

MEDICAL.—We understand that Dr. Morehead will shortly proceed to Poona, to assume charge of the duties of superintending surgeon, Deccan division, until the return of Dr. Stovell from Persia. Dr. Giraud will act as principal of the Grant college during Dr. Morehead's employment in Poona.

ENORMOUS HAIL-STONES.—On June 5, a fall of hail-stones of the size of a hen's egg occurred at the villages of Kurda and Takli Hajee in the zillah of Ahmednuggur. A similar occurrence took place at Belgaum on June 3. Rain and small hail-stones also fell at Seroor about the same time.

THERE ARE THREE BATTERIES OF ARTILLERY at Bombay ready for service at any moment.

MR. FORBES, the session judge at Surat, has been desired by Government to hold a special sessions at Broach, for the trial of the prisoners taken during the late riot in that city.

THE NATIVE INHABITANTS OF BOMBAY have prepared an address to Lord Elphinstone expressive of their abhorrence of the mutinous conduct of the native sepoys in the north-west of Bengal. The petitioners also express their willingness to render Government any assistance that may be required for the preservation of peace in these parts.

WRECK OF THE "OCEAN QUEEN."—A letter received by a mercantile firm from Zanzibar, announces that the British bark Ocean Queen, Captain P. Rees, was wrecked on the Bazarato Islands on the night of the 3rd March. The commander, officers, and crew were all saved, excepting two Lascars.

THE MUTINY IN BENGAL: ITS CAUSES AND CORRECTIVES.

It has been remarked of the natives of India, that they have no nationality. The man born in Upper Hindostan looks upon himself as a superior animal to the Bengalee. Both look down upon the smaller races of the Dukhup. The Rajpoot is proud of his lineage and its traditions. The Rohilla Patan and the Seyud of Bārhi have as much pride of caste as the highest Brahmin. All of these have an intense love of kin and a high sense of honour; but nowhere do we find that love of the country which has given them all birth, which we call patriotism,—taking pride in its character among nations, desiring its freedom and independence, and ready to sacrifice life and property, and everything that man holds dear, to promote its welfare and to elevate or secure its position. High feelings they have on very many points. A Hindoo will sacrifice his life at any time rather than do anything by which he would lose caste. A Mahomedan of good family will do the same rather than lift the veil that covers his wife's face; but neither one nor the other would stir a hundred yards to procure for his country one form of government rather than another, unless, indeed, he should see some personal interest to be gained by the change.

The cause of this is perhaps to be found in the past history of India and in the variety of races which have successively had dominion there, all of which remain in the country as distinct classes, separated in habits and associations of all kinds, as in religion, and not attaching the least value to the only one thing they have in common—the locality of birth and residence.

This state of feeling in the very promiscuous population of India favoured exceedingly the ambitious views and promoted the success of the European communities which entered the arena and took part in the struggle for dominion when the Moghul empire fell to pieces. The main instrument used by the English in this struggle, and which for a hundred years has never failed them, has been the Sepoy army (composed of men of all those various castes and races), which they have raised, and have hitherto contrived to retain in devoted attachment through all fortunes, until, through its zealous services, the entire of the vast continent of India has been brought under subjection, with Burmah and the eastern shores and islands of the Bay of Bengal added to the old Moghul empire, and China threatened, and made to feel its power. We have a Sepoy army which, including local and irregular corps, musters 250,000 men of all classes, all castes, and all religions. This army has been remarkable, during the entire century of its growth to this strength, for its fidelity, its contentment, its modestia, if we may be permitted to use a Latin very expressive word, of the highest possible praise to disciplined troops. Its relations with the Government it served were those of entire confidence, the Sepoys feeling that every condition of service was sure to be observed, and the pay agreed upon certain to be received punctually, without deduction on any pretext, and in coin of full value. But more than this, they have hitherto had full assurance that all their caste feelings and prejudices of faith or custom, and points of honour, were well understood and would be respected; so that the service, while it afforded an honourable and secure livelihood, maintained their position in their tribe, or class, or community; safe always from anything degrading, they had hopes to rise, and no fear of being lowered in condition or in general estimation. In all these respects the Sepoy of the East-India Company compared his position with the soldiers of other services, and seeing its advantages, was content, and proud of the service to which he had bound himself, and in times of difficulty and disaster desertion was rare, and examples of devotion and life-sacrifice the rule, and things of ordinary occurrence.

Such has hitherto been the character of the native army of India, and especially of the Bengal Sepoy. The Government has placed implicit reliance on his fidelity, and the person of the Governor-General, and every treasury, and fort, and place of confinement, even for high political prisoners, has been confidently trusted to his exclusive guard.

Within the last few months all this has changed. Disaffection has shown itself in corps of every arm. Correspondence has been kept up by committees of the men of regiments unknown to their officers, and all being ripe for sedition, we have had to record mutinies and outbreaks for no cause, or on very slight provocation, when every possible excess of violence, crime, and bloodshed has been perpetrated without mercy, with the motive declared of throwing off allegiance, and, if possible, destroying the Government of the East-India Company.

There have been mutinies heretofore of our native troops; but in the Bengal army they have had their origin in reductions of pay or the denial of some benefits to which the Sepoy has conceived that he had a right, or in orders to march upon obnoxious service without adequate means being provided or made available. On all these occasions the Sepoys have taken their stand upon a supposed ground of right, and have separated from their officers, but respecting while disobeying them, and in no case doing them injury. The recent mutiny of the 19th N.I. at Berhampore partook of the same character; but the mutinies at Meerut and Delhi commenced with the murder of officers, and the 34th and other regiments near Calcutta seem to have conspired for the same bloody purpose, thus assimilating their revolt to that of Vellore. There are, indeed, many circumstances of similitude between the Meerut and Delhi outbreaks and the attempt of the Madras Sepoys to seize Vellore; but the resemblance fails in the want of the prompt energy of a Gillespie to tread out the fire before it spread. That incident, therefore, of our Indian military history will not be without use in the endeavour to trace the causes and account for the change which appears at this juncture to have come over the character of the Bengal Sepoy.

Most of those who write and talk upon this subject refer, primarily, to the paucity of officers with regiments, owing to the large drain occasioned by the levy of irregulars and by the necessity of providing from the army numerous functionaries for civil administration and for the surveys and public works in progress. There is no doubt that the discipline of regiments must have suffered greatly from this cause; but laxity of discipline will convert an army into a rabble, not into rebels. The disorders to which it would give rise are quite of a different character from those witnessed, and it would be wrong to jump hastily to the conclusion that this known deficiency will account for everything. We have upwards of 80,000 well-disciplined native troops, officered from the regular army, who are now the main stay of the Government for their fidelity, because of their separation in feeling, in organization, and in caste and class from that army. Without their aid, the few European troops available would have found it difficult, if not impossible, to act with effect against the mutineers. The result, therefore, proves the wisdom of forming this separate army, notwithstanding the effect upon the discipline of the regulars of withdrawing so many officers; unless, indeed, there be reason to believe that by retaining those officers on regimental duty we should have prevented the spread of disaffection, which, ascribing it as we do to other causes, we think cannot be maintained.

But there is undoubtedly a great change in the disposition and character of the officers, and especially in their relations and dealings with the men under their command. It is rare to find now the pure regimental officer, content with his position, knowing every man of his corps, consulted freely by them on matters of personal or family interest, and looking forward to pass his life amongst them until by the rise of seniority he shall obtain higher command, or retire with the competency assured by the conditions of his service. Since steam has brought England within a month's journey, the young officer thinks only of his home and the chances of furlough; and even when he has no prospect of obtaining staff or civil employment to draw him away, his heart is not with his regiment. Connection with native mistresses, also, which was the source of much association with natives, and a channel through which the superior officer might be influenced and approached, has almost entirely ceased, in consequence of the facilities of communication with Europe and the larger resort of European ladies to India. Thus, besides that there are fewer officers than heretofore with a regiment, those fewer live in a state of greater alienation from the men than they used to do. It is true that encouragement is given to mastering the languages of colloquial intercourse; but the mere ability to converse does not give the inducement, and the Sepoy feels that he belongs to a different and inferior race. The superiority of his officer he is used to, and can well bear; but not to think that he is contemned; and the hasty acts and injudicious speeches of indiscreet young men, dissatisfied with their own position and prospects, is not unlikely to have produced and aggravated this feeling.

All we have noticed, however, though it might produce alienation and a bad spirit in an army, would not suffice to account for the disaffection towards the Government which we see displayed. Lord Canning's proclamation shows that there is a general distrust of the character and intentions of the governing authorities in England as in India, and it has been issued to allay or correct this. The fact then being so, whence this distrust? Is it justified by any acts of the home or Indian Government? Why should it be felt so especially by the men who compose our native army in Bengal? These are, after all, the most important questions to be discussed and settled; and to these, therefore, we shall especially address ourselves.

The notion that has got abroad, and has been studiously propagated, is, that our Indian Government has departed from its ancient principles and traditions, and, no longer respecting the religion and customs of its subjects, intends, by direct and indirect means, to undermine and destroy both the Hindoo and Mahomedan religions, in order to bring the entire population of India to Christianity. This is believed to be the settled design and motive of all the recent measures to promote education, and of the social changes attempted to be effected by legislation,—such as the marriage of widows, the prohibition of polygamy, the prevention of suttee, the law to prevent inheritance from being affected by a change of religion, &c.

The conduct of the Government itself also, or of its members personally, in dealing with missionaries and in aiding proselyting establishments, is referred to as evidence of a great change of principle in the ruling authority; that is to say, from perfect toleration and respect towards the old institutions and creeds of India, to a designed and active aggression. Can any one lay his hand on his heart, and declare that such imputations are totally unfounded? Everybody sees and admits that the measures of the Government for the past twenty years have been directed towards the creation of a new state of things, a new condition of society; and the press, here as in India, has been loud in its congratulations on the spread of intelligence and the enlightenment of the youth of India which has resulted from these measures.

It is quite true that we have succeeded in educating some hundreds of the rising generation in Bengal in European science and literature, and these, being masters of the native press, have made themselves heard as if they were so many tens of thousands; so that a casual visitor and shallow observer of India is easily led to believe that the entire order of things there is undergoing a change, and members of the Government even, and high functionaries, have come to think that they are yielding to the spirit of the age, and following the progress of events, by sanctioning or instituting measures in aid of this change. But the proportion of the entire population of India affected by this new spirit is in reality not as one to ten thousand; nay, we may say, not as one to one hundred thousand, and those who have cast off the old leaven and put on the new are gathered together at the Presidency towns or great cities. Their influence in the interior is quite unfelt. And where is it that we find recruits for our army? There is not a regiment in the service that has ever enlisted a man at Calcutta, or in any city or large town. All are drawn from those especial classes who, living in villages, hold most strongly to the ancient caste-and-creed associations. There is not a Sepoy who has a spark of what is called European intelligence; and the Government has never sought to communicate its new enlightenment to its native soldiery, trusting rather to the principle of fidelity to the salt, so deeply rooted in the Indian mind under its old constitution, for assurance of faithful service, and of adaptation to the vocation in which that service has been required.

While, however, the Government was blindly following this ignis fatuus of enlightenment, and hoping to regenerate the country with European ideas, influences were at work to counteract and bring the new spirit into collision with the old. The youths educated with European notions, went back into their families completely dis-Hindooed. They derided the family worship, disregarded the observances of caste, and many of them openly committed the desecration of eating beef, and spreading their table with meat and wines, like Christians, while they disavowed belief in any religion. We doubt if any educated Hindoo has sincere faith in the creed and superstitions he professes; still very many look upon their position and credit as dependent on the status of things to which they were born: very many regard caste as an institution without which society could not be kept together. All the higher castes, too, enjoy especial benefits, which they will never voluntarily relinquish. There was thus a very general alarm felt at the new spirit displayed by the youth educated to European notions, and an association was formed in Calcutta about thirty years ago, called the Dhurma Subha, with the professed object of counteracting its influence. We know much less of the proceedings and working means of this society than we do of the talking and printing doings of the youths of the new school. We saw them subscribing to send an agent to England to appeal against the law passed for the abolition of suttee. We know their activity and earnestness in pursuit of their object to be great, and there has been much lately to excite apprehension and stimulate them to increased exertion. If in the Presidency towns and large cities the influence of old caste prejudices and associations is on the wane,—which we believe it really to be,—yet, in the ranks of our native army, caste feelings are still as strong as ever, and there the emissaries of the Dhurma Subha have found ready listeners, prepared to feel alarm at the measures of change in progress, and to believe imputations of motive, however gross and malevolent, when insinuated cleverly, against those who were producing and encouraging the changes so abhorred and feared.

But the Mahomedans, it will be said, have participated in the alienation and disaffection witnessed. They have not been tutored and misled by the Dhurma Subha. This is very true. They have other special grievances. The resumption measures,—the discontinuance of the use of Persian in the courts,—the attempted conversion of the Calcutta Madrisa, an institution founded by Warren Hastings to educate Moolavees, that is, doctors of Mahomedan law, into a common English school,—the striking off from that establishment of all officers whose service was religious, and the introduction of such tests and conditions of admission to public employment as have had the effect of excluding Mahomedans entirely from the courts and other public establishments,—these and many similar observed results of the new principles adopted by the ruling authorities are quite enough to account for the alienation of this part of the population. There needed very little perversion of representation to induce the Mahomedan Sepoy to believe, equally with the Hindoo, that the subversion of his religion also was the object and aim of the Government he was serving. The principle of fidelity to the Nimuk, however deeply rooted, was not proof against this new conviction.

But the reports maliciously spread, and which appear to have found too ready credence, are not confined to the charge of perseverance in the course of change observed and so much dreaded. It is stated to be generally believed that Lord Canning carried out specific instructions to compel the general profession of Christianity within two years, and that for this purpose his first object was to cause every one to be entrapped into an irreparable loss of caste. Rumours have been circulated that bullock's-blood had surreptitiously been mixed with the water of the principal tank from which the natives drink at Calcutta in the hot season, with this especial design; and the issue of the greased cartridge was declared to be part of the same settled scheme.

That such absurd reports should obtain credence from any one for a day, is one of many proofs of the little confidence felt, and of the low estimation in which the Government is now held. It is to be observed, that these malicious rumours bear against the home Government rather than against the local administration. The Indian authorities are supposed to be acting under specific instructions from England. What, then, can have occurred to give the people of India such an idea of their distant rulers?

Unfortunately, the proceedings of the past twenty years have afforded too much consecutive evidence of the vast influence and power of the Evangelical party in this country. Beginning with the agitation got up against the connection of the Bengal Government with Juggurnath, and ending with the petition of the Bengal missionaries for a commission to examine into every branch of the local administration, and the manner in which that petition was received and discussed by Parliament, no observer of the progress of events could fail to be convinced of the growing influence of this particular party, and the increasing deference paid to its views and wishes by all authorities. And how can it be otherwise, when the so-called liberal party are in power in this United Kingdom. There is not a member of that party who sits in the lower House who does not owe his seat to the votes of Dissenters and Wesleyans, who are ever ready to exact pledges, and refuse support to any one opposed to their proselyting views. There have also been several unusual occurrences in later years, which have been regarded as signs of the time; amongst these we must recall to notice Duleep Singh's profession of Christianity and the baptism of the daughter of the Rajah of Koorg, with the Queen of England and Chairman of the East-India Company for sponsors. The people of India have seen, too, very many instances of the same spirit in the functionaries, and even in the members, of the Indian Governments, which, connected with what they hear of England, they have come to regard as derivative from, and reflective of, the spirit that prevails at home. Thus, for a long time, society at Madras was divided publicly between the advocates of active measures to promote the spread of Christianity and those who adhered to the old traditions and ideas on this subject; and even in official correspondence the Hindoos were designated by the former as heathens. Only the other day, too, since the railway of that pre-cedency was opened, a party of Hindoos applied for a special train on a Sunday to proceed to some place of sanctity for the celebration of a festival. Instead of dealing with this question on the broad ground, whether special trains should or should not be allowed to run on Sundays, the members of that Government recorded minutes against giving encouragement, through the railway, to heathenism; and in our own Parliament, the special mission of England to bring all India to Christianity has been declared to be the settled conviction of no less a person than the Chairman of the East-India Company. Can we suppose that the increasing intelligence we have taken so much pains to promote in India has failed to note these signs of the times, and that the opponents of change have neglected to make use of them to spread alienation, and alarm, and disaffection as a means of preventing what they dread? The untutored minds of our native soldiery have been especially susceptible of such impressions, and we see the result at last in a general revolt against the Government, carried out by assassination, as the only means left of saving caste and creed, and maintaining the old religious feelings and institutions. The mischief has been done—the match has been lighted—how the fire is to be extinguished and confidence to be restored in the home and local Governments is the serious question to be considered.

In the events that have occurred since the first display of the mutinous spirit in the native soldiery, there has been much to be criticised, if not regretted. The disbanding of the 19th regiment, and the manner of it, were not calculated to correct the evil disposition known to prevail so generally. It would have been better to have accepted the offer of this regiment to serve in China. Its mutiny was pardonable, so long as no violence was done to the officers, and the dispersion by disbandment of a body of malcontents, to spread their grievances and invite other regiments to make common cause for their reparation or vengeance, was scarcely wise at the crisis. On the other hand, the mere disbandment of the 34th, when it was proved to have held secret correspondence to propagate sedition and disaffection, and when the regiment had allowed its adjutant to be shot at and cut down in front of its lines and in presence of a guard of its men, was weakness of equally bad influence. But worst of all was the sentence of ten years' imprisonment, with labour in irons, passed upon eighty-five men of the 3rd Native Cavalry at Meerut, a sentence calculated to drive the rest of the regiment to desperation, and which evidently was the immediate cause of their running a muck and taking the lead in assassination and revolt. These acts, however, though in our opinion failures of discretion, were not causes of the mischief; and it was by no means an easy thing to determine how to deal with the mutinous spirit on its first display, and when it was quite uncertain how far it might be participated by other regiments.

But, leaving this part of the subject, let us look rather to the future, and inquire what can be done to restore things to the old condition of peace, and mutual trust and confidence. The idea that there is a settled determination to act aggressively against the caste and creed of our troops must, by some means, be eradicated. The proclamation of the Governor-General will not suffice for this. Some guarantees must also be given from this country whence the new spirit is supposed to have emanated; and if a commencement were made in Parliament it would be wise, and of the best possible effect; for the eyes of India are now especially turned to what passes there. But at any rate the proselyting spirit must be eradicated from the counsels of our Governments at home and abroad; it must be excluded from high places and authority, and most especially from the Military Secretariat of the Supreme Government.

Efforts will be made to withdraw attention from the cause given to Hindoos and to our native soldiery to apprehend aggression upon their caste and creed. The disaffection and mutiny will be ascribed to everything else rather than to such apprehensions. The centralization of power to the damage of the influence of commanding officers, the license and indulgences of the Afghan and Sikh wars, and the influence of these upon discipline; the contamination of Sikh example—all Runjeet's corps having massacred their officers and successfully seized the government in the Punjab,—all these and many other things will be prominently put forth and argued upon as sources of the bad spirit of which we are daily witnessing such deplorable results. But the people of England must not be hoodwinked or deceived. Let them believe their Governor-General rather than those who have contributed to the mischief and have a motive to mislead. He has felt that the Government has lost the good opinion and confidence of its subjects upon the ground of caste and religion, and that it is necessary to do something to re-establish faith and credit in its designs and motives. The same thing must be done, as a first measure, from this country.

CORRESPONDENCE. STAFF APPOINTMENTS.

TO THE EDITOR OF ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

SIR.—The General Order of the Government of India, of the 9th April last (republished in your number of the 2nd inst.), in which an increased participation in staff and other military appointments in India is authorised for officers of Her Majesty's service, is one the importance of which it would be difficult to overrate.

The want of cordiality of feeling that unfortunately too notoriously exists, both in India and at home, between the regimental officers of the Royal army and those of the Company's service is much to be regretted.

Up to a recent period, the Company's officer in India could afford to disregard any claim to superiority foolishly assumed by Her Majesty's regimental officers. The fact that the latter were excluded from all the best and most lucrative appointments obtainable in India, not only accounted for any bad feeling that might exist on their part, but went far to excuse it, due allowance being made for the weakness of human nature; and any advantages which the Company's officer possessed over his Royal comrade, east of the Cape, was more than counterbalanced by his finding, on returning to his own country, that his military character received no recognition but such as a somewhat niggardly courtesy extended to him.

The position of both services was, in fact, an anomaly. Undoubtedly, primâ facie, the Company's officer, whose lot is cast, "for better for worse," in India,—who gives up home, kindred, and country, to devote his best energies, and the best years of his life, to the service of his Sovereign in a distant and unhealthy clime; and who has, moreover, no power of returning to his native land (while health endures), unless he abandons all hope for the future, and all reward for the past, is clearly entitled to some local advantages over the Queen's officer, whose period of service in India is generally limited, or at least limitable, owing to the facility of exchanging into some regiment at home, if distaste to the climate or home sickness so incline him. But, at the same time, those of Her Majesty's officers (and there are many such) who spend their lives in India, and devote themselves exclusively to Indian service, with some reason, till now, complained that neither length of service, nor talent, nor zeal in their profession, procured them the rewards so lavishly bestowed on Company's officers.

The Company's officer might, on the one hand, return to his country, after 30 years' service, covered with wounds and glory, to find his rank ignored, and his services depreciated by the youngest sub. in H.M.'s Brigade of Guards; and the Queen's officer, on the other hand, who remained in India, a victim to present liver complaint, and exposed to paulo-post future cholera, saw the E.I.Co.'s subs. of 3 years' standing carry off what he would have viewed as some compensation for arduous service and long expatriation.

The recent order from the Horse Guards, adjusting the relative rank of Queen's and Company's officers out of India, has partly removed a crying injustice as regards Company's officers at home; and the order by the Government of India, of the 9th April last, will place the Queen's officer in his proper position in India.

So far, Mr. Editor, two "steps" have been taken in the "right direction;" but I would beg to urge on the authorities that the benefit is not equal to the two services, inasmuch as the boon conceded to the Queen's officers takes away whatever benefit it confers on them, from the Company's officers, who, of course, are pro tanto injured in the number and value of the appointments for which they alone before were eligible. The concession of nominal and honorary European rank to the Company's officers is no injury to those of H.M.'s service, but the irruption of some 600 fresh candidates into the arena of competition for staff employ in India, is a decided injury to the service from which hitherto the appointments to be conferred were exclusively filled.

I do not mention this as an argument against the concession, thus, as I conceive, equitably made; but if the principle be admitted, let the equality be, as far as possible, complete. If the Queen's officer be allowed to share the prizes as well as the hardships of Indian service, let the Company's officer also feel that, like him, he is at home a soldier in fact and in deed, as well as in name,—that there is no attempt to place him on a lower scale, and that his efficiency and qualifications will be admitted and appreciated whenever his services may be required by the sovereign whose commission he also bears.

I am, Sir, no "fusionist." I am not advocating the amalgamation of the two services. There may be much to be said in favour of such a step, as there undoubtedly is, in my humble judgment, against it. But unity is not of necessity identity. Let the two services co-exist, distinct in character, but united in feelings, sympathies, and interests. Let the gallant officers of the Queen's service enjoy all the advantages and peculiar privileges they possess; let them not, however, seek, in the eyes of their countrymen at home, to arrogate to themselves exclusively the designation and characteristics of officers of the "British army." Were the Government to carry out the principle they have in part conceded, and not only to recognise the military character, but also the capability for duty at home (when required) of the Company's officers on full pay, we should, perhaps, hear no more sneers regarding "Indian officers," and possibly the members of the "Army and Navy Club" would not deem it essential to their character and dignity to ignore the claims and pretensions of those who, in social position, in intellectual acquirements, in professional knowledge, and in distinguished services, are in every respect their equals.

I remain, Sir, your obedient servant,

11th June, 1857.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT. HOUSE OF LORDS, JUNE 29.

THE MUTINY OF THE INDIAN TROOPS.

A question was put to the Government by the Earl of Ellenborough with respect to the measures which they intended to take for the purpose of averting the calamity with which they were threatened in India.

Earl Granville replied that it would be wiser and fairer for the Government to give no opinion whatever until the whole of the facts respecting the events at Meerut could be ascertained. There was no doubt that they could not act too decidedly at this moment, but the real difficulty was to ascertain the extent to which the disaffection had gone, and where it was likely to break out. From the colonels of all the regiments that appeared to have been disaffected, the most confident assurances were received by the Government in India that the troops might be thoroughly relied upon. General Anson's troops were met by the European troops coming from Meerut, and by parties of native princes, who had shown on this occasion a most laudable desire to co-operate with her Majesty's forces. In answer to the question about reinforcements, he begged to state that about 10,000 men had been ordered to India, partly composed of four Queen's regiments, and partly composed of reinforcements to the regiments of India, belonging to the Queen's and Company's services; and since the last news had arrived, four regiments more (after communicating with the Directors) had been put under orders to embark. In India the Governor-General had used every precaution, and had called troops to Calcutta, not for the defence of the capital, for about that he felt confident, but for the purpose of sending them to the points where they were most required. He could not go into a detailed account of the measures which the Government might think it necessary to take to strengthen themselves at home.

They would take the steps that were necessary, but would not adopt them in a spirit of exaggerated alarm.

Lord Brougham asked for information respecting the effect produced on the money market in Calcutta through means of the events that had occurred.

Earl Granville.—While the funds in this country have fallen, the Government paper in Calcutta and Bombay has remained at the same rate.

The Earl of Hardwicke asked if it was likely that the Emperor of the French would permit the passage of British troops through France en route to India. In the course of his life he did not recollect a more formidable case, and he suggested that 15,000 or 20,000 men at Aldershot should be transferred to India.

The Earl of Albemarle thought that religion had nothing to do with the outbreak, which he attributed to the practice of recruiting the army of Bengal from the high-caste natives, and to the system of centralisation, which was shaking their Indian empire to its very centre.

Earl Granville submitted that it would be more regular not to go into questions of that kind.

JULY 3.

Earl Granville, in reply to Lord Ellenborough, stated that the recent reduction in the rate of exchange on India announced by the Directors of the East-India Company was merely an ordinary commercial operation. The noble earl also stated that the Governor-General was in possession of ample funds to meet the present emergency.

JULY 6.

THE EAST-INDIA COMPANY'S CIVIL SERVICE.

The Marquis of Clanricarde moved for a return of the number of officers, civil and military, belonging to and employed in the civil service of the East-India Company, distinguishing those of the covenanted from the uncovenanted service, and in receipt of not less than £400 a year salary, on the 1st January, 1846; and a similar return for 1st of January, 1856. Returns granted.

JULY 13.

The Earl of Ellenborough renewed his inquiries regarding the spread of the sepoy mutinies, and was answered by Earl Granville, to the effect that the Government had no information to afford on the subject at the present moment beyond what was already publicly known.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, JUNE 30.

THE MUTINY IN INDIA.

Mr. Disraeli put a question to the Government relative to the present state of our Indian empire. He thought the House had a right to expect from her Majesty's Government that they should tell the House what was the cause of these great disasters, and not only what was the main cause of the calamitous events, but whether they had been forewarned; whether the cause was political or religious; whether they originated in the maladministration of officials or in a sudden outbreak of fanaticism; whether the civil authority in India and the military authority were of accord; and, lastly, whether the Governor-General had resigned his office.

Mr. V. Smith, premising that no one could feel surprise at the question put by Mr. Disraeli, said that her Majesty's Government had determined immediately to send out a reinforcement of European troops to India; in the middle of next month nearly 10,000 men would be sent, and the Court of Directors had applied for 4,000 more. This was a measure of security, for he denied that our empire in India was imperilled by disasters. Everything that could be done was doing in India; he had no doubt that the mutiny would be put down by force, and he hoped that the next mail would announce that ample retribution had been taken upon the mutineers. As to the cause of the disaffection, he had more difficulty; but the question would undergo the closest investigation by the Indian Government. He knew nothing of any difference between the Governor-General of India and the Commander-in-Chief, and had no reason to believe that there was any material difference of opinion between them. He gave a flat denial to the report of the resignation of the Governor-General, who, he predicted, would prove himself, equal to the occasion.

JULY 10.

REINFORCEMENTS FOR INDIA AND CHINA.

Sir J. Pakington put the following questions to the first lord of the Admiralty:—Whether any recent intelligence had been received as to the position and proceedings of her Majesty's forces in China; whether her Majesty's Government had sent out any instructions empowering the Indian Government to divert from their destination the troops which had been sent from this country to China and employ them in India? If no such instructions had been sent, whether it was true that the Governor-General of India had, of his own authority, acting under the pressure of events in that country, sent orders to Ceylon that the forces sent from this country to China were, on their arrival at Ceylon, to proceed to India; and whether her Majesty's Government were prepared to state, in the event of its being intended that the troops sent to China should be immediately employed in India, what course they proposed to take for strengthening the British forces in China?

Sir C. Wood replied that no instructions had been sent out empowering the Indian Government to divert from their destination the reinforcements intended for China. It was known, however, to her Majesty's Government that the Governor-General had written to Lord Elgin, asking his lordship if he acquiesced in the propriety of the arrangement to divert the destination of these troops.

RETURN OF OFFICERS TO INDIA.

Mr. Noel begged to ask the Under-Secretary for War whether the Government would give to those of her Majesty's officers who were ordered to rejoin their regiments in India before the expiration of their leave, on account of the mutiny in that country, a free passage, or whether they would be compelled to return there at their own expense?

Sir J. Ramsden said the point to which the hon. gentleman alluded at this moment formed the subject of communication between the War Department and the India Board.

Sir H. Verney asked, if a free passage were given to the officers of the royal army, whether the same privilege would not also be extended to the officers of the Indian army?

Capt. Vivian asked the President of the Board of Control whether it was the intention of her Majesty's Government to send the troops which were about to embark for India in sailing ships?

Mr. V. Smith said, as arrangements had been made for sending out nearly 10,000 men as reliefs or recruits, previous to the receipt of the intelligence from India, in sailing vessels, and as those arrangements had all been perfected, those troops would proceed to their destination in the way originally intended. With regard to the additional 4,000 men asked for by the East-India Company in consequence of the intelligence from India, the arrangement was that 2,000 should proceed in screw steamers, and the other 2,000 in sailing vessels. The Government had anxiously considered the manner in which the troops would be best and most rapidly conveyed, and as many persons were of opinion that at this particular season of the year sailing vessels would be even swifter than screw steamers, the arrangements which he had mentioned had been adopted. It would probably create some rivalry between the two descriptions of vessels, and would induce them both to use the utmost despatch. All the vessels would depart between the 21st and 29th of the present month, and he hoped that they would be able to accomplish the voyage in seventy days.

Sir C. Napier regretted that that the whole 4,000 men were not to be sent out in steamers because it was absurd to suppose that sailing vessels could perform the voyage so quickly as steamers.

JULY 7.

THE SUEZ CANAL.

Lord Palmerston said, in reply to an inquiry made by Mr. H. Berkeley, that H.M.'s Government could not undertake to use its influence with the Sultan in support of an application by the Viceroy of Egypt for the sanction of the Sublime Porte to the construction of a ship canal across the isthmus of Suez. He believed that the scheme was physically impracticable and politically objectionable.

THE BENGAL MILITARY FUND.

Lord Elcho, who had a motion on the paper respecting the Bengal Military Fund, said he would withdraw it at the request of the Bengal military officers, who did not wish to urge their own grievances at the present moment of Indian difficulty.

Mr. Vernon Smith and Mr. Mangles expressed their sense of the patriotism of the Bengal officers in withdrawing their claims at the present moment, and assured Lord Elcho that their forbearance would not be allowed to prejudice their claims.

JULY 8.

THE PERSIAN AND CHINESE WARS.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer presented estimates amounting to £500,000 for the expenses of the Persian war, and £500,000 towards the naval and military operations in China, and moved that they be referred to a committee of supply. Motion agreed to.

JULY 13.

Mr. Disraeli renewed his inquiries regarding the spread of the sepoy insurrection in Bengal, and was answered by Lord Palmerston, to the effect that the Government could at present afford no further information on the subject to that which was already publicly known.

THE QUEEN OF OUDE.—Her Majesty accorded the favour of a private audience on the 24th inst. to the Queen Mother of Oude and the two princes, the heir apparent and his uncle.

THE LATE COLONEL FINNIS.—A Court of Common Council was held on Wednesday last, the Lord Mayor presiding, when a resolution of condolence with the Lord Mayor on the death of his brother, Colonel Finnis, who was killed at Meerut by the sepoys, was unanimously adopted.

CAPT. H. B. LYNCH.—The Shah of Persia has conferred the honour of the Order of the Lion and Sun, with the title of Khan, upon Capt. H. B. Lynch, c.b., in token of his regard for the manner in which Capt. Lynch brought about the treaty of peace between this country and Persia.

KNIGHTHOOD OF GENERAL HEARSEY.—War Office, July 4.—The Queen has been graciously pleased to make and ordain a special statute of the Most Honourable Order of the Bath for the appointment of the undermentioned officer in the East-India Company's service to be an extra member of the military division of the second class, or Knights Commanders, of the said Most Honourable Order, viz., Major-Gen. John Bennett Hearsey, c.b., Col. of the 6th regt. of Bengal light cavalry.

KNIGHTHOOD OF THE COLONIAL SECRETARY OF CEYLON.—Whitehall, July 10.—The Queen has been pleased to direct letters patent to be passed under the Great Seal, granting the dignity of a Knight of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland unto Charles Justin MacCarthy, Esq., Colonial Secretary for the Island of Ceylon.

CONSULAR APPOINTMENTS.—Foreign Office, July 7.—The Queen has been pleased to approve of Mr. H. R. Vander Spar as Consul at Point de Galle in the island of Ceylon for H.M. the King of the Netherlands.

BOOKS.

Rig-veda. Text and Comment. Edited by Professor Max Müller. 4to. Vol. III.

Ancient Hymns of the Hindus. Translated from the Rig-veda by Professor H. H. Wilson. 8vo. Vol. III.

THE third volume of the text of the Rig-veda, edited by Professor Müller, and of the translation, by Professor Wilson, have now brought the work through one-half of its extent: the remaining portion of the text, we understand, is not likely to occupy the same space; as the scholia become more concise the translation will of course be much the same.

The present volume bears the same general character as those which have preceded. Agni and Indra are the deities principally addressed, being the divinities of 176 hymns out of 262, the contents of the two books, or Ashtakas, now published, or about two-thirds of the whole; the remainder are distributed in unequal proportions amongst a variety of subordinate deifications, most of which, however, are of a like elemental character, as the Maruts, or winds, the sun, the dawn, the Aswins, or harbingers of light, and similar personifications; one or two are of a more humble origin, as one which is addressed to the cows, and one to the farmer and the implements of tillage.

The topics of the hymns are, as before, praise and prayer, laudation of the power and beneficence of the deities worshipped, and solicitation for worldly benefits,—food, rain, cattle, horses, riches, and posterity; and it is worthy of remark, that the latter is always masculine, whether the term be tanaya, toka, or, still more frequently, vira, the Latin vir, man. It must be confessed, that as the divinities so repeatedly hymned are characterized by the same attributes, and the desires of the supplicant are of the same tendency, there is a rather wearisome amount of repetition, both of ideas and expressions; still they are both diversified in a very remarkable manner, considering the circumscribed range in which they revolve, and intimate the extraordinary copiousness of the original language.

The light which the hymns of the third and fourth Ashtakas reflect upon the social condition of the Hindus at the period when these hymns were composed is less vivid perhaps than in the two preceding sections; but it is sufficiently in harmony with what has preceded to show that the Hindus at this remote date, at least fourteen or fifteen centuries prior to Christianity, had made a great advance in civilization, had a regular form of government and a code of laws, and were familiar with the occupations of civilized life, agriculture, manufactures, and trade. They must have cultivated, also, to some extent, the destructive arts of war, if we are to credit the assertions that on one occasion 30,000, and on another 50,000, of their enemies were slain in battle.

The same silence prevails in regard to the deities, and practices, and belief of the present day that has been remarked in the preceding books. We have no notice, not even a hint of such objects of worship as Siva, Durgā, the Linga, Krishna, or Govinda,—we have no precise indication of the distinctions of caste, although five orders of men are spoken of. The term Sūdra has never occurred; Vis, although sometimes identified with Vaisya, has not that sense exclusively; Kshatriya is very rarely met with, and perhaps signifies a raja, not a man of the military order; and although Brahman is frequent enough, yet it indicates in general only one of the priests employed at a sacrifice, and never denotes a semi deified member of a priestly community, such as is described by Manu. Although we find occasionally expressed a wish to be raised after death to Swarga, there is no very clear expression of what is meant by the term; and there is no allusion whatever to the great object of Hindu speculation, the doctrine of transmigration. In short, the portion of the Rig-veda now published continues to present a picture of Hindu institutions and belief very dissimilar to their present aspect. Where the hymns are so much alike it is difficult to make a selection, but the following may be taken as specimens of the hymns addressed to Agni and to Indra,—Sukta 13, page 239, &c. :—

TO AGNI.

1. Adoring thee, Agni, we invoke thee: adoring thee, we kindle thee, invoking thee for protection.
2. Desirous of wealth, we recite to-day the effectual praise of the divine Agni, whose radiance reaches the sky.
3. May Agni, who, amongst men, is the invoker of the gods, accept our praises; may he offer sacrifices to the divine beings.
4. Thou, Agni, art mighty and gracious; the ministrant priest, the desired of all: through thee the worshippers complete the sacrifice.
5. Wise worshippers exalt thee, Agni, the bountiful giver of food, the deservedly lauded: do thou bestow upon us surpassing strength.
6. Agni, thou encompassst the gods as the circumference surrounds the spokes of a wheel: bestow manifold wealth upon us.

Sukta 20, p. 159 :—

1. May the illustrious Indra, the granter of desires, come to us, whether from afar or nigh, for our protection: he who is the lord of men, armed with the thunderbolt; overcoming his foes in conflict and in combats, attended by the most illustrious Maruts.
2. May Indra, looking down upon us, come with his steeds to our presence for our protection and enrichment: may the mighty thunderer, the possessor of wealth, aiding us in battle, be present at this our sacrifice.
3. Thou, Indra, placing us before thee, shalt receive this sacrifice, our holy offering; and as the hunter kills his game, so may we, thy worshippers, holder of the thunderbolt, for the acquirement of riches, through thee, be victorious in battle.
4. Indra, the giver of food, be near to us favourably disposed; and anxious for our good, drink of the effused, prepared, exhilarating soma, and be pleased with the sacrificial food offered with the noon-day hymn.
5. Like a man boasting of his wife, I glorify that Indra who is invoked of many, who is hymned by recent sages, who is like a tree loaded with ripe fruit, like a victorious warrior skilful in arms.
7. Glorified in the past, glorified Indra at present, satisfy thy worshippers with food, as rivers are filled with water: lord of horses, a new hymn has been made for thee: may we, possessed of chariots, be ever delighted in thy praise.

Portions of the hymns consisting of three stanzas are sometimes considered as complete in themselves, and are recited on various occasions detached from the Sukta in which they are found; one of these, in Sukta 9, p. 109, begins with what has been termed the holiest verse of the Vedas, called Gayatrī, from the metre in which it is written, or Sāvitrī, from its being addressed to Savitrī, the sun. It commences, after certain mystical monosyllables, as—Om, bhur, bhuvar, swar—the daily morning prayer of the Brahman to the present day—and is, “We meditate on the desirable light of the divine Savitrī, who influences our pious rites.” It is, however, variously interpreted, and has been cited by both Sir Wm. Jones and Mr. Colebrooke as generally understood to indicate the doctrine of the Vedānta—the unity of the Creator: the light of the divine Savitrī being interpreted the knowledge of the supreme spirit. That it is so understood is undeniable; but it may be reasonably doubted if the original author of this text, or of any other in the Vedas, had any distinct conception of a great first cause—the creator and ruler of the universe.

India and Europe compared. By LIEUT.-GEN. JOHN BRIGGS, F.R.S., of the Madras Army. London: Wm. H. Allen and Co.

THIS unpretending little volume is a valuable and opportune addition to Anglo-Indian literature. Its professed object is to convey to English readers a correct, though popular, view of the present state and future prospects of our Eastern empire. Under existing circumstances such a work could not be otherwise than useful and interesting, had it even been compiled by an unpractised pen. Its value, however, is greatly enhanced by bearing the impress of General Briggs' local experience and extensive information. Within a brief compass we are presented with a careful epitome of the political, military, and social condition of continental India, and are taught to appreciate its vast importance. Perhaps at the present moment the most generally interesting chapter is that which treats of the military resources of the Indian Government. From this it appears that the armies of the three Presidencies consist of 51,316 Europeans of all arms, and 230,904 natives, besides contingent forces amounting to 32,300 men commanded by European officers. This imposing force is maintained at an annual charge of 9,802,235*l.*, of which more than one-half is absorbed by the European portion of the army. Owing to the unhealthiness of the climate it becomes necessary to send out every year between four and five thousand men to supply the casualties by death and invaliding; and it is estimated that every European soldier costs 100*l.* before he joins his regiment in the East. It must be acknowledged that this is a matter for serious reflection at a time when members of the Legislature propose to double the European army, for which purpose the amount at present assigned for the maintenance of the entire forces in India would prove insufficient. Fortunately, there is yet another alternative. General Briggs is of opinion that recruits might readily be obtained from the aboriginal races, whom it has been too much the custom to slight of late years. In the olden time these were the men who opposed Hyder Ally and won the battle of Plassey. Under Lawrence, Clive, Coote, and Lake the majority of the sepoys belonged to the indigenes, who ever proved themselves brave and loyal soldiers. Nearly one-tenth of the population of India, or about sixteen millions of people, are descended from the original occupiers of the soil. They are described as being "remarkable for their courage, fidelity, and veracity, wherever they acknowledge fealty," and as being traceable by physiognomy and philology to the Scythian branch of the human race. On the conquest of India by the Hindus the aborigines were reduced to agrestic slavery, and on the formation of the village municipalities were embodied as the rural police. In our own times, when a new police force was organized in Bengal, these men, being deprived of their hereditary means of livelihood, formed themselves into bands of Dacoits, or gang-robbers, and became a pest to society and a disgrace to our Government. In some of the hill districts the indigenes were never subdued either by the Hindus or the Mahomedans; but preserved their independence, made forays into the plains, and levied black-mail on all who attempted to pass through their mountain fastnesses. Being free from all prejudices of caste, they would not be liable to the fanatical impulses that so frequently agitate our Hindu and Mussulman soldiery. Their religion is the worship of power in every form that may affect the happiness or misery of mankind, and consequently they would be little likely to reject the deity of the energetic and all-conquering Feringhee. The suggestion is at least worthy of consideration.

Of the native officers General Briggs speaks disparagingly, but, we fear, with only too much truth:—

The native officer of the regular army of the present day enters as a private, to serve for life, on a rate of pay equal to about 5*sd.* per diem. He is derived from that class of society which is uneducated; and when raised to the highest grade he can attain—that of an officer of a company—he is found rarely able to read or write tolerably, and in many cases, unable to sign his name to an acquittance-roll. According to a very equitable principle, preference in promotion is directed to be given to the oldest soldier, excepting on special occasions. Hence it is that the superior native officer seldom attains his rank before it is time for him to retire from active service. His antecedent life in the barracks precludes him from commanding that respect, obedience, and, above all, that attachment from his inferiors which is due to the well-educated European officer, deriving his origin from a class of society in his own country altogether different from that of the native officer. In all instances of discontent, and even of mutiny, the native officer is ever found to sympathise with the men; and although seldom directly implicated so as to be open to punishment as an accomplice, it is very rare that he exercises his influence in the regiment to maintain its discipline, or support the European officers.

The chapters on the Financial Resources, Commerce, Public Works, and the Local Government of India, are also worthy of attention.

LADY FALKLAND'S NEW WORK.

Now ready, in 2 vols. 8vo., with Illustrations, 30s.,

CHOW-CHOW;

BEING SELECTIONS FROM A JOURNAL KEPT IN INDIA, EGYPT, AND SYRIA.

BY THE VISCOUNTESS FALKLAND.

"The narrative of Lady Falkland's experience of India and Indian life during her husband's government of Bombay is a light, lively, and agreeable work. Lady Falkland's position gave her advantageous opportunities of gathering the best information on any subject that attracted her. Her pictures are fresh and pleasant."—Spectator.

THACKER'S OVERLAND NEWS,
FOR INDIA AND THE COLONIES;

A fortnightly Summary of British and Foreign Intelligence, published on the 10th and 20th of each month, in time for despatch to India via Marseilles. One uniform system is preserved throughout the Paper, and the information is so epitomized and arranged as to present a perfect and comprehensive view of the history of the fortnight, with special reference to those subjects most interesting to Anglo-Indians.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

THE CALCUTTA "ENGLISHMAN."

"Pains have been taken with the arrangement. It is evidently got up with a knowledge of what information Indian readers require, and will therefore, we expect, soon attain a considerable circulation."

THE CALCUTTA "DAILY NEWS."

"Fully bears out the assurance given in the prospectus that it should 'be all that the Overland Papers are, and something more.' We do not think that a single item of news or fact of interest which had transpired during the fortnight can possibly have been omitted, and the power of condensation displayed in this Paper is much beyond what we had expected."

"THE MOPUSSILITE."

"It is well written, and carefully compiled. It is not so diffuse in its information as the 'Home News,' and does not reprint long articles from the London journals; but it will probably not be the less acceptable on this account to a large portion of the public."

"BENGAL HURKAHU."

"We gladly pronounce this first number an extremely good one, and we think the periodical is full of promise of something still better. The Editor has contrived to condense into a comparatively small space a vast quantity of miscellaneous information, of a character interesting to his readers here. This superior condensation of his materials is perhaps the leading character of the Newspaper,—and a very important one it is, especially for those Indian readers who may receive this one London Paper only."

Orders to be addressed to Messrs. W. THACKER and Co., 87, Newgate Street, London; Messrs. THACKER, SPINK, and Co., St. Andrew's Library, Calcutta; Messrs. THACKER and Co., St. Andrew's Library, Bombay; and Mr. JAMES HILL, Lucknow.

TALLANGETTA, the SQUATTER'S HOME: a Story of Australian Life. By WILLIAM HOWITT, Author of "Two Years in Victoria," &c.

London: LONGMAN, BROWN, and Co.

INDIA.—Gentlemen expecting Appointments in the East-India Company's Cavalry, Artillery, Infantry, or Medical Service, are respectfully informed that, on application to Messrs. CHRISTIAN, they will be furnished with carefully prepared ESTIMATES, showing the whole cost of outfit and passage via the Cape or Egypt, without the necessity of employing an agent, which will be found desirable to those who study economy.
 11, WIGMORE STREET.—ESTABLISHED 1792.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS famed for the cure of Liver Complaints and derangement of the Stomach, the Liver being justly esteemed the noblest part of the body and fountain of life. Thus it is, when the springs become poisoned, life itself is threatened, and the suffering patient is in the most imminent danger; but thousands have borne willing testimony to the power of this potent remedy,—cleansing the blood from all impurities, strengthening the stomach, discharging the bile, removing all obstructions, and eradicating disease without leaving a trace behind.

Sold by all Medicine Vendors, at Messrs. HOLLOWAY'S Establishments, 244, Strand, London, and 80, Maiden Lane, New York; by A. Stampas, Constantinople; A. Guidry, Cayenne; E. Muir, Malta; and by all European and Native Vendors of Medicine throughout the whole of the East Indies.

TO LATE RESIDENTS IN INDIA.—TRUE MADRAS CURRY, and MULLIGATAWNEY PASTE and CHUTNIB.—Messrs. BARRIE and Co., Vepery, Madras, to enable their old correspondents returning from India to continue the use of the celebrated Condiments, have made arrangements to forward regular supplies of the above, packed in glass jars for family use, at 1s. 9d. and upwards, which may be had of CROSSE and BLACKWELL, Purveyors to Her Majesty, 21, Soho Square; FORTNUM, MASON, and Co., Piccadilly; and of the principal Sauce Vendors throughout the kingdom. Each bottle is labelled, and BARRIE and Co., Madras, stamped on the glass.

PAYNE'S INDIAN CURRY POWDER, unequalled for its delicious flavour and stimulating qualities, 1 lb. bottles, 3s. 6d.; 7 for 21s. Curry and Mulligatawney Paste—1 lb. jars, 3s. 6d.; 7 for 21s. The following Condiments and Preserves are imported direct, and strongly recommended:—Indian Curry Sauce and Taponian Sauce, Fine Pickled Mangoes, Tamarind Fish, Nepaul Chilly, Green Mango Chutney, Bengal Club, Cashmere, Delhi, and Oesle. Preserved Mango, Golden Apple, Limes, Green Sweetmeats. —PAYNE and SONS, Foreign Warehouse, 328, Regent Street, and 46, Mortimer Street, London.

TOURISTS and TRAVELLERS, exposed to the scorching rays of the Sun and heated particles of Dust, will find ROWLANDS' KALYDOR a most refreshing preparation for the complexion, dispelling the cloud of languor and relaxation, allaying all heat and irritability, and immediately affording the pleasing sensation attending restored elasticity and healthful state of the Skin. Freckles, Tan, Spots, Pimples, Flushes, and Discolorations fly before its application, and give place to delicate clearness, with the glow of beauty and of bloom. In cases of Sunburn, or Stings of Insects, its virtues have long been acknowledged. Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle.

The heat of summer also frequently communicates a dryness to the hair, and a tendency to fall off, which may be completely obviated by the use of ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL, a delightfully fragrant and transparent preparation, and, as an invigorator and purifier of the hair, beyond all precedent.

Nor at this season can we be too careful to preserve the teeth from the deleterious effects of vegetable acids (the immediate cause of tooth-ache), by a systematic employment, night and morning, of ROWLANDS' ODONTO, or Pearl Dentifrice, a white powder, compounded of the rarest and most fragrant exotics. It bestows on the teeth a pearl-like whiteness, frees them from tartar, and imparts to the gums a healthy firmness, and to the breath a grateful sweetness and purity.—Price 3s. 9d. per box.

Sold by A. ROWLAND and SONS, 26, Hatton Garden, London, and by Chemists and Perfumers.

WATCH, CLOCK, AND CHRONOMETER MANUFACTORY,
 33 and 34, LUDGATE HILL, LONDON. ESTABLISHED 1740.

J. W. BENSON, MANUFACTURER OF GOLD AND SILVER WATCHES of every description, construction, and pattern, invites attention to his magnificent and unprecedented display of Watches, which is admitted to be the largest and best selected Stock in London. It consists of Chronometers, Duplex, Patent Detached Lever, Horizontal, and Vertical Movements, Jewelled, &c., with all the latest improvements, mounted in superbly-finished engine-turned and engraved Gold and Silver Cases. The designs engraved upon many of the cases are by eminent artists, and can only be obtained at this manufactory. If the important requisites, superiority of finish, combined with accuracy of performance, elegance, durability, and reasonableness of price, are wished for, the intending purchaser should visit this Manufactory, or send for the ILLUSTRATED PAMPHLET, published by J. W. BENSON (and sent post-free on application), which contains sketches, prices, and directions as to what Watch to buy, where to buy it, and how to use it. Several hundred letters have been received from persons who have bought Watches at this Manufactory, bearing testimony to the correct performance of the same. The following extracts from the opinions of the Press will, it is hoped, be a sufficient guarantee to the public that they may secure at this House a good Watch at a reasonable price:—

HANWELL COLLEGE, MIDDLESEX.
SEVEN MILES FROM LONDON.

INDIA AND THE COLONIES.

The increasing importance of the cultivation of the LANGUAGES of the EAST, and the immediate advantages that result from their acquisition, have induced the Principal to make arrangements for affording INSTRUCTION therein.

The rudiments of Hindustani, Persian, and Arabic, will be taught to all who are intended for employment in our Eastern Possessions; and the more advanced Pupils will be prepared for their examination on their arrival in India.

The course of instruction includes not only that which is necessary to pass at Addiscombe or Haileybury, but all that may be requisite for those who are destined to pursue an Indian career.

The history and geography of the country, and the general features of Anglo-Indian life, are taught by a gentleman whose perfect acquaintance with India, from long residence there, peculiarly qualifies him for the duties he has undertaken.

The great advantage to Parents in India of an Institution of this kind must be evident. At a short distance from London, in a proverbially healthy locality, they may place their children from an EARLY AGE under a system from which there need be no departure until their education is completely finished; a class being expressly formed for the matriculation at the University of London, wherein they may matriculate at sixteen years of age, and graduate two years after that time.

Prospectuses, with full particulars, may be had on application to the Rev. J. A. EMERTON, D.D., Hanwell College, Middlesex.
